PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE SIXTY-FOURTH CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 4, 1916.

(Continuation of legislative day of Thursday, February 3, 1916.)

The Senate reassembled at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. CHILTON. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. GOFF] on account of illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

DESTRUCTION OF PARLIAMENT BUILDING AT OTTAWA.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to introduce and have read the following resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 92), as follows:

Whereas the Parliament Building of the Dominion of Canada, one of the most expensive and beautiful architectural ornaments upon the North American Continent, has been reduced to ashes by an act of deliberately planned incendiarism; and

Whereas the destruction of public buildings dedicated to the purposes of civil administration is wanton, barbarous, and in conflict with every principle of enlightened justice: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That the destruction of the Parliament Building of the Dominion of Canada is condemned as an unpardonable crime against civilization.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I ask the Senator introducing the resolution if he has conclusive proof that that catastrophe was of incendiary origin, and if so, from what source did it come? Was it a Canadian incendiary, a British incendiary, a German incendiary, or who was it? I read the dispatch, but I did not come to the conclusion the Senator from Colorado seems to have reached. There does not seem to be any proof as to the real cause of the catastrophe, and before making a declaration on the subject we certainly ought to wait until after an investigation has been made by the Canadian authorities.

Mr. THOMAS. I drew that inference and conclusion from the strength of the reports in the papers this morning.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over under objection.

FLOODS IN THE MISSISSIPPI VALLEY.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I wish to ask unanimous consent to have read a short telegram from the Legislature of Mississippi, containing a resolution adopted by that legislature on the flood situation in the Mississippi Valley.

Mr. LODGE. Are we going to transact morning business?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I shall not object to this request for unanimous consent, but I give notice that I shall object to any further request.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I wish to say to the Senator——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Just let me finish. I shall not object to this, but I shall object to any further request for unanimous consent to transact morning business. When the Senate recesses, as it did yesterday, for the purpose of cutting out morning business, we should either cut it out or else permit it to be transacted. I have no objection to this request.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I agree with the Senator in his view, but I am asking this extraordinary privilege——

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida will state it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. It is proposed that Congress shall take some action for the relief of the suffering in the flooded district of the Mississippi Valley, and I wish to have the resolution read for the information of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have no objection. I so stated.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BRYAN. The Journal and RECORD show that we are in the same legislative day as yesterday, and therefore it is not in order to receive morning business at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is a request for unanimous consent. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none and the Secretary will read the telegram.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Telegram.]

JACKSON, MISS., February 3, 1916.

Hon. JAMES K. VARDAMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

I have the honor to inform you that the Legislature of the State of Mississippi to-day passed the following concurrent resolution:

Whereas certain large areas of the Yazoo (Miss.) Delta in the counties of Sharkey, Warren, Issaquena, and Washington are now inundated or threatened with inundation; and

Whereas in consequence large numbers of people have been driven from their homes and are now without shelter: Therefore be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States be memoralized to take such immediate action as may be necessary in order to confer authority upon the adjutant general of the State of Mississippi to furnish tents, now in possession of the State National Guards, to destitute and homeless people in the flooded districts of the Yazoo (Miss.) Delta of this State.

GEORGE B. POWER,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that the telegram should go to the Committee on Military Affairs, it being a request for the loan of tents belonging to the Government of the United States.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I suggest that it go to the Committee on Appropriations, as a bill looking to conferring authority upon the Secretary of War to permit the use of tents is pending there. For that reason I would prefer to have it go to the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has no desire about it. It will go to the Committee on Appropriations.

THE GOVERNMENT OF THE PHILIPPINES.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 381) to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment is the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK]. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to have the amendment read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of section 34, it is proposed to insert:

SEC. 34. That not less than two years nor more than four years from the meeting of the legislature provided for in this act the President shall withdraw the sovereignty of the United States from the Philippine Islands, except such necessary portions thereof as he may select for naval bases or coaling stations. He shall, however, before completing the final steps of this withdrawal require of the Filipinos the establishment of a stable government, republican in form, and based upon the consent of the people, duly ascertained at an election called by act of the legislature, approved by the President. At this election shall be submitted for approval the form of constitution recommended by the legislature as well as the names of all candidates for elective office in the first provisional government. Said constitution shall provide that the new Philippine Republic shall fulfill the obligations of the United States concerning the Philippine Islands incurred by the treaty of Paris or arising out of the occupation of the islands, including the personal and property rights of individuals and corporations of the United States and other countries, and the safeguarding of such Philippine government loans and other obligations as have heretofore been authorized by act of Congress. Said constitution shall also provide that in all trade relations the United States shall have the benefit of the most-favored-nation clause. If the constitution is approved at said election and the provisional government created, the President shall then by proclamation recognize the independence of the Philippine Republic and turn over to the Philippine Government the control and sovereignty of the islands, except such naval bases and coaling stations as are above provided for. If, however, the President shall find at any time within the period of limitation provided above that the condition of the external or internal affairs of the islands or the international relations of the United States require it, or if a constitution as above provided be not adopted, he may by proclamation extend for the period of one year beyond the four years above provided the time for taking action under this act and thus afford to Congress an opportunity, in its discretion, to consider further the Philippine question, but any such extension of time by the President shall not otherwise suspend or nullify the operative force of this act unless Congress shall hereafter so direct.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I do not wish to unduly take the time of the Senate, but I should like to draw the attention of my colleagues to what I think are serious defects in the Clarke amendment, from any standpoint, defects which, I think, are cured in the substitute I have offered.

I find that a number of Senators have not carefully considered the fact that in the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas no provision whatever is made for the creation of machinery by which a new government shall be created in the Philippine Islands into whose hands the United States shall turn over the control of those islands.

An examination of the Clarke amendment shows that its provisions as to that matter are entirely vague, that there is no provision indicating how the people of the Philippine Islands shall go about instituting a government there. The Clarke amendment provides that the President shall "recognize the independence of the said Philippines as a separate and self-governing nation and acknowledge the authority and control over the same of the government instituted by the people thereof." The question is, How are the people of the Philippine Islands to institute a government there? Shall that be left altogether to a disorganized people? Shall that be left altogether to chance? Shall it be left to the realm of controversy?

There exists in the islands no authority at the present time; there is nothing in the islands at the present time except a legislature, the upper branch of which is appointed by the President and the lower branch of which is elected. Even after the passage of this bill the only government in existence there will be an American government, a government with an American Governor General and a legislature, the veto power of which is in the hands of an American as well as in the hands of the President. How, then, are those Filipino people, to whom the President is required to turn over the government, to institute the new government into whose hands the control shall be turned over? If it is left in the vague way as provided in this amendment, it seems to me there will be a direct invitation to controversy and struggle. Rival parties may organize different governments; parties with rival ideas of government may each claim to be the new government; and there is no assurance from anything provided in the amendment that the President will be able to find a government to recognize in the Philippine Islands.

It is true that under this amendment the President is invested with full power and authority "to enter into negotiations with the authorities of the said Philippines." What authorities of the Philippines? If he is to enter into negotiations with the authorities in the Philippines, should this act which we are now passing not provide an orderly means by which those authorities can be brought into being?

Mr. President, I seek in my substitute to create the machinery in a prompt, orderly, and definite way to bring those Philippine authorities into being, and to give them a constitution as a foundation; a constitution based upon the consent of the governed, and a provisional government elected at the same time that the constitution is adopted.

I provide in my substitute that the legislature—the legislature provided for in the body of this bill, the legislature both houses of which are to be elected by the people—shall submit to the Philippine people, at an election called by an act of the legislature, a constitution. That is the orderly way to do it. I provide that at the same election at which the people vote upon the constitution submitted by the legislature they shall elect a provisional government to stand upon the constitution, a provisional government with which the United States can negotiate, and to which it can turn over the powers of government. I maintain, Mr. President, that this is the orderly way; this is the quick way; and only in this way can the United States leave the islands decently and in order, and avoid the almost certain dangers of confusion if not of revolution.

Mr. President, my substitute goes further than this. It provides that the constitution thus submitted by the legislature to the people of the Philippine Islands must have certain provisions incorporated within it; that it must have one provision for an obligation of the new Philippine government assuming the obligations of the United States, which we incurred by the treaty of Paris with Spain; the treaty by which we acquired our sovereignty in the Philippine Islands; a treaty in which we made certain promises to the Government and to the people of Spain.

Can we create a new government over there? Can we abandon those islands and withdraw our sovereignty without at least demanding of the new Philippine government that it shall assume the obligations that we made? One of those obligations is the guaranty of religious liberty in the islands; another of those obligations is a guaranty of the rights of Spanish citizens and subjects in the courts of those islands; another obligation is the guaranty of the rights of those Spaniards in the conduct of their business long established in the islands. I think that the constitution which the Filipinos are to adopt should include the obligation on the new government to assume the obligations of the United States.

Mr. President, my amendment goes further. It also provides that this government so created in this definite, prompt, and natural way shall also assume all the other obligations of the United States incurred during our 17 years occupancy. The Congress of the United States has authorized the Philippine government to sell bonds; and millions of dollars' worth of such bonds have been sold by authority of Congress at a very low rate of interest. They are held in the United States by savings banks; they are held, as I understand, by postal savings banks; they are held by investors, who bought them on the faith of the United States, believing that the authority of Congress was behind them. I say that in the very constitution of the Philippine people we should incorporate an obligation to see that those bonds are safeguarded.

That is not all. That same Philippine government, under the authority of Congress, has guaranteed the interest on $16,000,000 worth of railroad bonds, without which the railroads could not have been built. Those bonds also are a moral obligation of Congress, and Congress should see that the new government in the Philippine Islands incorporates in its very fundamental law, its constitution, provisions for the safeguarding of those investments.

Mr. President, this proposal of mine to require these matters to be incorporated in the constitution of the new republic is not without precedent.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I think there is great force in the general suggestion made by the Senator from Nebraska. I have always felt that there ought to be some authority created by law in the archipelago for the purpose of representing the Philippine people in any negotiations that might take place in carrying out the general program outlined in what is known as the Clarke amendment.

The Senator from Nebraska suggests that a constitution be formed by the present legislature, and that that be submitted to the people. I want to ask the Senator if he does not think it would be better, instead of submitting to them a constitution framed and promulgated by the present legislature, which he says is largely under American control and domination, to authorize a constitutional convention of the people of the Philippine Islands for the purpose of framing their own constitution, prescribing at the same time certain things that are essential to be embodied in that constitution, in order to meet the requirements of the United States?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, Mr. President, I think I have made myself misunderstood if the Senator from North Carolina got the impression from me that the present legislature would submit the proposed constitution to the Philippine people. My substitute provides that the first legislature provided for in the bill, which is yet to be elected by the Philippine people, shall submit the constitution.

Mr. SIMMONS. But would not that legislature also be under the domination and control to a certain extent of this Government? It would be composed largely of the same membership as the present legislature in the popular branch and also in the upper house, of which the United States Government would have large control or large representation, to say the least. Then would it not also be more or less under the control of the Governor General of the islands?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, personally I would have no objection to providing for a constitutional convention, but inevitably that would lead to considerable delay; and it was partly for the purpose of cutting matters short that I proposed that the legislature to be elected at the first general election—which would possibly occur this year, if the bill passes soon enough—should perform the functions of a constitutional convention. I would not have the present legislature do that, but the legislature to be elected under this bill, the legislature consisting of 90 members in the lower house and 24 senators in the upper house. It was partly for the purpose of reducing the time that I made the suggestion of combining in the new legislature the functions of a constitutional convention as well as the functions of a legislature.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I understand that, but I think the same objection would obtain as to the legislature to be hereafter elected that applies to the legislature now in existence so far as the matter we are discussing is concerned. What I had in mind was this: That the constitution that is finally to be adopted ought to be a constitution that is framed by the Filipino people in their own organic body, called a constitutional convention, so that there might not be any question that that constitution, subject to the qualifications which the Senator has just stated, growing out of the exactions of the United States, would be the sole, uninfluenced act of the Filipino people. If that were feasible, and the Senator's amendment were framed in that way, I should myself be in favor of it; but I want to ask the Senator this question: Why can not that be offered as an amendment to the Clarke amendment, which has already been adopted?

I am myself in favor of the general principles embodied in the Clarke amendment. I should like to see it amended in that particular; and if the Senator would offer his amendment as an amendment to the Clarke amendment, then I think I would be disposed to support it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think if the Senator will examine the Clarke amendment he will find that there will be great difficulty in engrafting upon it any further amendments. It has been amended so much already that it is difficult to understand and the meaning of its sentences is involved and vague. I have endeavored here to incorporate in my substitute the real provisions and the intent of the Clarke amendment, with the exceptions which I have noted.

I want to suggest to the Senator that his criticism of the legislature as a body not responsible to the people would hold good as to the present legislature possibly, but it could not hold good as to the legislature elected with the view that it was not only to have legislative functions but also to frame a constitution and to submit that constitution to the people.

Mr. SIMMONS. Would it not be a legislature elected under the bill advocated by the Senator?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It would be a legislature elected under the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. But the bill was framed not with a view to the United States at present withdrawing, and that bill, I assume, retains certain power in the United States in connection with the Philippine Legislature.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, the legislature would have full legislative power, with very few restrictions, and its power over the constitution would be absolute, except for the exceptions which I have specified here.

I want to call the Senator's attention to another fact. The Philippine Islands, of course, are inhabited by people that have had very little experience in popular government, and probably the men elected to the legislature would include about all the men who are capable of considering governmental affairs. In the United States, or in any State of the Union, it would be an easy matter to form a constitutional convention entirely outside of the legislature, but it would be a very difficult matter with the limited number of public men in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I understand the Senator's bill is intended to enlarge the control of the Filipino people over their legislature.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senators who are indulging in a joint debate on the other side to speak so that those of us on this side can hear. I assume it is a matter of some importance.

Mr. SIMMONS. I assume that the present bill was framed, in part, with a view to increasing the control generally of the Philippine people over their legislature and their government; but I assume also that the present bill was framed with a view to giving the United States some power and representation in connection with the next legislature, the legislature provided for by this bill. Is that not the fact?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is only true so far as the civilized tribes are concerned. Of the 90 members of the lower house, 81 are elected directly by the Philippine people; all of the members representing the Philippine people are elected by the Philippine people; but in the Moro country and in one of the other islands there are, as the Senator knows, about 600,000 belonging to non-Christian tribes, and, inasmuch as they are not yet capable of self-government, have never held any election, and have never participated in the government, it is provided that the Governor General may select a limited number of members to represent their interests. They do not represent the Filipino interests, and they are small in number. Only 2 senators, for instance, out of 24, and 9 members of the lower house out of 90, will be selected by the Governor General; so that it is a very insignificant representation, and they are not to represent the interests of the United States, nor to restrain the Filipino legislature in legislating over their own affairs, but only to advise the legislature so far as the affairs of the non-civilized or non-Christian tribes are concerned.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator is speaking now with reference to the lower branch and the upper branch also?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. What is the power given by the bill to the Governor General?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Governor General has the power to veto legislation.

Mr. SIMMONS. Exactly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But, of course, he would have no power to veto a constitution which they submitted.

Mr. SIMMONS. If they submitted a constitution to the Filipino people, would not that be an act of legislation that he would have the power to veto?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; I think not; I have no idea of that.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not see how the Senator can draw that distinction. I take it that if the Governor General has the power of veto over the acts of that legislature, he would have the same power to veto a proposition submitting a constitution to the people that he would have to veto any other legislative act.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I certainly have no intention of having such a provision in the bill; and if there is such a provision in the bill, I will be very glad to accept an amendment to it. My purpose was simply to economize time and economize material, for the material for statesmanship in the Philippine Islands is necessarily very limited. I thought the same body which will be called into existence by this bill, the same men who will be elected under the terms of this bill to represent the Filipino people, elected by themselves, might also act as a constitutional convention to submit to a vote of the Filipino people the constitution which they must have as a basis of their government.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator has said that on account of the amendments that have been made to the Clarke amendment it would be very difficult to fit this part of his amendment into that provision, so as to incorporate it as a part of it. Would there be any difficulty about offering it as a separate and independent section to the Clarke amendment?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think, if the Senator would read the Clarke amendment carefully—and I find that a good many Senators who have been voting for the Clarke amendment have not read it as yet——

Mr. SIMMONS. I have read it very carefully; but I can not see, I want to say to the Senator before I take my seat, any possible reason why the principle of his amendment, even though its language would not fit in very well at the present time, could not be very well and very pertinently incorporated as a separate and independent section in the Clarke amendment. I should myself like an opportunity to vote upon that proposition in that form.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, the Senator, of course, might be able to present something.

Now, I want to read for the Senate the portions of the Platt amendment which apply to Cuba, which seem to me to afford a valuable precedent to be followed in this case. It was in the act of Congress passed March 2, 1901:

> The President is hereby authorized to "leave the government and control of the island of Cuba to its people" so soon as a government shall have been established in said island under a constitution which, either as a part thereof or in an ordinance appended thereto, shall define the future relations of the United States with Cuba, substantially as follows:

I. That the government of Cuba shall never enter into any treaty or other compact with any foreign power or powers which will impair or tend to impair the independence of Cuba, nor in any manner authorize or permit any foreign power or powers to obtain by colonization or for military or naval purposes or otherwise, lodgment in or control over any portion of said island.

II. That said government shall not assume or contract any public debt, to pay the interest upon which, and to make reasonable sinking-fund provision for the ultimate discharge of which, the ordinary revenues of the island, after defraying the current expenses of government shall be inadequate.

III. That the government of Cuba consents that the United States may exercise the right to intervene for the preservation of Cuban independence, the maintenance of a government adequate for the protection of life, property, and individual liberty, and for discharging the obligations with respect to Cuba imposed by the treaty of Paris on the United States, now to be assumed and undertaken by the government of Cuba.

IV. That all acts of the United States in Cuba during its military occupation thereof are ratified and validated and all lawful rights acquired thereunder shall be maintained and protected.

V. That the government of Cuba will execute and, as far as necessary, extend the plans already devised or other plans to be mutually agreed upon for the sanitation of the cities of the island, to the end that a recurrence of epidemic and infectious diseases may be prevented.

And then there are a few other provisions which were especially local to Cuba and which cut no figure in this case.

Mr. President, my contention is that in leaving these islands we should leave decently and in order. We should help, by suggestion, the Filipino people in organizing a new government, so that when we relinquish the power it may pass into the hands of a government established by peaceful and lawful means, and that there may not be destruction and disorder and perhaps bloodshed before the people themselves may be able to establish a government if left to themselves.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that anything less than this on the part of the United States would be reckless, and I think that the Congress which took the precautions I have read with regard to Cuba when it authorized the establishment of an independent government there ought to go at least as far as I have gone in the substitute which I present.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat, I should like to ask him a question.

The Senator's amendment provides that the Filipino people shall put certain provisions into their constitution. The Senator recognizes that a constitution is a domestic, fundamental law. It is not a contract between the United States and the Filipino people. It is a fundamental law binding upon the Filipinos alone. How would the Senator enforce provisions of that sort in the Philippine constitution?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, that is a bridge that we will have to cross when we come to it. My own first preference was for a treaty, and in the first substitute which I offered I provided for a treaty, which would be a contract. But it was objected here in the Senate that a treaty would have to be ratified by the Senate of the United States, and that the ratification of such a treaty would require a two-thirds vote, and that it might happen that an obstreperous third might prevent the ratification of the treaty and thus destroy or delay the effectiveness of the legislation. So I have done the next best thing in this substitute, and I have provided that the people shall incorporate it in their fundamental law, believing that if they do so they will live up to its obligations. It certainly is a precaution which can be taken, and which probably will serve the purpose.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, let me suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that in effect we shall have coerced these constitutional provisions from the Filipino people. We say that as a condition of giving them independence they must make a constitution providing certain things. The temptation is pretty great, it seems to me, for those people to insert these provisions in their constitution in order to obtain independence.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Utah if in the same sense the people of Utah were not coerced by the enabling act into putting certain provisions into their constitution?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That was an entirely different thing, Mr. President.

Mr. WALSH. Is it not a fact, however different it may be?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am not at this moment complaining of the coercion, but I am insisting that, having coerced these people into making this sort of a constitution, we then leave ourselves without any power to enforce it. In the case of Utah, Utah is in the Union; Montana is in the Union; and we have some method of dealing with those Commonwealths, at least morally. But when a constitution for the Philippine Islands is made, the Philippine Islands become an absolutely independent, sovereign nation.

Mr. WALSH. Does the Senator from Utah feel that the term "coercion" is at all applicable to the conditions prescribed by Congress under which the States were admitted into the Union and the requirements that were exacted of them as to provisions in their constitutions?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I did not apply the term "coercion" in the case of States of the Union. The Senator from Montana did that. I answered him that I was not considering that question.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I want to suggest to the Senator from Utah that there is a precedent for such an engagement. If he will remember, when we adopted the Constitution of the United States we undertook to carry out all the engagements that had been made by the United States under the Articles of Confederation. There was no way, of course, to enforce that agreement, except through the honesty of purpose and the integrity of the courts in the United States.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Well, Mr. President, that again is not at all a parallel case. There, precisely the same people who had made the original engagement made a subsequent engagement. They simply agreed, under a new form of government, that they would carry out the obligation they had entered into.

Mr. POINDEXTER. They themselves.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes; as the Senator from Washington suggests, they themselves entered into the engagement. Under one form of government, the Confederation, they incurred certain obligations. When they adopted another form of government and made the Union, under the Constitution, they agreed to carry out these engagements. They were the same people. But here we are undertaking to impose responsibilities upon a people who the moment they have made the engagement become sovereign and independent of us; and it seems to me, with all due respect to the Senator from Nebraska, that we are doing a vain and idle thing.

I am not in favor of abandoning the Philippine Islands, but if we are going to get rid of them, let us get rid of them. Let us move out. Let us leave them there, a sovereign power, to make any sort of a constitution they please. We can not control it after they have acquired their independence. They can change their constitution the next day or the next year, and we have not any control over them.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, it would be all very well to move out if we had not assumed certain obligations. We assumed those obligations in Cuba; and before we recognized the Cuban Government, although we were pledged in advance to do so, we required the Cuban people to do far more in their constitution than I have required here; for what is the difference between the cases?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. A great deal of difference, Mr. President.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What is it? Why should we require——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let me answer the Senator.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Why should we require the people of Cuba to assume our obligations under the treay of Paris and not require the Philippine people to assume those obligations?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am not insisting that we shall not require the people of the Philippine Islands to assume these obligations, but I am insisting that if we do it we should do it in some effectual way. We reserved the right to intervene in Cuba. The Senator does not want us to reserve the right to intervene 7,000 miles away in the Philippines?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And I have not provided for it. I have made no provision whatever for it. I am simply asking them to put in their fundamental law a provision that their government shall assume those obligations. If they fail afterwards to do it, that is another story; but the least we can do is to require them to assume those obligations.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No, Mr. President; we can do more than that if we want to do it. The Senator, in his original amendment, which I thought in some respects was inartificially drawn—and I called attention to it—provided that a treaty should be made. That is an understandable thing. If we make a treaty, we have something to enforce. We have a contract, at least, between us and them. But if we simply provide that they shall write it into their domestic law, whether it is a constitution or a statute, we have no way in the world of enforcing it.

FLOODS IN THE MISSISSIPPI VALLEY.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, out of order I ask unanimous consent to make a report from the Committee on Appropriations on the bill (S. 4155) to authorize the Secretary of War to supply tents for temporary use of destitute persons in flood-stricken districts, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 106) thereon.

The report relates to an emergency matter, otherwise I would not interrupt the procedure of the Senate.

This is a bill, Mr. President, providing for an appropriation of $100,000 and authorizing the Secretary of War to use Government tents and boats for the relief of flood sufferers in the valley of the Mississippi and its tributaries. An alarming condition is shown to exist in that section as the result of the overflow of the Mississippi River. It is stated in the morning paper that 16 lives were lost at one place on yesterday. Hundreds of persons are marooned and without food and threatened with death. The conditions are rapidly growing worse. The appropriation which this bill carries is a very small one, but it is thought that it will be adequate for present purposes, and if supplemental appropriations are required they can and will be made when the necessity therefor is disclosed.

I therefore ask unanimous consent to submit the report and ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to supply for temporary use, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, a sufficient number of tents to afford shelter for destitute persons in need of the same in the district overflowed by the Mississippi River and its tributaries.

That the sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War in the purchase and distribution of subsistence stores to such destitute persons as may require assistance in said overflowed districts.

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to use the vessels belonging to or now employed by the Government upon the Mississippi River and its tributaries in the transportation and distribution of tents and supplies furnished by the United States or by individuals to and among said destitute and suffering people, and in the removal of them and their property to places of safety, and he may employ such other means of transportation as he may deem necessary to carry out the purposes of this act.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, supplementing the statement made by the Senator from Arkansas, I desire to send to the desk and have read a telegram from the mayor of Hickman, Ky., in regard to the flood situation at that point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read the telegram, as follows:

HICKMAN, KY., February 3, 1916.

Hon. OLLIE M. JAMES,
Washington, D. C.:

We expected the river to come to a stand at 53 feet on the Cairo gauge, but we have just received a message that it has passed this stage and will go to 54. This will be within a few inches of the 1913 flood, and there is no assurance that it will stop at this height. We have several hundred on our hands and have exhausted our resources. Have held off as long as possible, but must open a commissary to all to-morrow morning. Unless we receive outside aid at once, we will bankrupt every available resource; in fact, we are running in debt to-day, owing to the cold weather. This will be the most disastrous flood that we have ever experienced, and much suffering will necessarily exist.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, the situation is grave and the suffering great. There is urgent need for immediate relief, and I hope the bill reported by the Senator from Arkansas will meet with the generous approval of the Senate.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I wish, just in a sentence, to say that we have here another illustration of the very inadequate way in which we have been meeting, by legislation and administration, this great question of floods. Here we have a flood that threatens the devastation of the adjoining region, and that region embraces the lower portions of the Mississippi River. For years legislation upon this subject has been pending before Congress, looking to a comprehensive control of all the waters of the country, from the source streams down to the oceans and gulfs into which these streams enter. The only sensible and scientific way is to control this water as soon as it falls, and put it, through storage and irrigation canals and water-power development works, to some beneficial use while it is on its way to the ocean. In doing that we will slow up the progress of these flood waters in such a way that they will not choke up the channels of the rivers below and flood the adjoining areas.

I say this now because I observe that in the House of Representatives there is another method presented of feebly dealing with this subject by the appointment of a floods committee. We are only taking hold of piecemeal, disjointed portions of a great problem that ought to be met adequately and comprehensively by the American people.

I take this opportunity of calling attention again, as I have repeatedly called attention before, to the fact that these great cataclysms in the economic conditions of our country can be prevented if we only act wisely and sensibly and scientifically upon the subject in all its full breadth and comprehensiveness.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROBINSON. There has already been ordered published in the RECORD certain communications concerning this measure. I ask now to have printed the letter from the Secretary of War and sundry telegrams which I have received.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter and telegrams referred to are as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 2, 1916.

Hon. JOSEPH T. ROBINSON,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Referring to your call at the War Department yesterday morning with regard to the issue of Army tents for the relief of the sufferers from the recent flood in the State of Arkansas, I have the honor to advise you that in the absence of authority from Congress the issue or loan of the property desired can not legally be made. The Constitution declares that "Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory and other property belonging to the United States," and in the practice of the department this provision has been construed to apply not only to the sale of public property but to an exchange or loan of the same. In support of this practice, see United States v. Nicoll, 1 Payne, 646 (Fed. Case No. 15, 879). The rulings and practice of the department in this matter are stated in the Digest of Opinions of the Judge Advocate General (Ed. of 1912, p. 908), as follows:

"Requests for the loan of tents, flags, and other public property under the control of the War Department have, as a rule, been denied on the ground that the Secretary of War had no authority to loan public property under his control unless authorized to do so by resolution or act of Congress."

In fact the practice of the department has been to make such loans only where authorized by act or resolution of Congress. The following are a few of the instances where the department has declined to loan property because of the want of authority to do so: January 16, 1881, a request for the loan of tents for a camp meeting; June 24, 1895, request for the loan of flags to be used at a Grand Army of the Republic encampment; July, 1895, request for the loan of an ambulance for use of the National Guard; June, 1901, loan of horses for use of militia at an encampment.

The foregoing practice was based on the want of authority for the loan of public property and on the general legislation with regard to the care of and accountability for such property. Since the act of March 2, 1913 (37 Stat., 1025), so far as Army tents are concerned, the matter no longer rests on the want of statutory authority for the loan but is regulated by the proviso to that act authorizing the loan of certain tents for use "at the meeting of the Imperial Council of the Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, at Dallas, Tex.," which proviso reads as follows:

"That hereafter no loan of tents shall be made except to the Grand Army of the Republic and the United Confederate Veterans."

It will appear, therefore, that the issue of tents as desired in this case is not only contrary to the practice of the department as stated above, but would be a direct viloation of the act of March 2, 1913, supra; and, as Congress is now in session, the emergency can be met by a resolution of that body, so that the department would not be excused in making the issue contrary to the terms of the statute without authority from that body.

Very respectfully,

HENRY BRECKINRIDGE,
Acting Secretary of War.

LITTLE ROCK, ARK., February 3, 1916.

Senator JOE T. ROBINSON,

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask leave, out of order, to have read and inserted in the RECORD a telegram from the Merchants' Association of New York, protesting against the proposition to install a heat, light, and power plant on the Potomac Channel, adjacent to the Potomac Park and the Washington Monument. I ask unanimous consent that——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I shall have to object to that. It is morning business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection.

THE GOVERNMENT OF THE PHILIPPINES.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 381) to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment is the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK].

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I wish to ask the Senator from Nebraska just one question. The amendment of the Senator from Arkansas fixes the time within which the independence shall be granted at not less than two years from the date of the approval of the act, whereas the Senator from Nebraska provides not less than two years nor more than four years from the meeting of the legislature provided for in this act. The act provides that the legislature shall hold a session commencing on the 16th day of October. I wish to ask the Senator if he has any objection to the insertion of the word "first," so that it shall read "the first meeting of the legislature."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; there is no objection to that. That was my intention. It would be probably construed that way, but there can be no harm in inserting the word "first."

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I have received a telegram from the Merchants' Association of New York, which reads as follows.

NEW YORK, February 3, 1916.

Hon. FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The Merchants' Association of New York, taking pride in the preservation of the beauty of our National Capital, vigorously protest against the proposition to install a heat, light, and power plant on the Potomac channel adjacent to the Potomac Park and the Washington Monument. Such a plant with its tall chimneys and the necessary issuance of smoke therefrom would greatly detract from the beauty of the Mall of the park and of the Washington Monument. We, therefore, earnestly urge that the legislation pending for the erection of the plant on that site be not enacted and that some other site be selected which will not interfere with the beauty ot the city of Washington, and particularly of the monument to our first President.

THE MERCHANTS' ASSOCIATION OF NEW YORK,
By S. C. MEAD, Secretary.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada whether that relates to the Hitchcock amendment or the Clarke amendment.

Mr. NEWLANDS. It relates to the general welfare, I will state to the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK].

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, the pendency of the amendment in its present form is significant of progress. It shows that at least one Senator who in the beginning was opposed to incorporating any provision in the bill which even remotely looked at the withdrawal from the Philippine Islands has seen a light, or, at all events, he has made very decided progress. I think that is commendable; I think it is hopeful. It is a question that grows upon one who thinks about it seriously, who thinks not only of the benefits conferred on this country but the dangers that will be avoided; and I expected nothing less than that from my very learned friend from Nebraska. He said a few days ago, on the floor, the time had not arrived when Congress should deal with this question; that it would be competent for Congress hereafter to assemble to take the matter up and deal with it in the light of developments as conditions then existed. He subsequently proposed an amendment to fix six years as the limit. After a short debate here he found that he was the period of two years too long; so he cut two years off that.

He has likewise adopted some of the provisions of the amendment that had already been adopted and did not need to be offered again. The differences between the phraseology that he employed to express those ideas is largely the difference between tweedledum and tweedledee. No two persons competent to perform any work involved in the expression of an idea would employ exactly the same language. Lawyers trying the same case on different occasions will not ask witnesses the same questions and will not employ the same language covering a view of the law which they desire to have presented to the jury. Those little differences will creep in inevitably, and properly so.

There are some things about the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska that are not objectionable, because they have the approval of the Senate. They are substantially what the Senate has already done. There are some things, however, which show that it was prepared by the Senator from Nebraska because he is a newspaper man, a very excellent one. The mistakes are not quite so apparent to journalists as to lawyers who have been compelled to devote a certain part of their lives to the acquisition of a knowledge of the technicalities of that profession.

In the first place, the amendment adopted by the Senate, and which is no longer the Clarke amendment but the Senate amendment, provides that the authority shall begin to run from the approval of the act. That is definite. Everybody knows exactly what that is, and no sort of combination of circumstances nor conspiracies can postpone it. The amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska provides that it shall begin not less than two or more than four years after the meeting of the legislature provided for in this act. I have known legislatures in some American States never to meet, to sit during a whole session in a useless filibuster over an organization. I do not believe the inducement should be held out to the disturbed population of a new country to break themselves up into factions where each contends for its own control. I think everything about it which devolves a duty upon those people should be definitely stated, that they may know exactly what it is that is expected of them.

On the other hand, when we come to delegate power to the President of the United States, we have knowledge of the traditional importance of that office and the character of men who occupy it, so that a very broad delegation of power is all that is required. In the amendment adopted by the Senate it is provided that the President is authorized on behalf of the United States to "fully recognize the independence of the said Philippines, and as a separate and self-governing nation, and acknowledge the authority and control over the same of the government instituted by the people thereof." That is amply definite to invest the President of the United States and the Philippine people with all the authority necessary to make that general direction an accomplished fact. It is as much a part of the law as any other provision in it that a command to perform a given act carries with it as an incident the power necessary to consummate it in a proper way. So I take it for granted that the President of the United States would confer with the Philippine Legislature, or with some representative body of the Philippine people, with a view of erecting a government, giving to the people of the Philippine Islands the right to choose their form of government.

Of course, in so far as it could be influenced by suggestions or advice on the part of the President of the United States, I have not any doubt but what he would insist or urge or at least advise that it should be substantially republican in form. But that is a matter the Filipino people must determine for themselves. It is a government they have to live under when they are cast upon their own responsibility. They may see proper to invest it with such power of defense over the islands as to deprive it of some of the aspects of the republican form of government that we understand in Arkansas or some of the other States of the Union. An unfriendly President might be dissatisfied with the particular form in which the government had been submitted as to whether or not it was republican in fact.

The distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] the other day called our attention to the fact that a very perfect constitution, so far as its mere phraseology was concerned, had been prepared by a gentleman who did not know what a writ of habeas corpus was. And so it goes. This thing of what constitutes a republican form of government is a matter of viewpoint. We understand it one way and other people may understand it otherwise. Indeed, this Government of our own has not progressed to that degree of republicanism which my friend from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] would insist, and has insisted successfully in some localities, where the initiative and referendum has been installed to supplement what was considered before as a republican form of government. If the Senator from Oklahoma, for instance, was President of the United States and had to pass on the question he would probably say in this day and time a constitution that did not provide for the initiative and referendum is not in fact a republican form of government, and the legislature—the exclusive law-making power vested in the legislative branches of the government—would not fulfill the full measure of republicanism in that respect. So I do not think that has improved it very greatly. It is not such a defect as makes the sentence very obscure, although I make no very great profession to clearness in some of the expressions I occasionally employ.

I am not aware of any particular enlargement of the scope of the bill that has been made by the amendment except the introduction of a provision at the instance of a person who had a right to be consulted about it, and that is the proviso that if the stability of the government proposed to be established was not so demonstrable as that he could find it secure he would probably view that as a defect and postpone proceedings until Congress could take a hand in the controversy if they saw proper to do so. We had to be careful in the language employed in conferring that authority on the President, because it is not probable that the power to suspend existing laws can be conferred upon any administrative or executive officer. The courts have granted a limited authority as to existing facts. We therefore limited his right in this case, and probably went as far as we could safely go to find a condition of internal or external affairs in the Philippines in respect to the efficiency and stability of the proposed government such as to justify him in saying there ought to be a delay and Congress should pass on the question again. He can not be invested with authority to set it aside if he saw proper, he could not be invested with authority to say the international relations were such we do not care to interfere with the Philippines at this time. If that was a matter involving the Philippine government or the stability of the government and incidentally would involve ourselves, of course he could do that under the authority we confer here. It is not necessary to enumerate; it does not make conceivable conditions, that anything can happen in the Philippine Islands which can so seriously interfere with the affairs of the United States that the United States will stop the whole machinery until they settle that. In the great group of things committed to this magnificent Government the Philippine Islands are a minor proposition in so far as their ability to complicate our international relations are concerned.

The amendment of the Senator from Nebraska requires a stable government, republican in form. A republic may be stable one day and not stable another. Among the people in that part of the world and elsewhere that very change in conditions takes place. An unfriendly President might say, "I do not think that a government is stable until it has been in operation for a considerable length of time; I will assume that it is not stable; and therefore I will refuse to issue a proclamation announcing the separation of the government," although it may be in a perfect state of peace at that time. Then the whole thing is made subject to the future action, the discretionary action, of the President of the United States, because the legislature can only authorize that election upon an act passed and approved by the President of the United States. You can not contract away the right of the President of the United States to approve any act. He has the veto power, and the right to withhold his signature from any given act of the legislature is conferred on him by the Constitution of the United States.

In the so-called Clarke amendment we make a system that will completely separate the islands at a given time unless the President shall find as a fact that the stability or efficiency of the government is such as to justify him in making a finding to that effect and issuing a proclamation delaying the matter until another Congress may come and go.

The amendment of the Senator from Nebraska provides that the constitution shall be submitted to a popular election, and at the same time the claims of all candidates for elective offices in the provisional government. If it had been his purpose to provide a system that would cut the throat of the effective part of it, he could not find a more ingenious success, more ingenuity, than he did there.

The first thing to do would be to settle the form of government. In the States of the Union where they substitute a new constitution for the old one, and deal with due and orderly society, there is no particular reason why that should not be done; but the system of government ought to be determined independently of the personal aspirations of those who care to administer it. That very condition could be demoralized to a point where any President would have a foundation for saying there is no such condition of quietude in those islands as would justify him in saying that they have a stable government. It is always to be understood that in making a law it ought to be capable of enforcement, without having to pass another law to help it out.

I take it that the serious objection now presented by the Senator from Nebraska is that he thinks he has not provided specifically for every debt and obligation that the Philippine government has assumed or that the United States has authorized. I made that just as comprehensive as it could be. I not only provided for all property rights but for all other relations. I will read it:

> For the purpose of a complete and prompt compliance with this direction, the President is hereby invested with full power and authority to make such orders and regulations and to enter into such negotiations with the authorities of said Philippines or others as may be necessary to finally settle and adjust all property rights and other relations as between the United States and the said Philippines.

There will be no difficulty whatever in the President of the United States in commission calling to his aid whoever he might choose in that behalf to ascertain to the very utmost limits whatever differences might exist either to create a pecuniary obligation or to disturb the existing relation or to reestablish another. It intends to vest him with power so comprehensive that no enumeration would limit the President of the United States entitled to represent us in our international relations. He has peace, and that is greater than everything else combined in this country, in his hands. When he comes to deal with foreigners we sit here largely to back up and support anything that he does, to maintain any position that he takes. It will not do to say that the President, who habitually exercises any such wise and comprehensive and important authority, is to be limited by mere enumeration of the particular debt which he is to include. He is just as intelligent, just as patriotic, and desirous in undertaking to carry out the direction of Congress as any Member of Congress would be. I do not believe that to refer to any particular treaty or to any particular debt or to any particular railroad or anything else is necessary in this case. If the United States is morally bound by anything, it will recognize its obligation. If services can be rightfully transferred to the Filipino people, consistent with the right of both the creditor and debtor, that can be done.

The Hitchcock amendment is, as some one said, concerning something else. Some parts of it are new; some parts of it are good. The new parts are not good, and the good parts are not new.

I had no particular reason in introducing this amendment except that no one else would do it. The Democratic Party at all times, in season and out of season, for 16 years has made a demand that this should be done by somebody. The committee did not do it; the Senator from Nebraska did not do it, because he was opposed to its being done. Either I or some one else had to do it. I am getting as much salary as anybody else and doing about as little, and I did not know but that I had better get busy right along that line. I presented the amendment to the Senator from Nebraska. It might have been the Hitchcock amendment if he had seen proper to introduce it. Because it was introduced by me I hope it will not carry any weight or be subjected to any disabilities on that account.

The Hitchcock amendment may get us rid of the Philippine Islands, but if it is to be administered by an unfriendly President it never will; but the Clarke amendment will, unless the President violates his oath and refuses to discharge his duty under the act of Congress, which nobody has a right to assume that he will do.

This occasion is one of the most momentous and important that has ever been presented to an American Congress. If this matter is not now disposed of in some definite form, and some policy laid down that is to be followed up and consummated into final action, you will probably never again hear this question discussed—at least not for many years, I think. The psychological time has arrived. The question may again come under discussion here, and probably will. Some of these days it may be necessary to amplify the boundaries of this Union and the Senate may find itself engaged in a proposition to admit the island of Luzon as one of the States of the American Union. That was predicted 20 years ago by a man now prominent in the service of another branch of this Congress in a speech that has not been excelled by anybody since that time. Again, the matter may come under discussion here when we come to ratify a treaty of peace whereby we cede to some victorious enemy these distant and useless islands. Those are all possibilities of the case.

The Democratic enthusiasm, manifested in three or four campaigns, has been chloroformed by some process, until we find ourselves here now divided over the little phraseology by which the great purpose is sought to be accomplished, and as little done as can by possibility be done, higgling over nonessentials, and allowing a great duty to pass unattended to and unrespected. But our friends on the other side will say that the very fact that you find a thing in the Democratic platform in modern times is evidence of the fact that that is one of the things which the Democratic Party is going to keep away from. Well, there is some little foundation for a quip of that kind; but I think we shall fool them about some things that are in the platform, and I think this is one of them.

I habitually refuse, however, to give a partisan turn to international matters here, and I did that the first day I came here. I found myself in opposition to every Democrat on this side of the Chamber when we sought to ratify the treaty with Colombia to establish the Panama Canal. When you reach the water line, you reach the boundary of partisan obligation with me; and it ought to be so with everybody. Still, the Democratic Party is a great group of citizens of this country, and leaving out the political aspects or all of the political advantages that they seek to bring to themselves by reason of that declaration, it is a promise made on behalf of 7,000,000 voters, and repeated not once, but four times. We profess sympathy and association with that body of voters, and we have offered to deal with questions about which they have committed themselves so distinctly, as that we at least ought to give some attention to what they say, regardless of its partisan and political value to us.

Now I want to say a word about our friends on the Pacific coast and the immediate adjacent territory. A great power has arisen in the East. The progress made by the Japanese people is the most remarkable in the history of mankind. No nation ever did for itself in 60 years what the Japanese have done for themselves. Thirty years ago we were maintaining courts in their territory because they were not competent to administer justice where our citizens were involved. A man was convicted in Japan before a consul and three assessors, whom he called to his assistance, and sentenced to be hanged; and the Supreme Court of the United States said it was a correct decision. The argument of the court was that that country did not understand our civilization and could not administer it, and, therefore, we had to establish courts there to do it. Do you suppose we could establish a court there now? We have gone into that country to establish our civilization and to introduce our people there; and, on the other hand, we have said to them, "Your people can not come to California; they can not come to our country; they can not attend our schools; they can not do anything which the citizens of the other enlightened nations of the earth can do." Those people are not going to submit to that anomaly. We can justify the proposition when we say, "Your civilization is different from ours; we do not bottom our objection on any proposition of superiority, but we can not maintain both civilizations on this continent." Then they have a right to say, "You can not maintain both of them in Asia, either; if you have got a right to come to Asia, it will not be long until you begin to boast there the superiority of your race over ours, and you will be taunting us because we can not come up to your so-called standards and ideals"; and yet when one of them puts his foot on our shores, no matter how enlightened he may be, no matter how industrious he may be, he has to carry some weight of race discrimination.

I thoroughly approve of a proposition that will in a respectful way make known to those Asiatic nations the fact that our people can not maintain our civilization here and their's also, and that it is better for all of us to have an understanding on that subject, and let us get out of their territory and ask them to let us run our own. That is a bargain that seems fair on its face. You can maintain that, but you can not maintain the other; and those who now undertake to maintain by their votes American control over the Philippine Islands have no right to appeal to American citizens to pledge every life and every dollar we have to maintain a policy of forcible exclusion from our borders of those Asiatic races. We have just simply got to have a policy that is consistent with itself. It is not a question of discriminating against races on account of their supposed inability to understand our standards. They have standards of their own with which they are just as well satisfied as are we with our standards.

If the Filipino people should undertake to move over in a body to California to-day, there would be just as much objection to them as if the Japanese should seek to go in there. The sensible thing, the American thing, and, although it may sound offensive, the Democratic thing to do, is to get out of there as quickly and as decently as we can. We do not want to run out of there with such precipitancy as to lead people to believe that we went out in fear; but we do want to set our own house in order, to adjust our own policies, and to engraft upon them the principle of growth, so that every time we do anything it will be along the line of extending a policy that will ultimately satisfy the growth, progress, and demands of this country. We have not any such policy now.

We have two Monroe doctrines—one in Japan, which says that nobody shall go into the Philippine Islands unless we say he can go there. We are not going there; the white people of America are not going to the Philippine Islands. There are only three or four thousand of them there now, and they have gone there as the mere beneficiaries of an artificial commerce which the taxes the people of this country have raised and expended over there in connection with the Army and Navy make for them. Take that prop out from under them and they would leave there. We can not hold those islands for that purpose indefinitely and we can not maintain the right to say that no European Government shall erect governmental establishments in the Western Hemisphere. I believe our field of activity is here. I believe that it will furnish opportunities and motives of self-interest for the next 200 years for all the expansion that we see proper to undertake. After that, it is then a give-and-take proposition with the great Governments of the world as to whether or not we will hold our own with them in the peaceful rivalries of commerce.

I say again I am not obsessed with the idea that there is anything extraordinary about the amendment which I have offered, because the Senator from Nebraska in a way detailed the true condition of affairs when he said that it was submitted to many people and that many had a share in it, but when it was finally written out it seemed to represent all that was required. I think it ought to pass, but it is for Senators to say what they think about it. I do not want anybody to vote for it on my account, and I do not want anybody to vote against it on my account. I have one vote, and all I want is to cast that one vote; and when I do that I shall have discharged my duty, and that is all I came here to do.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, there can be no difference of opinion between the Senator who has just taken his seat and myself upon one proposition, namely, that it is desirable that our Government get out of the Philippine Islands. I favored that policy as a member of the committee. Neither ought there to be any time expended in discussing the question as to the authorship of a bill or an amendment. It certainly is immaterial whose name shall be attached to a particular amendment. But it is important that when we relinquish the islands we shall leave them in the best possible shape, and that the obligations of this Government, moral and legal, shall be safeguarded.

I can not follow the logic of the Senator from Arkansas—who, I am sorry, has left the Chamber. In one breath he declares that the Hitchcock amendment vests power and discretion in the President, and that the President may abuse that power, so that the Filipinos will not be granted independence at all; and yet he argues that his own amendment has the virtue that all our rights can be safeguarded, because the authority is vested in the President to safeguard them. Both of these amendments do, in fact, vest in the President a discretion. Either of them can be substantially nullified by a President who would disregard the plain mandate of his duty or the plain language of the law which we are about to enact.

I am not prepared, in dealing with a question of this importance, to start with the assumption that the President of the United States is not going to undertake honestly to carry out the terms of the law; but if such a President ever sits in the White House and if this proposition ever comes before him, he can more effectively abuse the powers conferred upon him by the Clarke amendment than he can those granted by the Hitchcock amendment, because his powers are not so clearly defined by the Clarke as by the Hitchcock amendment. Therefore I think the Senator's logic is faulty.

Mr. President, I am going to take but a moment. I simply want to say to the Senator from Arkansas that if the Hitchcock amendment is defeated and no other amendment which I think is better than the one the Senator from Arkansas has proposed is brought forward, I am going to vote for the Clarke amendment, because I want to get out of the Philippine Islands. I am willing to go, even though we do not go as I think we ought to go. I, however, believe there are virtues in the Hitchcock amendment that ought to be recognized, and I am a little surprised that there is serious opposition to the propositions made by the chairman of the committee.

Now I appeal to the Senate. The Chairman of the Committee on the Philippines [Mr. HITCHCOCK] has given to the questions involved here a great amount of time and study. It is true that his conclusion was that it would be better to confer a limited liberty upon the Philippine people and to retain a control over them for a period of years than it would be to turn them loose at once. In coming to that conclusion, I have no doubt he was influenced to a large extent by the opinion that any other proposition might meet with disastrous consequences at the other end of the Capitol.

However that may be, the chairman of the committee, after the intention or the desire of a majority of the Senate had been manifested, undertook to draw an amendment, and he drew that amendment in the light of all the information and investigation and knowledge he had on this subject.

One thing is in the Hitchcock amendment that I do not believe any Democrat or any Republican ever ought to vote against, and that is that the Filipino people shall originally set up a republican form of government. We have expended $400,000,000 on the Philippine Islands, a part of it for internal improvements, a part of it for education, a part of it in preserving peace, and a part of it in establishing a colonial government. We have expended it all for the sake of the Philippine people. Is this Republic now to walk away from the islands without taking a single step toward preserving for their people the chance, at least once in his life, to vote for the establishment of a free government? Are we to go away from the Philippine Islands, having expended $400,000,000, leaving only an alleged government, which may have been set up by military force, which may be established by some usurper or some dictator, which may represent all that is bad in government; or are we, as we leave, to have the satisfaction of knowing that we gave the Philippine people the opportunity to establish a free government, and that such a government has in fact been created? Or, on the other hand, shall be leave behind a military government, a dictatorship, an autocracy, or a condition of general anarchy?

The Hitchcock amendment provides for a stable republican government. The Clarke amendment does not.

That is one of the great differences between these two bills. While I will vote for the Clarke amendment, if there is nothing else to vote for, I shall blush when I think that this Government, which has expended $400,000,000, did not even guarantee to the Philippine people as it left them the chance for one popular election, one chance to adopt a constitution, one chance to establish a representative government, and that we did not insure them that kind of government to begin with. If, afterwards, they want to vote for a different form of government; if, after they have been once established, they permit their government to be overthrown, that is a matter then for them. But to-day we are charged with the duty, as we leave them, of leaving them with a government erected by the Philippine people and not one set up by fraud or force. Does not so great a question appeal to the conscience and the democracy of every man here?

The Senator says that there may be disputes as to what constitutes a stable government; that a President may arbitrarily declare that the government set up is not stable. He says that the government may be "set up to-day and be stable to-day and unstable to-morrow," and therefore he argues against the Hitchcock amendment. Yet, when you turn to his own amendment, you find exactly the same phraseology in his own amendment, the same discretion.

There are other differences between these two propositions. The Hitchcock amendment absolutely insures these people a constitution which shall recognize human rights and property rights, and which shall bind the Philippine people to assume the obligations of this Government. The Senator from Arkansas argues that the same thing is accomplished under his proposition and that it will work out in that way. If so, what becomes of the argument that the Hitchcock amendment undertakes to vest in the President a dangerous discretion. We arrive at the same end, according to the Senator from Arkansas, under his own amendment, and yet he must admit that the language of the Hitchcock amendment is more clear, definite, and specific than is that employed in his amendment.

There ought to be no pride of authorship. This matter ought to be voted on upon its merits, and I simply say this in conclusion:

If the Democratic Party or the Republican Party desires to walk out of the Philippine Islands without undertaking to guarantee to those people the opportunity for a republican form of government, if they are willing to walk out of the islands without requiring that a reasonably stable form of government shall be established, and that that government shall assume the obligations of the United States, and shall give those guaranties of life and religious liberty and of property which are ingrained in the conscience of every Democrat and of every lover of liberty—if we want to walk away in that way, let us do it; but why should we do it? Why should we not endeavor to preserve to these people the blessings of liberty.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I had anticipated, during the debate upon this question, presenting some views I have had for some time, and have either strengthened or modified, as the case may be, during the last summer by coming slightly in touch with conditions in the east so far as they affect our politics and policy.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] expressed very forcibly some of the views I hold about what should be our policy and our action so far as the situation in the Eastern Hemisphere, and particularly in the neighborhood of China and Japan, is concerned. We have heard much talk from time to time of the "yellow peril." Personally, I do not believe in the existence of such a peril; but I think that this Congress has possibly heard all too little of what, from the standpoint of a nation existing in the east, able to take care of itself, only recently having acquired the power to do so, may be termed by them, in contradistinction, the "white peril."

It was only a little more than 100 years ago, Mr. President, when this great country of ours was a handful of separated small communities on the Atlantic seaboard, claiming rights to territory extending back as far as the Mississippi. It is just about a hundred years since, under Jefferson, we acquired that great territory of Louisiana which stretched out nearly, or possibly quite, by exploration, to a small portion of the Pacific coast. It is only 75 years since we acquired from Mexico the whole of our Pacific coast—I think about 1848. It was 20 years later than that, even, when from Russia we acquired that great territory of Alaska, stretching almost to the Asiatic mainland, and reaching down from the north toward the only independent, self-reliant nation of Asiatics now able to govern their own affairs without fearing foreign invasion. But we continued. Hawaii came to us; our portion of the Samoan Islands came in; and only less than 20 years ago we reached out far to the southwest and took to ourselves dominion over a foreign people with whose affairs I do not believe we should have any concern, reaching up in that way from the south toward this nation of whom one Senator has said we are afraid.

Mr. President, I do not believe the people of this country are afraid of any nation. Neither do I think that the people of Japan are afraid of this Nation. I have no idea, from what my observation has been—I confess it has been to myself all too insufficient, and I can only express my impressions—I have no idea that the Japanese desire any more to come into armed conflict with us than we do with them, and that of course is not at all. But I do know, Mr. President, that by reason of our conduct in extending our dominion over lands in Asia near to the mainland—I do know that because in the last one hundred years we have progressed in obtaining territory for ourselves which seems to have been our manifest destiny—there is great reason why that nation, with a history of 2,500 years, should think that this Nation is encroaching on its proper sphere.

Only a short time ago we saw in the press that there was an attempt on the part of Japan to acquire a lodgment at Turtle Bay. Of course it was an effort of the yellow press to excite our feelings. Nobody, I fancy, believed it; and yet here we have gone on until we have acquired lands in the Eastern Hemisphere within a few hundred miles—twelve hundred, I think, to be accurate about it—of the greatest port in the whole of Japan and nearer than that to much of her territory.

Japan has no particular reason to be without fear of what she might term the "white peril." From the northwest the colossus of European and Asiatic nations has reached down toward her. Germany has seized a lodgment on the Chinese coast, from which Japan has sought the opportunity, and at last found it, to drive her. England has her sphere of influence over the mainland of Asia very near to Japan. France, on the south, may threaten her at some time. Japan has had to fight for her existence, for her real, essential national interests, in two wars, and has won them both. As to the attitude of the Japanese toward this country, they undoubtedly resent any intent or effort, possibly entirely unconscious, to impute racial inferiority to her people, when they have manifested in peace and war that such an imputation is unjust. I believe there is much reason in their fear of what they would term, and might properly term, in contradistinction to what we term the "yellow peril," the "white peril" of the Occident.

I think it is most important, Mr. President, that we should evidence, and possibly evidence as soon as we can, the honest intent and policy of this Government not to become involved in the political affairs, and particularly in the territorial acquisition, of portions of the Eastern Hemisphere. We have shown many indications of the friendly feeling which we have toward those people, and they have appreciated it. I believe that to-day the feeling of the Japanese nation is as friendly toward us as toward any other country in the world. They have had reason to fear the white nations of this earth. They are the only independent, self-governing, upstanding, self-reliant nation in the whole of Asia. India is under the domination of the English; large portions of the southern and southeastern portion of Asia are under the dominion of other western nations; and here, from north and south, and from the east, comes this great Republic, acquiring in the course of one-twenty-fifth of the history of Japan all these great territories, as I have attempted to describe.

But there is a brighter view concerning our relations which the Japanese undoubtedly appreciate. I fancy to-day, Mr. President, that China thinks of us as the one true, honest, and reliable friend to whom she can appeal and on whom she may rely under all circumstances for disinterested friendship. The same conditions that have brought about that feeling in China, finally and lastly shown by the return to her of the Boxer indemnity, which we could not conscientiously use, which we had exacted in concert with other nations, is precisely duplicated in our relations with Japan in the case of the Shimonoseki treaty. Those people, Mr. President, if I mistake not, are passionately patriotic, determined to resent any imputation of racial inferiority upon themselves; but I do not know from personal observation or from anything I can read in history any people who are more willing to return kindness for kindness, appreciation for appreciation, friendliness for friendliness, than those people who are now controlling their own destiny, and intend to do so—and, from my standpoint, properly intend to do so—who inhabit that chain of islands and who have had to fight for their unhampered possibility of progress in their own land and in the land immediately adjoining them which was necessary for their self-respect and to maintain their nationality.

This country has shown, and they have appreciated in many ways, the friendship that we feel toward them. No man's name stands higher among the statesmen of Japan than that of our first representative who was sent there after Japan had been really opened to foregn trade and travel—Townsend Harris. They have recently, I think, erected a monument to his memory, showing his great friendliness to Japan and their appreciation of it. This country in many ways—notably in the case of the abolishment of the extraterritorial courts in Japan—has shown her willingness to interfere as little as possible with their affairs, and always has advanced ahead of other nations in recognizing the national aspirations, the reasonable aspirations, of the Japanese people.

It is said by them—and one of them told me this—that when negotiations were proceeding among several western nations as to certain demands which should be made upon Japan, the American representative said to them, "Why, gentlemen, I would not treat a dog in the way you propose to treat this nation; I have many friends among the statesmen of that nation whom I should feel I was personally insulting if I submitted such propositions to them." There are many instances of that kind—instances, Mr. President, which I had desired to collect; instances which I had desired to cite to the Senate as showing the friendliness which has been exhibited by this country toward Japan, and which has been appreciated by Japan. I do not believe the Japanese are in feelings and aspirations essentially different from ourselves. I believe that the Japanese will be friendly and appreciative of everything we do which is friendly to them; but I do think it is most important that they shall know by the act of this country in withdrawing our sovereignty in the Philippine Islands that we do not intend to essay the rôle of the dominant power in eastern Asia.

I have heard speeches made by Members of this Congress in Asia and Japan, and on the boats plying between their ports and to and from their ports this summer, which are calculated to make alive again suspicions of our action; speeches which declared that we would make a Helgoland of Guam. Think of our establishing almost at their doors, while we are endeavoring to be at peace with all the earth, a great naval fortification or base which could be of no use except for offense!

Speeches, Mr. President, have declared our intention to dominate the Pacific Ocean, and what a puerile pretense, what a miserable effort we are making at dominating the Pacific Ocean when we are trying to agitate all the unfriendly feelings of those nations which are the greatest bordering on the Pacific.

For the reasons that I have in part given, Mr. President, I shall vote for this bill, no matter what amendment is put upon it, because I think it is most important to indicate to those people beyond question what is our true intent regarding their affairs and our affairs when they come in conflict. I may at some future time more greatly enlarge upon these few remarks, but when the Senator from Arkansas so forcefully stated some of his reasons I desired to give a few others of those which control me in voting for this bill.

Mr. OWEN obtained the floor.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Will the Senator pardon me a second in connection with the thought advanced by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I have in my hand a clipping some days ago cut from the New York Herald wherein a distinguished Japanese, Dr. Toyokichi Iyenaga, declares that only fools think of American war. He says:

> For a fool he must be who sees Japan's readiness to commit harakiri in waging war against her best customer.

He speaks in an address before the Traffic Club of New York City some weeks ago in the most kindly way and in most kindly words toward America. He says it is furthest from the dream of any rational Japanese to declare war or to engage in war or to take any steps that lead to war.

I feel very much in harmony with the thought just expressed by the Senator from Delaware. I believe we magnify our troubles and will bring troubles on us by the tenor of many of the addresses we have heard, endeavoring in a way to belittle the Japanese. I recognize them as being a great nation and as a great power for good in the great Pacific.

I do not ask to have this clipping printed, but it is well worthy of mention.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I am glad to have the opportunity to support this bill providing for the independence and self-government of the Philippine people. I do not believe that the United States is at all fitted to conduct the affairs of a distant and alien people or to manage their government for them. I am glad to see the United States relieved of this responsibility and to see the Philippine people entirely free.

I approve section 34, which represents the so-called Clarke amendment, and if it were not already in the bill, I should be glad to support the proposal now made by the Senator from Nebraska, although I prefer the Clarke amendment to that of the Senator from Nebraska.

What I rose to say was that I think the United States has a very great opportunity in the passage of this bill in dealing with this matter generously, in recognizing the ability and the power of the people in the Philippines to manage their own affairs, to set an example to the world of a true spirit of altruism.

The United States never in its history did a finer thing than to give complete independence of government to the people of Cuba. It went far to establish in the minds of the nations of the world that our Republic was moved by a high and noble spirit.

Our attitude toward our distressed neighbor in Mexico; the moderation which our Government has shown; the extreme patience under great individual wrong, visited upon our citizens by the brigandage in that country; our refraining from military intervention in Mexico, has given us the confidence of South American Republics, who were greatly opposed to military intervention in Mexico. We have established our prestige throughout South America and Central America by the self-restraint of our people and their obvious desire to permit the Mexican people to govern themselves and settle the disturbed conditions among themselves in their own way.

Our attitude toward the negro slaves in our own country in giving them independence, putting them upon a plane of citizenship where they are permitted to earn their own living in their own way under the safeguard of national law has further helped to give us prestige throughout the world, because of our humane attitude toward this weak and dependent race.

Our attitude toward China in giving back the $20,000,000 of Boxer indemnity has made the Chinese believe in the disinterested friendship of the United States. It is well established that the people of China have a greater regard for the Government of the United States than they have for any other Government in the world, because of our just and generous conduct in this matter.

Our people hardly realize the conditions in China. We often think of China as an enormous aggregation of people without any power of self-direction, when in truth China is one of the great democracies in the world—and I measure my words in saying it—because they have fundamental democracy. Each village manages its own affairs, and the families manage their own business, by custom so strong, so intrenched in time, by century after century, of established usage as common law, that no imperial edict from Peking dare to interfere with the democratic control of even the villages of China.

There need be no fear of the Chinese people ever being dominated by other nations. That great nation is awakening. It is certainly influenced by humane sentiments, by wise and just principles; and as it makes available for itself the material opportunities which European and American civilization has brought into being, it will become more and more a great and stable and very rich power in the Far East.

In the Orient there has been so small a quantity of gold and silver that the relation of human labor measured in dollars and cents is utterly at a disparity with the like measure in Europe and America. Just in the degree that you have a large per capita of gold, the wealth of a man's labor measured in gold will rise. In China, where there is little or no gold, and where you measure human labor in terms of gold, a man is content to work for what appears to us to be a compensation in money utterly negligible and contemptible. Yet in China that small amount which he receives will, nevertheless, sustain life and buy for him the food, clothing, and shelter that are necessary.

I do not mean to say or to be understood as saying that with the enormous concentration of population in that country they live as well as men do in our own country, but what I call attention to is that that condition in the Orient, in Japan and in China, makes a laborer content to receive in gold a very small return for his day's labor as measured by American and European standards. The consequence is that when the Chinese come or the Japanese come upon the California coast they are content to work for a wage, measured in gold, upon which an American citizen of American birth or European extraction does not feel willing to live, and, as it is expressed in this country, it lowers ruinously the standard of living in this country. In other words, these laborers from the Orient, being content to receive a smaller reward in gold for their labor, compel American laborers in competition with them to receive a like sum, and because of that there has arisen a very mischievous conflict of interest between the laboring men of American or European extraction on the Pacific and the laborers who come in from the Orient.

The gold per capita circulation of Japan is about $1.30, and the gold in banks, including bullion, is only about $2 additional per capita in Japan, while in the United States there is about $38 per capita; in France, $48; in the British Empire, $47; in Germany, $20.10; and in Spain, $22 per capita; and it is therefore ten times more difficult to get $1 gold by labor in Japan than in our country. Japanese laborers are, therefore, willing to do the same amount of labor as an American in California for much less money than an American voter; and as the American laborer and American voter are one and the same person and exercise political control of the State's affairs, we have been disturbed nationally by the so-called Japanese problem on the Pacific.

It is because the Japanese can and will work for less than an American that this conflict of interest has arisen, and therefore that steps have been taken to prevent an ingress into our country of oriental laborers by the Chinese exclusion act and the gentlemen's agreement by which the Japanese should not enlarge their numbers in our country.

Some of the Japanese have appeared to think that protesting California citizens were moved by a mere race hostility to them, and from a fancied superiority to the Japanese as such, whereas if there is in the world a country which has shown a freedom from race hostility it is America, that has not hesitated to open its doors to all laborers throughout the world who have been accustomed to a high gold per capita and who have demanded an American wage, and who were not so skillful in competition and so economical in habits as to compel the American laborers to lower their wage. It is the good qualities of very economical habits and efficiency that has made the American voter unwilling to suffer this damaging competition.

I believe there is no race hostility in any true sense against the Japanese in our country. There has been undoubtedly a spirit of very warm admiration for these people who since the recent days of Commodore Perry have come out of their seclusion and have availed themselves so rapidly of the inventions of modern times taken from our country and from Europe. Our people wish the Japanese well, wish them happiness and success, but many of our people on the Pacific coast fear their economic competition and are unwilling to be distressed by it.

I think that in the passage of this bill we have the opportunity to show to the people of the Orient our disinterestedness in dealing with the Philippines, and in that way to attract the attention of the world to the Government of the United States and its nobility of purpose, and to attract their attention favorably to the manner in which we govern ourselves in this Republic. By our present action we may greatly promote throughout the world the sound principles of government which we have built up here in the last hundred years, principles which have been so useful in promoting human life and human happiness and establishing the stability of government that best guarantees freedom, individual liberty, and the happiness of the people governing themselves.

Mr. President, as far as I am concerned, I prefer section 34 of the present bill to the amendment proposed in lieu thereof by the Senator from Nebraska, but if section 34 were not already in the bill I should prefer any amendment that would carry out as promptly as possible the establishment for the Philippines of their complete right of self-government.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I have listened with considerable interest to the remarks of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. The Senator from Delaware made a trip to the Orient last summer and, of course, was received with the distinction which ought to have been accorded to him by the oriental powers and their people. I am inclined to think that many people sometimes mistake for a national friendship individual expressions of friendship and the hospitalities that are tendered to them when they are traveling for pleasure and the improvement of their minds.

I certainly hope, of course, as every Senator does, that the relations of the United States and the oriental powers and, indeed, of all other powers will always continue to be friendly, but, Mr. President, it is not at all certain that they always will.

The Senator from Oklahoma has stated that in his opinion no nation will ever dominate China. I hope no nation except the Chinese nation will ever dominate China, but I am not sure that that hope will be realized. We all know that within the last year the Japanese Empire has made demands upon China which China was compelled by reason of its defenseless situation and its lack of a national feeling and its helplessness in a military way, both as to an army and a navy, to accede to in large measure; and we all know that within the last month by the same group of demands, which I believe were known as group 7, if the public prints are correct in their report of those demands, the Japanese Empire insists that it shall be allowed the exclusive right to build railroads in China; that Japanese advisers shall be put in Chinese cities; that Japanese police shall police China; and that exclusive franchises to develop the resources of China shall be given to Japan.

Mr. President, the other powers of the world are distracted at this time, as everyone knows. The Senator from Oklahoma says that we are the best friend that China has. As I understand it, China has appealed to us to protect them against those demands made upon them by Japan. Whether this Nation is going to respond to that appeal or not to the satisfaction of China any Senator can form as good an opinion as I can.

We are all friendly to the Japanese and we all admire them. I cordially concur in the expressions which Senators have given as to their ability and the wonderful progress made by the Japanese people in the last half century. It does not follow from that that cause of friction will never arise between us and the Japanese Empire. Suppose Japan does take possession of China actually, though perhaps not nominally. Suppose the Chinese are compelled to accede to the Japanese demands now pending for adjudication and Japan controls the Chinese Empire, as well as its own. Suppose, then, that what we had considered to have been settled so far as we were concerned, the policy known as the open door, should be repudiated by Japan. Suppose we should be excluded from trading with China by Japan. Is any Senator prepared to say we would always be upon terms of friendliness and peace with Japan if that should take place?

It has been stated here upon the floor of the Senate by the Senator from Arkansas, if I understood his remarks, that if we insist upon the Monroe doctrine in this country, if we insist upon excluding Japanese from the Pacific coast it is certain that Japan will insist upon excluding us from the Orient, thereby setting up their own Asiatic Monroe doctrine. It seems to me if those things are done it might introduce a slight element of discord into the happy family of nations.

These remarks of mine are, of course, not in the nature of prophesying evil or prophesying trouble, but simply to emphasize my notion that it is one thing for individuals who owe allegiance to their own sovereignties to be friendly with each other when they meet upon summer trips and when they mingle on their foreign trips, but it is entirely a different proposition as to whether the nations to which they belong and whose policies are not always controlled by the individual citizens are always to be friendly to each other.

I do not think it does any good to shut our eyes or to decline to realize that there probably will be international complications and rival national policies until the brotherhood of man and the millenium are established, and the present outlook is that that is not immediately at hand.

Mr. WALSH obtained the floor.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I suppose the Senator rises to address himself to the pending question. It is half past 2, and I should think Senators had pretty well finished their lunch. I should like to have a little something approximating a quorum present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum has been suggested, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gallinger	Lodge	Smith, Ariz.

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. SHIVELY]. He is paired with the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH]. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. CHILTON. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. GOFF] on account of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, obviously every Senator in the effort to perfect this bill, now in the last stages of its consideration, ought to divest himself, so far as he can at least, of any partisan feeling which may have been generated through this protracted debate. I want to offer to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] for his consideration the suggestion—because I am sure he is desirous of having this bill in the best possible shape, if it does pass—that there is an idea embeded in the Hitchcock amendment which, upon further reflection, I think he ought to be quite willing to see incorporated in the bill in some shape. I think it can find a place very properly in section 34, which is the Clarke amendment, by an amendment to that section; and that is, the idea that we ought to prescribe the machinery by which the new government in the Philippines is to come into existence. When we admit a Territory as a State into the Union, we do not say that the Territory shall be admitted into the Union by proclamation of the President on the 1st day of January next, allowing the people of the Territory, in some form or other by initative acts of their own, to gather together for the purpose of forming a constitution and organizing a government. We prescribe the method by which the people shall assemble, adopt a constitution, and organize a government. If we take that precaution with self-governing communities in the American Union when they are to assume the dignity of statehood, when we are providing for men who are trained in the art of self-government, when we think it is injudicious and inadvisable to leave them to their own resources, how much more so ought we to make similar provision when a government is to be launched in the Philippine Islands? No provision of that character is made in the Clarke amendment.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Of course not, because of the fact that the government must be created by competent authority; and my contention is that the direction to set up a self-governing nation carries with it the power to do it in some appropriate and proper way.

Mr. WALSH. Let me ask——

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. The Senator from Montana is too good a lawyer to have any suggestion that he seriously makes swept aside by a wave of the hand. Then what objection could there be to putting at the end of line 21, after the word "thereof"——

Mr. WALSH. I had something to propose.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I propose to insert at the end of line 21, after the word "thereof," the words "full power to do so being hereby conferred upon the said Philippines acting through existing governmental agencies therein." That is all we need.

Mr. WALSH. That would in a general way express the idea I had in mind, but I was going to propose, if the Senator——

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I insist it is already in the amendment; that it is no compromise with conviction.

Mr. WALSH. I do not think so.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. What does the Senator think about it? I very frequently take his opinion on a matter like that rather than my own. What would he suggest?

Mr. WALSH. I have a draft of an amendment here to be incorporated at exactly that place which I think will serve.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. If the Senator from Montana will be good enough to read it, it might be that we could shorten the discussion on that point.

Mr. WALSH. I would suggest that the following words be there inserted:

The authority and control over the same of the government instituted by the people thereof, which shall be republican in form——

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Why put that in?

and established under a constitution to be submitted to and approved by the people of the islands, by the legislature of the same first elected under this act, or by a convention to be called by virtue of an act of such legislature.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. The amendment goes too largely into details for an organic act; that is the objection to it. It binds them down to methods when it is not at all necessary. The enlargement I have suggested will answer the purpose of the Senator, I am sure.

So far as the republican form of government is concerned, that is going to be a matter of contract between the parties acting independently and in their own right. I think the President will insist upon a very close conformity to a republican form of government. Those people, however, must be consulted as independent factors in the negotiation. They may desire some modification of the form of government; I do not know what they would be; but if we are going to concede to them absolute independence, we must concede independence to do with their own local affairs what they think will best safeguard their interests for the immediate future. I think the Senator from Montana amplifies it beyond the necessities of safety.

Mr. WALSH. Well, I should think not, for I should think that the Senator from Arkansas would quite agree with me that, unless we give specific authority to the Philippine Legislature to set up a new government there, it would have no such power.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. The amendment does that, because it authorizes them to treat with the United States Government as a separate entity. Of course, by implication, it confers on them the right to exist as an entity for that which is a specific purpose. If the Senator is satisfied with this, or anything like it——

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the Senator from Arkansas again read his proposed amendment?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I propose to insert after the word "thereof," on page 34, line 21, the words "full power to do so being hereby conferred upon the said Philippines acting through existing governmental agencies therein," so as to read: "As a separate and self-governing nation and acknowledge the authority and control over the same of the government instituted by the people thereof, full power to do so being hereby conferred upon the said Philippines acting through existing governmental agencies therein."

That is to say, the legislature, the governor, and such other things as may be necessary to formulate the necessary details. If they want a constitutional convention, let them call one; and if they do not want it, they need not call it.

Mr. WALSH. I should not agree to that. That is what I am afraid of. That language is altogether too comprehensive in its character. I think we ought not to recognize any government of the Philippine Islands except a government that is established in pursuance of provisions made by the present government under a constitution which shall be adopted by the people of that country.

I am not particularly captious about the republican form of government, but I do think that we ought to provide for the calling of a constitutional convention in the Philippine Islands or that we ought to provide that the legislature itself may constitute such constitutional convention, and that that convention shall submit to the people a constitution which shall be their organic act.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. We would then be following them down after they should have been established. That is the trouble, and there is the vice in the Senator's suggestion. We are dealing with them as equals; we are erecting them into an independent nation, fit to be dealt with as such, and we must concede to them the power and discretion to do in that behalf as they may see proper.

Mr. WALSH. Exactly; but I think at the same time we may very properly prescribe some orderly procedure by which——

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. We do provide that the President of the United States shall supervise the whole transaction, from beginning to end; and I take it for granted that he will have some patriotic interest not only in the Philippine Islands but in the dignity and self-respect and prestige of his own Government, and that he will not consent to anything being done which ought not to be done. In all our external relations we are represented by the President.

Mr. WALSH. It is quite evident that I shall not be able to convince the Senator from Arkansas that we ought to prescribe in a general way the method by which——

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I desire to make one suggestion more. There is nothing in the amendment which prohibits the Filipinos from adopting a constitution and a republican form of government in the most ultra sense of the term, if they see proper to do so. That is a discretion I want to leave them.

Mr. WALSH. I agree with the Senator fully about that; but the act does not prescribe the method by which they shall go about doing that. It leaves the Filipinos without any provision at all and with no power in the existing government of the Philippine Islands, unless the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas——

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I want to suggest to the Senator from Montana that when we attempt to make specific provisions with relation to procedure we are apt to get into difficulty. For instance, there is a suggestion here that the constitution should be framed by the Legislature of the Philippine Islands; and another suggestion is that it shall be made by a constitutional convention, the delegates to which shall be selected by the people. In all of the States which have adopted constitutions, we have found that the legislature does not frame them. The people select men for the purpose of going to a constitutional convention; and oftentimes they do not select the same kind of men they send to the legislature. The legislature is elected on different principles, whereas for a constitutional convention the very highest order of talent is selected—men who would not think of holding an office such as that of a legislator.

Mr. WALSH. Will the Senator from Colorado allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. WALSH. The draft of the amendment which I have proposed here provides that the constitution shall be framed either by the legislature or that the legislature may call a constitutional convention.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That would be better than designating either one.

Mr. WALSH. That is the way it is here.

Mr. SHAFROTH. My judgment is that it ought to be left to their discretion. They are going to try to frame a good government for themselves.

Mr. WALSH. That is what I propose.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It would seem to me that the modification of the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], which he has read, embodies all the means necessary to that end; at least I think the less specific procedure which is prescribed, the less difficulty those people will have in establishing a government.

Mr. WALSH. I thought I was making it so general that no one could find any fault with it, namely, a simple provision that the legislature to be elected under this act should frame a constitution and submit it to the people; or, if they chose to do so, should call a constitutional convention to frame a constitution to be submitted to the people. It seems to me that that much we ought to do, and we ought to do it because that is the way we have always done it when we have launched new self-governing communities within the bounds of our own country.

Now, there is another thing which I should like to submit to the Senator from Arkansas. His amendment provides to this effect:

> For the purpose of a complete and prompt compliance with this direction, the President is hereby invested with full power and authority to make such orders and regulations and to enter into such negotiations with the authorities of said Philippines or others as may be necessary to finally settle and adjust all property rights and other relations as between the United States and the said Philippines, and to cause to be acknowledged, respected, and safeguarded all of the personal and property rights of citizens or corporations of the United States and of other countries resident or engaged in business in said Philippines—

That, of course, refers to such accidental conditions as may exist attendant upon the withdrawal of our sovereignty. I think that we ought not to omit to require of the Philippine people a provision in their constitution under which the government of those islands shall assume all of the obligations that we undertook in the treaty of Paris, and that likewise is in accordance with the practice that has been universally observed in the admission of the States into the Union.

I have before me here the enabling act under which the four great States of North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, and Washington were admitted into the Union, and in the case of every one of those States we required that they should provide in their constitution that the new State should assume all obligations of the Territory. This is the language:

> The third condition of the constitution was that the debts and liabilities of said Territories shall be assumed and paid by said States, respectively.

Now, why should we not exact of the Philippines that they put such a provision as that in their constitution? Of course they may change it; they may amend it at some time subsequently; after we have lost all control of them they may choose to repudiate these obligations. Of course, such a thing is scarcely to be expected; but we ought, it seems to me, to require them to do as much in the way of promises as was required of the Territories of this Union when we admitted them into the Union of States.

This language was not incorporated in this enabling act because we were fearful that the new States would repudiate the obligations of the Territories, but it was incorporated so as to give a sort of assurance to the creditors and to put the new States financially and with respect to their credit upon as safe a footing as we could possibly do. So, I suggest to the Senator that it would be wise to incorporate in this provision such an amendment as I have suggested.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I supposed that we could hardly use terms more comprehensive than—

> To cause to be acknowledged, respected, and safeguarded all of the personal and property rights of citizens or corporations of the United States and other countries.

By that provision we have practically done for the creditor about all that we can do in dealing with a sovereign. I do not know of any other way to deal with a debt with a view to securing it than to require that it shall be respected, safeguarded, and acknowledged.

Mr. WALSH. Let me ask the Senator, as he is a very excellent lawyer, if that does not give the President power to make rules and regulations by which——

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. "Orders and stipulations" would be a good substitute for that; but it just happened that I thought of those words when I wrote out the amendment. There are many other words in the English language which would express the same idea. Of course, as able and critical a lawyer as is the Senator from Montana could make a play on any particular words we might use. If the Senator simply wants this bill made plainer in respect to the things that I now insist are in it, I have not any objection to his framing the language. If his intention is to go beyond that for the purpose of introducing matters that will complicate the effort to put the new government in the Philippines promptly into effect, I will reserve the right to call his attention to the fact in the hope that I may convince him that it is not good policy to do so.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, if the Senator from Montana had any such purpose, he would not appeal to the Senator from Arkansas to incorporate these provisions in the bill.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. The Senator might safely do so, I am sure, because he could hardly make a suggestion that I would not treat respectfully, even if I was unable to agree with it.

Mr. WALSH. I thought so. Now, if the Senator will give me his attention, I should like to inquire of him just exactly what kind of rules and regulations the President of the United States could make under the provisions to which he has referred which would be in the nature of an obligation upon the part of the new government to pay its debts?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I will suggest one. The President could say, "I think it essential to the efficiency and stability of your government that you shall deal honestly with everybody who has incurred a debt against you; and in order that that may be made manifest, I say that in any instrument that you adopt as your charter of government you shall make that recognition."

Mr. WALSH. Exactly.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. That is rule and regulation enough.

Mr. WALSH. Then, it is my purpose to put that in the act in this way——

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. If the Senator wants to enumerate everything the President may do, the Revised Statutes would be a very small volume compared to what we must write.

Mr. WALSH. After the amendment which I suggested a moment ago, I would add this language:

Said constitution shall provide—

Taking this from the Hitchcock amendment—

Said constitution shall provide that the new Philippine government shall fulfill the obligations of the United States concerning the Philippine Islands incurred by the treaty of Paris or arising out of the occupation of the islands, including the personal and property rights of individuals and corporations of the United States and other countries, and the safeguarding of such Philippine government loans and other obligations as have heretofore been authorized by act of Congress.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Is the Senator authorized to say that if we shall include after the word "thereof," in line 21, some general language such as he indicated a moment ago, or the provision he now reads at the place he indicates, it will stop this discussion so far as he and his friends are concerned? We have taken up a good deal of time on nonessentials and we are getting further apart as we undertake to discuss them, overlooking the great purpose that we are all supposed to have in view.

Mr. WALSH. I hope not.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. If the Senator has something there that is in the nature of an ultimatum we will agree about it or disagree and take the time to settle it.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator from Montana is not authorized to speak for anybody but himself, but I trust that we shall very speedily reach a conclusion, because I am anxious about getting up the bill next on the calendar.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. At what point in the bill does the Senator propose the amendment requiring the assumption by the Philippine government of the obligations imposed on the United States by the treaty of Paris?

Mr. WALSH. I suggest that it go in just where the Senator indicated that an amendment might be acceptable to him, to follow the word "thereof," in line 21.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I will ask the Senator to read what he proposes to incorporate there.

Mr. WALSH. "Said constitution"——

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I think it is preferable not to put in anything about the constitution or the form of government. That is implied. That, I think, could be looked after. I do not know what the Philippine people will want to do with that when they get to it. I take it for granted that the President of the United States will insist very vigorously that some decided respect shall be paid to the form of government in which we have trained them up to this time; and I think the provision the Senator suggests would limit the scope of his authority and induce complications that may create delay.

Mr. WALSH. I will say to the Senator that, if the amendment which I have suggested were adopted, then this language as it stands in the so-called Hitchcock amendment would be entirely appropriate:

Said constitution shall provide that the new Philippine government shall fulfill the obligations of the United States concerning the Philippine Islands incurred by the treaty of Paris or arising out of the occupation of the islands, including the personal and property rights of individuals and corporations of the United States and other countries, and the safeguarding of such Philippine government loans and other obligations as have heretofore been authorized by act of Congress.

But if the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas is incorporated, all we would have to do would be to change a word or two at the commencement by saying "any constitution adopted"——

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Where would the Senator put that?

Mr. WALSH. I would put that immediately after what the Senator has proposed there.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. "Any constitution"?

Mr. WALSH. But I do not think the language proposed by the Senator from Arkansas meets the situation, and I shall reserve the right to tender the language which I have drafted here. I thought it would be quite acceptable to the Senator.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. It forecloses the negotiations up to that point and proposes to lay down a rule that involves several elections and much delay. We have limited the period here so that it does not leave much time for preliminaries; they must be gotten out of the way promptly.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I have expressedly provided that the legislature first elected shall do this.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Well, "first elected." That comes out of the four-year period. It may be possible that the present legislature can start into operation some part of the machinery necessary to consummate this withdrawal, and I would not care to hinder them from doing so. If we should say "until a legislature can be elected under the law we are now about to pass," a considerable part of the four-year period might be gone before all that could be done.

Mr. SIMMONS. Why could not the Senator provide for the present legislature to do this work, instead of the legislature first elected?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Any legislature.

Mr. WALSH. I will tell the Senator why. The present legislature, as the Senator knows, is appointive in the upper chamber.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is a serious objection.

Mr. WALSH. That is the only objection I have; otherwise, I would be quite willing to provide that the present legislature might take the action proposed; but it does not by any means follow that the members of the upper branch are really the members that would be chosen by the people. I should like to have this constitution emanate from the representatives chosen by the people, and to have it drafted either by the legislature or by a constitutional convention which that legislature may call.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, the differences between us are that the Senator wants a constitution adopted and he wants a republican form of government to somebody's satisfaction. I think that is a matter that is involved in the general power delegated to the President of the United States. I take it for granted that he will have some interest in the matter and will bring to the consideration and disposition of it all the information that is obtainable, and that he will conform as nearly to our traditions and sympathies as he can in dealing with the independent government which is then to start out upon the supreme mission of looking after its own affairs in a part of the world where republics are not the rule.

Mr. WALSH. Well, I ask the Senator just exactly how that will operate? There may be two or three rival governments set up in the Philippine Islands. What will the President do in a case of that kind?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. The President will decide which one is the government that should be recognized. That is an old question in our history and policy.

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. The President represents the United States Government. This act is not going to send out the Philippine Islands to be administered exclusively by the Filipinos or by any faction of them. The strong hand of the United States Government, represented by the President of the United States, will be there at every minute of time and in control over the events necessary to consummate the operation that we are to provide for now.

The objections raised by the Senator from Montana present the same line of objection that has been urged all along, and they carry with them mistrust on the part of the President to meet the responsibilities that are imposed upon him. The inference is that, unless we watch him and follow him down to the utmost details of his final action, he is likely to do something wrong, or is likely to do something that would meet the condemnation of the Congress of the United States. I do not take that view of the Presidency, no matter who occupies the presidential office. I think the President of the United States will comprehend in its clearness the purpose that the people of the United States have in view when such legislation as this is passed; that it will be carried out in good faith; and that, as nearly as he can, he will conform to the traditions and policies of this country and will reflect its principles in the new Philippine government when it is handed over to its own people; and when he shall have done that he has done about all he can do, no matter how ample we might make the terms of this proposed statute.

I can imagine conditions that would require, to be completely dealt with, a volume of laws as large as the Revised Statutes of the United States and there would still be something that would not be covered. In dealing with great international and national problems of this character a very simple and comprehensive authority is all that is required. The President of the United States represents us in all our foreign relations; he receives ministers from foreign Governments, and thereby recognizes their existence. It is an old subject matter in the group of powers that are lodged with the President, and I find no more difficulty in assuming that he will do what he ought to do in this particular connection than in many other important matters where power has been intrusted to him and successfully exercised by him. You can take any section, you can take any phrase, you can take any provision of this amendment and add something to it or substitute something for it and it will be just as good as it is now, but we can keep that up eternally if it is our purpose to do so.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I ask the attention of the Senate for a short while. My anxiety to see this business brought to a close is such that I venture reluctantly to occupy any of the time of the Senate now, but I wish to make one last appeal for good faith and just treatment of the Philippine people.

I have no intention of attempting to compare the relative merits of the Clarke amendment and the Hitchcock substitute. I have examined and compared them with such care as I could, and I feel obliged to say that I am unable to detect any essential difference between them. I have not been consulted in any practical or potential way by anybody in the preparation of either of these proposals. I make no complaint of that; of course there was no reason why I should have been consulted any more than another. I refer to that fact now merely to emphasize the statement that I have neither directly nor indirectly any pride of authorship to influence my judgment or action. As between the distinguished authors of these rival propositions I take no side, and as between their suggestions I make no invidious comparisons. I look upon both with an absolutely impartial eye.

There is one provision in the Hitchcock substitute which is almost identical with a like provision in the Clarke amendment to which I object and against which I protest now, as I have heretofore, and it is to that one proposition that I desire to address myself at this time. After I have read the provision to which I refer and have briefly expressed my views with respect to it I shall offer an amendment. I do not care whether the amendment is offerel to the Hitchcock proposal or to the Clarke proposal; it is, of course, equally objectionable in either. If we had already voted upon the Hitchcock substitute and it had been lost, I would offer my amendment to the Clarke amendment. All I have in mind to do is to take the judgment of the Senate, and I do not care whether it be taken upon the one or the other of these propositions.

The amendment to which I advert is this: I am reading now from the Hitchcock substitute, but it is almost a literal reproduction of a similar provision in the Clarke amendment:

> If, however, the President shall find at any time within the period of limitation provided above that the condition of the external or internal affairs of the islands or the international relations of the United States require it, or if a constitution as above provided be not adopted, he may by proclamation extend for the period of one year beyond the four years above provided the time for taking action under this act and thus afford to Congress an opportunity, in its discretion, to consider further the Philippine question, but any such extension of time by the President shall not otherwise suspend or nullify the operative force of this act unless Congress shall hereafter so direct.

As I have said, with slight changes in the phraseology the provision I have just read from the so-called Hitchcock substitute is to be found in the Clarke amendment.

Mr. President, I have heard much said here on the floor in praise and support of the Democratic policy, as announced repeatedly in national platforms, in favor of releasing our domination of the Philippine Islands and conferring independence upon them. Senators on the other side have likewise repeatedly referred to those platform declarations, but with disapproval. I well recall that in 1900 we Democrats fought a national battle on that very issue, which we then called the paramount issue. I am unqualifiedly and unconditionally in favor of carrying out that policy. I do not hesitate to return to the Senator from Arkansas my acknowledgments for the service he has rendered in projecting this question in the form that he has. He took a step in advance of what I was trying to do when I counseled with the Senator from Nebraska about so changing the "whereas" in the bill he reported as to hold out a distinct promise, a distinct declaration, of our purpose to confer independence upon the Philippines. While that very matter was pending the Senator from Arkansas took his advanced step and proposed to embody the proposition in this bill as a positive enactment. It was, from my point of view, a sensible thing to do, a wise thing to do, and undoubtedly a Democratic thing to do.

Mr. President, if the provision which I have read is to remain in this law, in my opinion we will accomplish little in the way of conferring independence on the Philippines. We certainly would not confer independence on the Philippines if that provision is left in. We would put the matter up in the air, where it would float in a condition of uncertainty. The President, no matter who he may be now or hereafter, is given power, in both the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas and the proposed substitute of the Senator from Nebraska, whenever, in his opinion, formed at any time within four years, that the internal or external affairs of the Philippine Islands are such that he thinks he should do so, he can issue a proclamation postponing the operation of this section 34 and send the whole business back to Congress. To do what? Here is the language of the bill:

> And thus afford to Congress an opportunity, in its discretion, to consider further the Philippine question, but any such extension of time by the President shall not otherwise suspend or nullify the operative force of this act—> unless Congress shall hereafter so direct.

If the unfortunate event should happen in November of the election of a Republican President, considering the attitude of the Republican Party upon this question as often expressed, does the Senator doubt that that President would find good reason for sending the matter back to Congress? And have you any reason to think, even though the Congress itself should remain Democratic, that the Filipinos would ever enjoy the supposed benefits of this section? And if the Republicans had control of both branches of Congress you know what would happen.

Mr. President and Senators, I tell you it seems to me that we are not acting in good faith and fairly, so far as the Philippine people are concerned. As I said the other day, we are but breathing into their ears promises which in all probability will be broken to the hope. And what would that signify? It would leave the people of the Philippines in a disturbed condition—a disturbed condition that might be in its effects dangerous to the peace.

For myself I want now, unconditionally and certainly, to confer independence upon the Philippine people. I do not want any strings to the proposition to be held in the hands of a President to pull as he pleases. We would not confer independence by this act as it stands. We are merely making a suggestion of independence to the President of the United States and a future Congress. I really believe, sir, that I would prefer a declaration such as the "whereas" to the bill as originally reported, declaring our purpose, than this legislative proposal. I believe the effect of such a declaration, the probable eventualities of it, would be fuller of hope.

Now, sir, the motion I am about to make is to strike out that clause in the bill to which I object. At this time I shall be obliged to offer the amendment to the substitute. I would offer it just as willingly—and perhaps it might be better, if the parliamentary situation permitted—to the amendment agreed to on yesterday.

Just a word before I offer the amendment. On day before yesterday the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] moved to strike out this clause of the Clarke amendment. I had started to read it, but it is hardly worth while. Everybody is familiar with it. It is the clause which authorized the President to enter into treaties with foreign nations to guarantee the independence of the Philippines against outside force. I voted for that clause on the day before yesterday not because I liked it or approved it, for I stated on the floor of the Senate more than once that I did not altogether approve it, and offered suggestions to amend it. I did not offer any motion to amend, but merely suggestions to the Senators in charge of the bill and the amendments to the bill, and left it at that; but I propose now to offer an amendment.

I voted for the proposition to authorize the President to make such treaties as I have indicated—that is, to safeguard the sovereignty of the Philippines against outside interference or force; in other words, to neutralize them—because there was nothing else better presented, and I would rather have that than nothing. In fact, I would rather have had that than anything I proposed, or what I now propose, if I believed there was the least probability or possibility of getting such treaties. I have never believed that foreign nations like Great Britain, Germany, or Japan would enter into an agreement with the United States obligating themselves to use, if need be, their armies and navies to uphold the independence of the Philippines against foreign assault. I was willing to give the President an opportunity to try to make such conventions, although I had little faith that he would succeed.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] moved to strike out that clause, and I followed the leadership of the author of the amendment in voting against that motion; but it was carried. The clause was stricken out, and there is now nothing in the bill on that subject.

What are we about to do? There seems to be prevalent in this Chamber a mad desire or passion to shake ourselves loose from the Philippines, to get rid of them at all hazards, without much regard for the consequences either to ourselves or to them. How often have I heard it said, and how often have you heard it said, "Let us get rid of the Philippines; no matter how, but get rid of them." It is like that old fellow who said to his son, "Make money; no matter how, but make money." "Get rid of the Philippines; no matter how, but get rid of them; no matter what happens."

Mr. President, I can not sympathize with that view. I need not repeat what I have said on this floor and off of this floor so often, that no man laments more deeply than I the fact that we ever thrust our hand into the Philippines to hold them; but we did. They did not ask us to do it. We did it against their will and at the point of the sword. We have exercised sovereignty and power over them for half a generation. It does not matter how beneficial or advantageous our administration there has been to them. I think it has been in many ways most helpful, but I think also many things have been done which we would have been glad to have left undone. But the point is, Mr. President, that we have held the people of the islands under our sovereignty. They were at war to shake off the power of Spain. Their soldiers fought with ours to accomplish that result. They did not fight with our soldiers in order that there might be an exchange of one foreign power for another to rule over them. We held them by superior force, by a power they were not able to withstand, for 17 years. However some Senators may regard this matter, I can not escape the profound belief that we owe these people a moral obligation to do what we can for them at this moment, to do everything we can to guard them against the dangers that will lie lurking about them. Before we turn them loose to strive to work out their own destinies, in God's name why should we not do what we can for their safety? We would do nothing in that way by this bill as it now stands.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to ask him one question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SAULSBURY in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. STONE. Surely.

Mr. SIMMONS. Suppose the Senator's amendment should be adopted——

Mr. STONE. The Senator has not heard the amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. I thought I heard the Senator state what he was going to do. He said he would move to strike out——

Mr. STONE. I said I would move to strike out and substitute.

Mr. SIMMONS. Oh! I had not heard the substitute.

Mr. STONE. No; I am going to present it in a moment.

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not understand the Senator to say he would offer a substitute. I understood him to say he was going to move to strike out that clause.

Mr. STONE. I did, and then to insert.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then I will withhold my question.

Mr. STONE. Yes.

Now, Mr. President, I send this amendment to the desk and ask to have it read. It refers to the Hitchcock substitute, because that happens to be the matter now before the Senate, and I wish merely to take the judgment of the Senate on it. Afterwards, notwithstanding the substitute may be voted down, if there should prove to be any substantial support for the idea embodied in the amendment I am offering, I would feel at liberty to propose it to the Clarke amendment if it should come before the Senate.

I ask the Secretary to read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. In the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], beginning at page 2, line 18, with the word "If," strike out the remainder of the proposed amendment and in lieu of the words stricken out insert:

As soon after the passage of this act as he may deem advisable the President shall invite the cooperation of the principal nations especially interested in the affairs of that part of the world in which the Philippine Islands are located to enter into a treaty or convention, jointly or severally, with the United States obligating or pledging the high contracting parties to any such treaty or convention to recognize and respect the sovereignty and independence of the said Philippine Islands and the government thereof.

Mr. STONE. I am now ready to hear an expression from the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I suggest that the Senator divide his amendment into two parts. First, there is the proposition whether the latter part of the substitute proposed by me shall be stricken out. Some might vote for that who would not vote for the Senator's provision. Others might vote for the Senator's provision as an addition to the substitute. So I suggest to the Senator that he divide his amendment.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, if this amendment which I have proposed should be agreed to and written into whatever we may adopt here, whether it be the Clarke amendment as it stands now or the substitute of the Senator from Nebraska, it would have two effects. It would eliminate the provision I move to strike out, which provides that the President shall have power and authority under certain conditions named to withhold the grant of independence, issue a proclamation postponing it, and sending the whole question back to Congress to be acted upon in his discretion. Getting rid of that, the remainder of the Clarke amendment or the Hitchcock substitute would grant unconditional independence to the Philippines, and that is what I wish to do.

Secondly, if what I propose should be consented to it would enable the President to negotiate with the principal powers interested in the Orient, those most likely to feel interested in intruding upon the sovereignty and independence we confer, to the end that they will agree with the United States that the powers signing the treaty, including the United States, to pledge themselves to observe, to regard, to respect the independence and sovereignty that we have granted to the people there. That would be the effect. In the name of heaven, why should we not make the effort? If the President should fail, certainly we have not lost anything, and it would put those nations to the test. We might not be able to make that agreement with all of them, but if we made it with some of them the great powers whom we might imagine would be especially interested in grasping these possessions and appropriating them, there would be a tremendous moral influence that would sweep the world. I say a moral influence would prevail if that agreement should be made with only some of the great powers. Those failing would put themselves under suspicion at once, and I think they would hesitate for a good while to justify that suspicion by aggressive action.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. STONE. I do.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think probably the Senator did not understand the purport of my suggestion. I will illustrate it to him. I would be willing to take this amendment, if it were a separate amendment, as an addition to my substitute. I could not vote for it if it were conditional upon striking out a part of the substitute. Therefore I suggested to the Senator that we first vote upon striking out the portion he objected to, and, after that vote, upon the adoption of the amendment proposing to insert certain words.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, the part I move to strike out is the part I have an insuperable objection to, because if you leave it in the law it would be but a shadowy offering that would disappear like the mists of the morning. It would not be realized, in my opinion. It is a dream, but it would be a most disturbing dream in the minds of the Philippine people. They would be agitated by it; they would be expecting it; they would be watching for events; and if in a year or two years the President should issue his proclamation postponing the operation of this act and send it back to Congress, I can well imagine the storm of passion that would sweep over the people there.

No, sir; I can not personally agree to the separation of my amendment. In God's truth, I care as much for the amendment which I propose as a substitute. If the original text which I move to eliminate is kept in, I think we accomplish nothing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK].

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let the amendment be read again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read it.

The Secretary again read Mr. STONE's amendment to the amendment.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I think we had better define the parliamentary status of the question before we proceed much further. I have not any objection to voting on the proposition to amend the substitute, but I want it understood that we are not thereby precluded from offering an amendment to the original. I take it for granted that we are proceeding under Rule XVIII, which provides that—

If the question in debate contains several propositions, any Senator may have the same divided, except a motion to strike out and insert—which shall not be divided; but the rejection of a motion to strike out and insert one proposition shall not prevent a motion to strike out and insert a different proposition; nor shall it prevent a motion simply to strike out; nor shall the rejection of a motion to strike out prevent a motion to strike out and insert. But pending a motion to strike out and insert, the part to be striken out and the part to be inserted shall each be regarded for the purpose of amendment as a question; and motions to amend the part to be stricken out shall have precedence.

In the regular course an amendment to the original text would be first in order, but it may facilitate the attainment of a basis of opinion to take this vote. However, I want it distinctly understood that by permitting the vote to be taken without that reservation we are not precluded from offering an amendment to the original text before the final vote is taken.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I should like to have the amendment to the amendment stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be again read.

The Secretary again read the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, as I understand the proposition of the Senator from Missouri, he is now trying to perfect the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, and he is doing that with the intention, if the improvement is adopted, and the amendment is not carried, that he will move a similar amendment to the so-called Clarke amendment which is now contained in the bill.

I should like to say to the Senator, speaking personally for myself, I shall vote against the proposed improvement of the Hitchcock amendment, because I do not myself believe that the submission of such a question to the voters in the Philippine Islands as the adoption of a constitution can, under any circumstances within the period of the next two or four years, be anything but a farce. That electorate at that time, under the terms of this bill, will be composed of some 800,000 or 900,000 voters, two-thirds of whom will have never before cast a vote, who do not have any common language of communication, and who would be utterly unable from their lack of knowledge of a republican form of government to express an intelligent opinion upon it.

I therefore do not want to take any steps toward improving the Hitchcock amendment, as that would leave it perhaps to be adopted as a substitute for the provision in the bill as it stands. On that ground I shall vote against the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to the amendment. I do not know what I will do later on.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK].

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I ask that the amendment be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again read.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Missouri proposes to amend the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska as follows:

Beginning with the word "If," in line 18, page 2, strike out down to and including line 5, page 3, in the following words:

If, however, the President shall find at any time within the period of limitation provided above that the condition of the external or internal affairs of the islands or the international relations of the United States require it, or if a constitution as above provided be not adopted, he may by proclamation extend for the period of one year beyond the four years above provided the time for taking action under this act and thus afford to Congress an opportunity, in its discretion, to consider further the Philippine question, but any such extension of time by the President shall not otherwise suspend or nullify the operative force of this act unless Congress shall hereafter so direct.

And in lieu of the words thus stricken out insert:

As soon after the passage of this act as he may deem advisable the President shall invite the cooperation of the principal nations especially interested in the affairs of that part of the world in which the Philippine Islands are located to enter into a treaty or convention, jointly or severally, with the United States obligating or pledging the high contracting parties to any such treaty or convention to recognize and respect the sovereignty and independence of the said Philippine Islands and the government thereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington calls for the yeas and nays on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FALL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON]. In his absence I refrain from voting.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] and vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE], who is absent on official business.

Mr. HARDING. I will transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. He is not present, though I have voted. I will transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] and let my vote stand.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I was requested to announce the absence of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and to state that he has a general pair with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY].

Mr. CHILTON. I wish to inquire whether the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. CHILTON. I have a pair with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested to announce that the Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY].

Mr. JAMES. I desire to inquire if the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. JAMES. I have a pair with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 60, as follows:

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

So Mr. HITCHCOCK's amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question recurs on concurring in the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I have taken no part in this discussion and, owing to unavoidable absence, have not been privileged to listen to all of the debate. I feel, however, a very deep concern in what we are about to do, and I rise reluctantly to say that I regard this unnecessary controversy as a very great misfortune if, indeed, it is not a national calamity at the present time.

I was here when the events leading up to the Spanish-American War took place. Together with some of the Senators now on the floor, I became intimately familiar with some of the reasons which led up to the declaration of war against Spain. Spain had governed her colonies in this hemisphere with a cruel and relentless hand; the people of Cuba were being starved to death; their lives imperiled; their homes destroyed; their land devastated; their government a mockery, a relic of the Middle Ages. I saw thousands of orphan children, made so by the cruel blows of the machete. I saw them in the last stages of starvation in Habana and in Matanzas. My friend the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] and myself witnessed wrongs there that should never be forgotten. President McKinley was forced into war against his will. Congress reflecting the general sentiment of the country at that time sought to put an end to such misrule.

As a result of war those Spanish islands fell into our hands, not by design, but by accident. Who can say that it was not providential? We have administered the delicate affairs which fell to our lot as a result of war with a just and kindly disposition toward those people. We have perhaps done more for them in the brief period of our government than was done for them in the preceding hundred years. Our soldiers have given their lives upon countless battle fields that those people might have larger liberty and a fairer opportunity in the world, and now, as we begin to see the results of our labors, and now, as the full fruition of our prayers are beginning to be realized, our work is to be ruthlessly undone to satisfy party expediency. Is there a Senator upon the other side of the Chamber who will now rise and say that our Government has been harmful to the Filipino? Is there a Senator upon the other side of the Chamber who will charge the administration of Filipino affairs with delinquency or crime? No. Has not our Government been wholesome and helpful to those people? If so, why should these islands be cast like a derelict upon the high seas, a temptation to international selfishness and greed, perhaps to be claimed under the first possible excuse by ambitious empire builders for purposes of subjugation and exploit.

The attitude of Senators upon the other side of the Chamber now is not new. The Paris commission had scarcely made its report, the parchment ink was scarcely dry, before you began to bombard this Government with complaints. Almost the first party platform of your party after the Spanish-American War expressed doubt and fear of our administration of these distant islands. It is fitting that this measure should be brought into the Chamber by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], for the cradle of discontent in the Philippine Islands was first rocked by the hand of a Nebraskan, who spread the doctrine of discontent before our wards and assailed our motives in a language familiar in the Archipelago. In three national conventions he attempted to overturn the policy of the beloved McKinley; in three national campaigns we were assailed for misgovernment of the Philippines, our motives misinterpreted and our purposes belied. Hundreds of American soldier boys went to their death because of the encouragement given to the rebels in the Philippine Islands by our friends upon the other side of the Chamber. You begged for votes that the $20,000,000 might be paid as bonus money to Spain, and the voices that answered "Aye" were the first to distrust and complain of the administration of the Philippine Islands.

Mr. President, these doleful forebodings of Democracy were unheeded by the American people. One after another of the champions of surrender of the Philippines went to their political death unmourned and unremembered. You even charged that McKinley wanted to be an emperor and wear a crown. How little you thought he would so soon wear a crown, not made by human hands but woven out of the fabric of the human heart; and the man you slandered and villified and traduced became the idol of your country, while those who slandered him were pushed into oblivion by an outraged public opinion; and when he died every industry that had sprung into being by his magic power was stopped for a full five minutes during the moment of his burial as a tribute to his memory, while people of every tongue tenderly sang his requiem. All the world recognized in him a saintly martyr, and yet your party went up and down the country charging that that kindly man wanted to be an emperor of the Philippine Islands and wear a crown! Scarcely a single Democrat of any prominence that gave utterance to that thought survived it; and, in my humble judgment, you will not survive this shameless crime against a dependent people which you are committing to-day.

You believe in pulling down the flag, and yet you never pulled one down that the people did not make you put it up again, and you never put one up that the people did not make you pull it down. When I came to Congress Paramount Blount had just pulled down the flag in Hawaii, and the American people forced Mr. Cleveland to put it back. You are flag pullers, and every time you exercise your temporary prerogative you displease your own countrymen and astonish the world. And you are pulling down the flag in the East just at the moment when the President "proposes to have the biggest navy in the world" to insure its protection; just on the eve of our international mastery of the seas you are acknowledging your inability to manage our affairs in the Far East, weakly scurrying for cover, and pulling down our flag where it was placed by the valor and the patriotism of American soldiers and sailors upon land and upon sea. Shades of gallant Dewey and brave Lawton, where are we drifting in this night of gloom?

No thought of conquest in the Philippines. The news of Dewey's victory in Manila Bay I will never forget. Our Asiatic Fleet had been instructed to strike the enemy. The people of Washington had gone apprehensively to their beds, but with a prayer upon their lips for our sailor boys in distant seas.

Suddenly there rang out upon the midnight air the cry of "Extra papers!" and instantly, as though by magic, homes were lighted, lamps shone from the windows, men, women, and children, with blanched and anxious faces, rushed to their doors to get the news from Dewey which should determine the weal or woe of our sailor boys. My God, how our hearts thrilled and our eyes filled with joyous tears as our hopes were realized! Dewey had met the Spanish fleet and silenced the guns of Cavite without the loss of a ship or a man!

And America found herself in Manila Bay. The fleets of other nations were there ready to take advantage of any fortuitous opportunity. The German Admiral von Dietrich was there, active, alert, and determined, with well-defined purpose in his mind, and his conduct at every step betokening opposition to our authority, doing everything he could to annoy and hamper Commodore Dewey. He was finally "called," and his conduct emphasized the necessity of following up the victory just achieved! Protection must be given the people of Manila, natives and foreigners, and the American forces were equal to every emergency, and our country rang with enthusiastic approval. Then that memorable interview between Dewey and Admiral von Dietrich, which has become historic, took place, when Commodore Dewey said to the German admiral, "You act very much as though you wanted war with the United States; and if you want war with the United States, Admiral, you can have it, and you can have it now." There was nothing for Dewey to do but to bring order out of chaos or prove himself utterly unequal to a great American responsibility. Congress made him an admiral for life, and he grimly met every crisis with honor.

Democrats North and South gave comfort to Aguinaldo, who was in rebellion against our authority in the Philippines. You furnished him most of the comfort and all of the enthusiasm that he possessed. Your criticisms of your own Government, your unkindly reference to the President, your denunciation of our plans, gave comfort to the enemies of the United States in the Philippine Islands. You made our task more difficult than it would have been, and scores of American boys went to their death because of the resistance to our plans which you encouraged.

Mr. President, after 16 years of kindly, intelligent, generous supervision of their affairs, after we have taught them the beneficent aspects of government, and lifted them out of the gloom and misery of their serfdom, you propose to scuttle and pull down the flag and turn them adrift. God knows where or to whom they will be accountable in the future.

If we can not govern the Philippine Islands because of their geographical location, in the name of Heaven why do you not release the Aleutian Islands and Hawaii, where problems of serious import becloud our pathway. If it is a mere question of geography, get back to your continental territory, be consistent, again pull down the flag in Hawaii, and tell the people of Porto Rico that, if they are lawless and rebellious and do not conform to the desires of our Government, you will make a place for them in the family of nations, if you can persuade the American people to trust you further with public authority.

Oh, Mr. President, I can not believe that this is the present judgment of Senators in this Chamber. I think it is a recurrence of their early malady; I think it is the inherited tendency of those Democrats who tried to poison the public mind regarding the Philippines 16 years ago.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Pardon me, I must decline to yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). The Senator from Michigan declines to yield.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I ask the other side to be consistent. You are extending your suzerainty over the countries of the Western Hemisphere; you are encroaching upon the islands of the sea; you already have your soldiers in Santo Domingo and in Haiti; you are already taking the first step toward the "benevolent assimilation" of the Central American States to the south of us. Treaties now pending in this body provide for a closer relationship with them than has ever existed before; you are making us responsible for their misgovernment. If you are consistent, you will get back to your continental territory at one stroke of the pen. We have more territory than the Democratic Party can govern happily or prosperously.

Mr. President, the American people, in my judgment, will repudiate your action to-day. The American people do not want their flag taken down in the Philippines. Millions of our countrymen thought that we would have been vastly better off if we had kept Cuba under our flag as we kept Porto Rico.

No, Mr. President, this is an unjustifiable and uncalled for surrender of American rights. You will be called to account for this crime against your own people, and you will answer for this crime against the Filipino people who will suffer untold wrongs by reason of your course to-day, when anarchy and bloodshed follow, as it will, these warring tribes of ignorant and defenseless children in their weary march of empire, without compass or rudder or chart. You have cowardly abandoned them to fate, and left them as the prize of every chance wind that blows across the sea. I do not believe this course is demanded from any point of view.

I had hoped, since my return to the Senate, as the votes have been taken on the various amendments, that something would occur to prevent this great wrong. But these islands are to be left a floating derelict upon the sea by the mere accident of Democratic ascendency. Let us hope it will be their last.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I do not know whether the speech of the Senator from Michigan has crushed him or those on this side the most. In his closing utterances he expressed such deep sorrow that he seemed about to yield himself to a flood of weeping. Personally I feel frightfully crushed. I do not know when I have been so regaled with such a wild, vociferous, far-scattered, inane, and dreary partisan harangue. I have no doubt that brilliant performances of that nature will be repeated hereafter, if not on the floor of the Senate, then on the stump all through the campaign of this year.

After listening to that speech—which I confess myself a little surprised at being delivered here at this time—I am compelled to the reflection that if the amendment which I proposed, to give immediate independence to the Philippines with the hope of making some arrangements with other nations to safeguard them, had been agreed to, this whole question would have been a closed incident in our history. Of course the wisdom of a majority of Senators on this side, aided by an almost unanimous vote on the other side, has left it an open question, and it can now be made a campaign issue this year. I have no particular dread of that, only I will admit that I should have preferred if it could have been made a closed incident. You can not very well make an issue of an accomplished fact. You make issues of things which are lying in futuro, policies that are to be completed in the hereafter.

I accept gracefully and willingly the judgment of my colleagues in this matter, and I shall say nothing further now about it, but leave it where it is.

Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to section 34 of the bill as reported from the Committee of the Whole to the Senate. At the close of that section, which closes at line 7, page 36, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, at the end of the bill, the following words:

As soon after the passage of this act as he may deem advisable the President shall invite the cooperation of the principal nations especially interested in the affairs of that part of the world in which the Philippine Islands are located to enter into a treaty or convention, jointly or severally, with the United States obligating or pledging the high contracting parties to any such treaty or convention to recognize and respect the sovereignty and independence of the said Philippine Islands and the government thereof.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, we have had a test of that question by a vote.

Mr. STONE. Not this question.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; there has been a test, and it was voted by a two-thirds majority to eliminate that provision.

In the formation of a bill, of course, compromises must be made. The reason why this is not important is because the President has full power and authority now to negotiate with any nation that he may deem proper, or any number of nations that he may deem proper, for the very purpose of establishing the provision which the Senator from Missouri desires to put into the bill.

Of course, in trying to form a bill we must take into consideration the objections that are made by some. There are some who will not vote for the bill unless a provision of that kind is contained therein, and I have heard expressions on the part of others to the effect that they would not vote for the bill if it were in. That being the case, it seems to me that we ought to be willing to give and take, and that whenever the Senate has made a direct determination of this question, as it did under the motion which was made by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], we who want to enact legislation of this kind should be content. Then if afterwards some one desires to introduce a resolution to the same effect and have it referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, so that it will not interfere in any manner with the passage of this bill, all right and good.

I have no objection to the proposition that is made, except that it comes here during the consideration of a bill in the passage of which we may lose votes, if it should be adopted. We had better either trust the President to make these negotiations upon his own initiative, without any direction of Congress, or else embody it in a separate resolution which should be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, which could report it to the Senate, and thus make it an independent question without any relation whatever to whether or not this bill as a whole is going to pass.

It seems to me it is unwise to inject this provision into the bill at this time.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, in the coming campaign this fall we can truthfully charge the Republicans with many sins of omission and commission, but I hope we will not charge them with a filibuster against the Philippine bill. That has been done by Democrats. Why not vote?

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri will state it.

Mr. STONE. Under the order, is the Senate required to adjourn at 5 o'clock?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that that order was vacated by a proceeding of the Senate on yesterday. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. POINDEXTER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I ask to have the amendment stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will state the amendment.

The Secretary again read Mr. STONE's amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COLT (when his name was called). Although I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY], I am at liberty to vote on this amendment, and vote "nay."

Mr. FALL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. HARDING (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Again making the same announcement that I made on the last vote, I now vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] to the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] and will vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 59, as follows:

So Mr. STONE's amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE].

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, being in substance the amendment I suggested a while ago.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. After the word "thereof," in line 21, page 34, it is proposed to insert "which shall be republican in form and established under a constitution to be submitted to and approved by the people of the islands, by the legislature of the same first elected under this act, or by a convention to be called by virtue of an act of such legislature."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. In his absence I withhold my vote for the present.

Mr. COLT (when his name was called). Making the same announcement that I did before, and being at liberty to vote on this amendment, I will vote "nay."

Mr. HARDING (when his name was called). I again transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Repeating the same announcement, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CHILTON. I desire to announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN].

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I beg again to announce the pair existing between the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY].

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 46, as follows:

YEAS—33.

So Mr. WALSH's amendment was rejected.

Mr. WALSH. I offer another amendment to be inserted in the same place.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert the following:

The constitution under which sovereignty is to be assured shall provide that the new Philippine Government shall fulfill the obligations of the United States concerning the Philippine Islands incurred by the treaty of Paris or arising out of the occupation of the islands, including the personal and property rights of individuals and corporations of the United States and other countries, and the safeguarding of such Philippine Government loans and other obligations as have heretofore been authorized by act of Congress.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, of course if it was necessary to add that to include the provisions contained in it, it would have to go in, but I maintain it is covered by the amendment now in language somewhat broader than that. For that reason I think it ought not to be adopted, because it would simply duplicate a provision that is already in the bill.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I was very much in hopes the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] would explain his amendment and give us his idea as to how it would be carried out. The mere exacting of an agreement from the Philippine government that these important obligations were to be fulfilled simply imposes upon this Government a contract and responsibilities without any way whatever of enforcing the contract.

I should like to hear from the Senator as to what he expects this Government will do to fulfill its obligations under the treaty with Spain.

Before he speaks I will make just one suggestion. The United States can not perform its obligations under its treaty with Spain with reference to the Philippine Islands by shouldering them on the Philippine government. We did not say in that treaty that these rights would be protected by the successor of the United States in the Philippines. We agreed with Spain that certain rights, certain liberties, should be established there, and the obligation is upon us, and we can not shift it by securing such an agreement as the Senator from Montana referred to.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. The Senator from Washington has not any right to invite another Senator to speak, much less to tell him what to say. [Laughter.]

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I think it is but courteous to the Senator from Washington that I should say that when I had the floor some time ago I set forth the reasons why, in my judgment, this kind of an amendment ought to find a place in the bill. The question as to how it is going to be enforced, it seems to me, is quite irrelevant now.

Mr. President, can we escape any obligation that we have entered into by the treaty of Paris by endeavoring to shove it off on the Philippine government? We simply ask the Philippine government or insist that the Philippine government shall assume the responsibility of those obligations. If they do not fulfill them, the obligation is still upon us.

Now, a word with reference to the reason. I can not agree with the Senator from Arkansas that this provision is taken care of in the bill. The bill does provide that the President of the United States shall make rules and regulations by which rights of property shall be taken care of. Let us suppose that the Philippine inhabitants adopt a constitution which does not assume these obligations, by what means could the President of the United States by any rules or regulations which he might prescribe impose that obligation upon the Philippine government?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas I am sure the Senator overlooked another provision in the same clause, which says that—

The President is hereby invested with full power and authority to make such orders and regulations and to enter into such negotiations with the authorities of said Philippines or others.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; but the Philippine authorities may not be empowered by their constitution to assume, on the part of the Philippine government, any such obligation as that. The only way you can get the Philippine government to assume these obligations is either by a provision in their constitution or by an act of their legislature, and of course the act of the legislature would be subject to change. I have endeavored to set forth the reasons which prompted me in offering the amendment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, one of the obligations which the United States assumed, which the amendment of the Senator from Montana refers to, set out in the treaty with Spain, is the following:

The civil rights and political status of the native inhabitants of the territories hereby ceded to the United States shall be determined by the Congress.

That obligation can not be performed under the construction of the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas that the President shall devise some way by which the civil rights of the native inhabitants shall be established and protected. It is an extremely important provision of the treaty with Spain, in view of the great variety of the native inhabitants of those islands.

That matter has already been very fully discussed, and it is thoroughly understood by the Senate. We have agreed with Spain in regard to the Moros and the Negritos, and all the various races and varieties of races that inhabit those islands, that their civil rights and their political status shall be established by the Congress of the United States. Does the Senator propose to repudiate that obligation? If they refuse to carry out the agreement, what answer will the Senator give to Spain for its violation?

There is also this provision in the treaty with Spain. I have no doubt these agreements were entered into after the most careful consideration of the conditions existing in those islands, and their terms were based upon necessity. Article 11 of the treaty provides that—

The Spaniards residing in the territories over which Spain by this treaty cedes or relinquishes her sovereignty shall be subject in matters civil as well as criminal to the jurisdiction of the courts of the country wherein they reside, pursuant to the ordinary laws governing the same, and they shall have the right to appear before such courts and to pursue the same course as citizens of the country to which the courts belong.

Does the Senator assume that this treaty, which was made in perpetuity, can be performed by securing an agreement from the Philippine government which the President is authorized to recognize by this bill, regardless of whether that government shall keep the agreement?

There are many Spaniards still living in the Philippines. They are one of the important commercial elements in the population there; they are as important as the Americans who reside there. This provision in the treaty was intended for their protection, to guarantee to them the same rights as the native inhabitants of the islands as to their persons and property and business. Now, it is proposed by the Senator from Montana to shift this obligation by securing an agreement with the Philippine Government washing our hands of it and saying that it is not now a matter which concerns us.

I say, Mr. President, it does concern us, because we are dealing with matters that are provided for in this treaty, and the treaty is now in force.

Some reference has been made to the manner in which we have guarded these obligations in Cuba. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] this morning at some length described what the United States had done and what its powers were in regard to the property rights and constitutional liberties of the people of Cuba. But what is the status of Cuba in reference to the United States? Do the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Montana propose that the status existing between Cuba and the United States shall exist between this country and the Philippine Islands after this astonishing amendment of the Senator from Arkansas has been adopted? When the treaty with Spain was formulated and agreed to it was expected and understood that the occupancy of the United States in Cuba was to be temporary. There was express provision made in regard to treaty obligations as to that island. Article 16 provides that—

It is understood that any obligations assumed in this treaty by the United States with respect to Cuba are limited to the time of the occupancy thereof; but it will—

That is, the United States Government will—upon the termination of such occupancy, advise any government established in the island to assume the same obligations.

Now the Senator proposes to apply that provision to the Philippine Islands. He proposes to fulfill our obligations as to those islands by advising the government to be established there to assume these obligations. We could have done that in regard to Cuba, because there was an express provision in the treaty witn Spain providing it; but the very fact that there was an express provision in regard to Cuba in that respect proves conclusively that no such principle applies to the Philippine Islands and the other territory concerned in this treaty. The obligation was not permanent as to Cuba; it only related to the time of our occupancy of the islands.

But, Mr. President, notwithstanding the right which we had under our treaty with Cuba to relieve ourselves of any obligation to secure personal and property rights and the constitutional liberty of the people, because of a special provision to that effect, we have provided in a law of the United States a means by which those rights will be secured in the island of Cuba.

In regard to the Philippine Islands, in which we have bound ourselves unconditionally to guarantee these rights, the Senator proposes no plan of performance, as though the treaty were of no effect—to ignore not only our moral but our legal obligations under it.

The law to which I referred relating to Cuba, passed in 1901, provides:

That the Government of Cuba consents that the United States may exercise the right to intervene for the preservation of Cuban independence, the maintenance of a Government adequate for the protection of life, property, and individual liberty, and for discharging the obligations with respect to Cuba imposed by the treaty of Paris on the United States, now to be assumed and undertaken by the Government of Cuba.

In dealing with these great matters, those who were responsible for framing the treaty and the law in pursuance thereof, which I have read, realized and anticipated the responsibilities which those provisions involved and provided for them in the most solemn and careful manner. Now, it is dealt with here on the floor of the Senate hurriedly and carelessly, with doubt and uncertainty. Amendment after amendment has been produced during the debate, ill considered and ill understood. The whole question of immediate independence has originated on the floor of the Senate during the debate after the bill left the committee. This question has never been referred to a committee. We propose in this offhand manner to repudiate national obligations which we assumed with Spain when we acquired this territory. We can not escape them in that way. We may deceive ourselves into believing that we relieve ourselves of these agreements in this light and indifferent manner, but the world will hold us responsible—the American public will hold us responsible.

Now, what have we done in regard to Cuba? In framing the laws which fixed her status with the United States we not only compelled her to consent that we could intervene for the purpose of carrying out our treaty obligations, but when the occasion arose we did intervene. Although it is said that Cuba is an independent country, yet for two years after that independence was established, from the latter part of 1906 until January, 1909, the United States was in possession of the Government; it was in control of Cuba.

Now, does the Senator from Montana or the Senator from Nebraska who proposed a similar provision to this bill, after depriving ourselves of all power to direct the internal or external affairs of the Philippine Islands, propose that we should do as we have done with Cuba, and when disorder appears, when troubles with other countries arise, are we to go there as we did in the case of Cuba and take possession of the government? I assume that they do, and yet there is no provision made for it in the transaction.

I am not going to occupy the time of the Senate on this matter. It ought to go over until to-morrow, because we have been sitting here five and one-half hours continuously. There is no need of any such haste in giving independence to the Philippines; there is no such peril in our occupation of the islands that we can not take a recess for a few hours. I very much hope that the matter will go over.

However, before taking my seat, I want to say that I am in entire accord with the general principles expressed in regard to this matter by the Senator from Arkansas, with the exception that he believes we ought to get out of the Philippines, and I think we ought to stay in. Otherwise I am all right [laughter]; but, if we are going to get out, the way that he proposes to get out is the right way.

What I have said with regard to treaty obligations in which we are involved indicates the difficulties of giving up our great work in the islands. That matter, however, has already been fully argued. But even the Senator from Arkansas does not propose to get out altogether. Consequently we ought to stay in altogether. He proposes to keep naval and coaling stations there. Nobody proposes to give up Guam. If the Philippine Islands, on account of their distance from the United States are a strategic weakness to us, why not get out of the island of Guam?

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] here this afternoon in a very forceful way referred to the Aleutian Islands and Hawaii. He did not mention the island of Guam. That is 5,500 miles from our coast. We propose to abandon the Philippine Islands because they are far away, and yet keep Guam. Why not give up Guam and so still further contract our growth and reduce our possessions in the interest of solidifying our military strength?

Mr. GALLINGER. Tutuila is still farther away.

Mr. POINDEXTER. As the Senator from New Hampshire suggests, Tutuila is still farther away, and we are going to keep Tutuila. I do not know much about Tutuila; but I have the greatest confidence in the Senator from New Hampshire, and I accept his statement with regard to that. [Laughter.]

The Senator from Arkansas says that we on the Pacific coast object to Japanese immigration and that we ought not to emigrate into the Orient. With that general principle I am in entire accord. The Senator from Arkansas, however, is more familiar than am I with the meaning of the Monroe doctrine in its full scope and extent, and therefore thoroughly understands that it never was construed to interfere in any way whatever with the existing status of European countries on the Western Hemisphere. Most of them own territory here. The purpose was to prevent its extension, to prevent further colonization. When we went into the Philippine Islands there was no Monroe doctrine there; there was no Japanese doctrine corresponding to the Monroe doctrine which forbade our entrance into the Orient. So far as any evidence was given, we went there with the consent of the Japanese. We have been there for 17 years. I venture to say, if Japan had established a government in any territory in Mexico or in South America, or anywhere on the Western Hemisphere, for 17 years with our recognition and consent, and had performed what we have performed in the government of the Philippine Islands, and brought order out of chaos and security out of insecurity, there would be no objection on the part of the United States to her remaining there.

I agree fully with the idea of the Orient for the orientals, perhaps even to the extent of our nonconcern with Japanese activities in China, although that is entirely removed from this question. It is a far call for the United States to concern itself about what Japan does in the Orient. But our established government in the Philippine Islands is not within that rule any more than the British possession of Jamaica is a violation of the Monroe doctrine. These questions were determined in full debate before the entire American public 16 years ago. Conditions have become fixed and permanent in those islands in accord with that policy, and the worst crime that can be committed against their government—the very opposite of the "stable government" which is spoken of so often in this debate—is, after all these years, to overturn it and to set those people adrift without guide or compass among the hostile nations of the world.

I do not care to say anything more at this time, Mr. President, but I hope this matter will go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH].

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, out of abundant caution, and to please at least one Senator, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. I think authority to do the things commanded is implied; but it is best to have it expressed, at least, as I say, to please one Senator, and so I offer the amendment. If there is no amendment pending to my amendment, it might be accepted on my offering it. I ask that the Secretary read the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "thereof," on page 34, line 21, it is proposed to insert a comma, and the following:

And full power to take the several steps necessary to institute such government is hereby conferred upon said Philippines, acting by and through existing governmental agencies therein.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I inquire exactly what that amendment means?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I will call the Senator's attention to the wording of the amendment. The provision of the amendment as heretofore agreed to is as follows:

SEC. 34. The President is hereby authorized and directed to withdraw and surrender all right of possession, supervision, jurisdiction, control, or sovereignty now existing and exercised by the United States in and over the territory and people of the Philippines, and he shall on behalf of the United States fully recognize the independence of the said Philippines as a separate and self-governing nation and acknowledge the authority and control over the same of the government instituted by the people thereof.

Then it goes on to provide that full authority to do these things is hereby conferred upon the Philippine people.

Mr. LIPPITT. Do I understand that that authority is conferred upon the existing Filipino Legislature?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. No, sir; but upon whatever happens to be the government at the time. Of course it will be existing when this bill is passed; and if this bill is not passed, of course it will not exist.

Mr. LIPPITT. It is the government of the Filipinos which exists at the time this bill is passed?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. There might be incorporated in the amendment, instead of "the existing governmental agencies," the words "governmental agencies created by this act."

Mr. LIPPITT. That is what I was going to suggest.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I ask the Secretary to make that modification.

Mr. LIPPITT. The words "existing governmental agencies" are entirely inconsistent with the provisions of this bill.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Very well; I ask the Secretary to make that modification. I think it is a good one. Instead of the words "existing governmental agencies" insert "governmental agencies created by this act."

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I should like to say that this little simple conversation which has gone on here in the last two minutes shows the unwisdom of trying to perfect such an important bill as this—one dealing with the rights of 8,000,000 people—on the floor of the Senate. This bill, if the Clarke amendment is to be added to it, ought to be recommitted to the committee and made harmonious.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I think the words "existing government" would mean existing at the time the amendment spoke. Of course that would be the government created by this bill. I conceded the proposition for the sake of clearness, but not because it was at all essential.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let the amendment be again read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "thereof," on page 34, line 21, it is proposed to insert a comma and the following:

And full power to take the several steps necessary to institute such government is hereby conferred upon said Philippines, acting by and through governmental agencies created by this act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question recurs on concurring in the amendment as amended.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. On that I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, a day or two ago, in discussing the so-called Clarke amendment I called attention to what I believed to be two objections to it. One was that the amendment provided for a guaranty of the independence of the government of the Philippines by our Government for five years after we had recognized their independence. That objection has been remedied by striking out the objectionable language. Another objection which I pointed out at that time was that the so-called Clarke amendment provided that the President should retain coaling stations and naval bases in the Philippine Islands.

In my judgment, Mr. President, either one of these objections, unless amendments were made to obviate them, would be sufficient to bring about the defeat of the bill so far as my vote was concerned; but the Senator from Arkansas in that debate signified his willingness to change the language relating to the retention of a naval base by striking out the word "shall" and inserting the word "may," so that the President could use his discretion. That, it seems, was done while I was temporarily absent from the Chamber; and when the so-called Clarke amendment was adopted as in Committee of the Whole I voted against it without knowing that the Senator from Arkansas had actually made the change that he signified his willingness to make when we were having the debate. So that, as the amendment stands now, that part of it relating to naming the bases and coaling stations reads as follows:

In any such settlement or adjustment so made in respect to the rights and property of the United States as against the said Philippines the President may reserve or acquire such lands and rights and privileges appurtenant thereto as may, in his judgment, be required by the United States for naval bases and coaling stations within the territory of said Philippines.

I would be very much better pleased if that language were stricken out; but, Mr. President, I made a motion the other day to strike out the language that retained naval bases in one of the amendments that was pending, and upon a roll call it only secured 14 votes. I noticed the next day that some of the newspapers announced that the Senate of the United States was in favor of retaining naval bases in the Philippine Islands, and that a motion to strike out of the bill a provision in that behalf only obtained 14 votes. Since we have voted on that question there have been between 15 and 20 Senators who voted against the motion which I made to strike out the language providing for the retention of a naval base who have said either to me or in my hearing that they were in favor of turning over the islands to the Philippine people, when we did turn them over, without the retention of any naval base or coaling station. So that the vote in reality was not expressive, in my humble opinion, of the judgment in the aggregate of this body. I believe if every Senator here should vote his sentiments on a motion to strike that provision out of the bill, it would carry by a large majority.

I fear the language that is left in the bill allowing the President to use his discretion. I fear that, in carrying out that discretion, the President may look back to the vote on the direct proposition before us, to strike it out, and may say from that vote, as the newspapers did, "There were only 14 Senators in the Senate who favored the striking out of that language."

As I have said—and I obtained this information without hunting for it; I have made no canvass of the Senate or of any of its Members to find out how many were opposed to the retention of a naval base in the Philippines—I do not believe there is any doubt in the mind of any Senator that if every Senator here voted his real conscientious convictions, that language would be stricken out of this bill by an overwhelming majority. So, we have here in the shape of an amendment a part of the bill that nobody wants and yet everybody is for.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Might I ask the Senator what there is about that amendment which induces the Senator to believe that Senators would stultify themselves in voting for it when their convictions are against it?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not want the Senator to get the idea that I impute that to any Senator. I do not believe that any one is stultifying himself. Senators have various reasons, and a great many reasons, for their action. The Senators to whom I refer are not confined to either side of the Chamber. There are both Republicans and Democrats who feel that way, and, as I have said, various reasons have been given. I have not tried to find out their reasons, and I am not questioning the motives of any Senator; I can conceive that they may have good reasons for their action. For instance, I suppose there are some Democratic Senators who voted against striking that language out, although believing that it ought to be stricken out, because they felt under some obligation to carry out, and they thought that in that way they could better carry out, the provision of the Democratic platform which says that we shall retain naval bases and coaling stations in the Philippine Islands. There are other reasons——

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska if it has not been stated by Senators who voted upon this proposition that they are not well enough informed now to determine whether or not such a provision ought to be in the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. WORKS. And therefore it had better be left to the discretion of the President?

Mr. NORRIS. There are some who have said, in substance, what the Senator from California has mentioned. I did not intend to go into that. I concede every Senator's right to vote as he pleases and for any reason that to him may be sufficient, but I did not want it to go out that the vote on the proposition indicated the real sentiment of the Senate. I believe myself the retention of a naval base will in the future cause a great deal of difficulty. I think as long as that provision remains in the law it is going to be a peg upon which appropriations will be demanded for the increase of our Navy, for the increase of our military establishment. If we retain a naval base, we will have to fortify it, if it is to be of any consequence.

If I believed that the President in the exercise of the discretion vested in him would not retain any naval base, I would not have any hesitancy in voting for the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas; in fact, I am going to vote for it notwithstanding that provision, because the Senator has modified his amendment in many respects in which I have found fault with it. I am going to vote for it with the hope that when the President comes to act, if he be a Democratic President, he will consult with the Democratic Senators and find out how few among them there are who are really in favor of retaining a naval base in the Philippine Islands. If he be a Republican, I hope he will do the same with the Republicans. I have not any objection to the Democrat inquiring of the Republicans, or to the Republican inquiring of the Democrats, so far as I am concerned; but I believe it will be found that this sentiment exists almost universally. If we go out of the Philippine Islands, we ought to go out without any strings tied to our departure. We ought to go out bag and baggage. We have no more use for a naval base in the Philippine Islands than a wagon has for a fifth wheel if we give up the Philippine Islands, unless at some time in the future we are going to engage in a war of conquest.

I believe that the President has been changing quite rapidly in his ideas about preparedness. But a short time ago he was a man of peace and he has gradually grown to be a man of military belief. He has announced a program of preparedness contrary to what he believed in and announced but a short time ago, and in the last few days he has changed that plan materially. It has been multiplying, until the last time we heard from the President he had announced that he was in favor of America having the largest Navy in the world. If that be his idea, he will want to retain not one but a dozen naval stations in the Philippine Islands, and this bill gives him the right to retain as many as he sees fit. I hope—and there is a good deal of consolation in that hope—that the man who changed so rapidly in one direction, showing that he can be changed, will change rapidly in the other direction, and that when he comes to act on this bill, if it becomes a law, he will have gotten back to his starting point, and probably will not be in favor of such a large Navy or such a large Naval Establishment.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator about where he thinks a human pendulum such he describes would be apt to stop?

Mr. NORRIS. Well, if it goes on, if the President makes another trip and it has the same effect on him that this trip has had, when he gets through with it, or if in this trip he had gone clear across the country instead of half way, he would then have been in favor of a Navy not larger than that of any other nation but larger than the navies of all the other nations of the world combined; and, of course, when we get that far we will start out on a system of taxation that will make us all wonder before we get through with it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. But the President has been out to see those who pay the taxes; and if they feel that way——

Mr. NORRIS. But in no speech that the President made has he talked to them about the taxes.

Mr. BORAH. Well, they undoubtedly are of sufficient intelligence to know that somebody has got to pay for it.

Mr. NORRIS. And the President will probably find that out before he gets through with his preparedness program, if he carries out what he announced at St. Louis he wants to carry out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment as amended.

Mr. CUMMINS obtained the floor.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to prefer a request for a unanimous-consent agreement for a vote upon the bill not later than 4 o'clock to-morrow, so that we can take a recess now?

Mr. CUMMINS. I will yield to the Senator from Nebraska for that purpose.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask unanimous consent that the bill and all amendments be put to a final vote not later than 3 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. LIPPITT. I hope the Senator will make that 4 o'clock.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, 4 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. CHILTON. I make the same announcement as heretofore in regard to my colleague [Mr. GOFF]. I also announce the absence of the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN]. He is detained on account of official business, and is paired with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] presents a request for a unanimous-consent agreement, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that at not later than noon on to-morrow, February 5, 1916, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 381, known as the Philippine bill, and during that day shall vote upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill through the regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition; and that after the hour of 4 o'clock p m. on said day no Senator shall speak.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the proposed unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I do not understand the agreement.

Mr. LIPPITT. What is the last of it?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. What is the agreement? What are we asked to agree to?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read it again.

The Secretary again read the proposed unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Some hour ought to be fixed at which to begin voting. Of course, Senators will stop speaking then.

Mr. LODGE. Four o'clock is fixed.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Then, let us say that the voting shall begin at 4 o'clock.

Mr. LODGE. That is necessarily implied. Debate ceases at 4 o'clock, and there is nothing else to do but vote.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. But, for instance, we may begin voting to-morrow morning. However, we will interpret it ourselves. With the understanding that at 4 o'clock, if there is anything pending that requires further attention at the hands of the Senate, we shall begin to vote; very well.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I ask one construction. What does the word "day" mean? Is it the legislative day or the calendar day?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. It ought to say "the calendar day."

Mr. CUMMINS. We stop at 4 o'clock, I understand.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It says "to-morrow, February 5."

Mr. CUMMINS. That would be the calendar day.

Mr. SMOOT. Why not say "the calendar day of February 5"?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. No; we are going to take a recess this afternoon and take up the bill to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There can be no doubt about what "February 5" means.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, do I understand that after 3 o'clock the speaking is limited to five-minute speeches?

Mr. LODGE. No.

Mr. LIPPITT. But the vote is to be taken at 4 o'clock. Is that it?

Mr. JAMES. That is right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. As the Chair understands, under the unanimous-consent agreement as requested—and the Chair will so construe it now—the Senate will take up the bill at 12 o'clock to-morrow, and will proceed in the regular parliamentary way to vote or talk, as Senators please, until the hour of 4 o'clock, at which time Senators will cease talking and will vote on anything that may be then pending.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I will ask whether there is any objection to having the additional understanding that no speech shall exceed 10 minutes or 20 minutes?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; there is objection.

Mr. LODGE. Let it go as it is.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the proposed unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I object to it, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the yeas and nays on that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the name of Mr. ASHURST, and he voted in the affirmative.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The roll call has started.

The Secretary resumed the calling of the roll.

Mr. CHILTON (when Mr. CHAMBERLAIN's name was called). The senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] is necessarily detained from the Chamber on official business. He is paired with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER].

Mr. CHILTON (when Mr. GOFF's name was called). I make the same announcement as to my colleague that I made on the former vote.

Mr. HARDING (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. LEWIS (when his name was called). I desire to announce my pair with the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE], but as he favors the amendment designated as the Clarke amendment, and as I favor it, I therefore have the right to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. JAMES (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] to the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CHILTON. I desire to announce the pair of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY].

The roll call resulted—yeas 48, nays 27, as follows:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Before announcing the result of this vote the Chair feels constrained to say that the Chair, in his opinion, has unintentionally done the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] an injustice. The Senator from Iowa was recognized, and he yielded the floor for the purpose of allowing the Senator from Nebraska to offer a unanimous-consent agreement. Then came the consideration of the proposed unanimous-consent agreement, and some confusion, and the Chair entirely forgot that the Senator from Iowa desired recognition, and ordered the roll to be called.

The Chair has never had any desire, and has none now, to take advantage of a Senator. The Chair believes that the Senator from Iowa was entitled to the floor, for what purpose the Chair does not know; but there is no way for the Chair to rectify that wrong, unless the Senate will rectify it.

On the question to concur in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole the yeas are 48, the nays are 27. The amendment is concurred in, unless the vote be reconsidered and the Chair can have the privilege of recognizing the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I have no desire to speak upon the amendment after it has been voted upon. That would seem to me to be rather a useless and unnecessary thing. I rose to speak upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas, but since it has been adopted I would not want to consume the time of the Senate in discussing it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair can only say that it was with very great regret that this occurred, and the Chair has done all he can to clear it up.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Mississippi. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JAMES (when his name was called). Making the same transfer of my pair as on the former roll call, I vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], and I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HARDING. I announce the transfer of my general pair with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN], and vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the affirmative). I observe that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] did not vote, being absent from the Chamber. I therefore transfer my pair to the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] and allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 42, as follows:

YEAS—34.

So the Senate refused to take a recess.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is in the Senate. Are there any further amendments? [After a pause.] The question is shall the bill be ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and read the third time?

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Shall the bill pass?

Mr. BRANDEGEE, Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas, and Mr. SHAFROTH called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. HARDING (when his name was called). Again announcing the transfer of my general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN], I vote "nay."

Mr. JAMES (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] to the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE] and vote "yea."

Mr. LEWIS (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE]. He would vote "yea" on the passage of the bill and I therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. KERN (when Mr. SHIVELY's name was called). I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. SHIVELY]. He is paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH].

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE] and vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Repeating the previous announcement of my pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] and its transfer to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CHILTON. I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] to the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and vote "yea."

I wish to announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. GOFF] on account of illness, and also to announce the pair of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER].

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]; also that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE].

The result was announced—yeas 52, nays 24, as follows:

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. We are not through with the bill. The preamble has not been disposed of.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I desire to withdraw the preamble, Mr. President.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. All right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the preamble is withdrawn.

OIL AND GAS LANDS.

Mr. PHELAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 406) to authorize exploration for and disposition of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, potassium, or sodium, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed.

PREVENTION OF SPREAD OF LEPROSY.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report Senate resolution 91 with an amendment, and I call the attention of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] to it.

Mr. RANSDELL. I ask that the resolution may be read.

The resolution was read as proposed to be amended, namely, to insert after the word "law," in line 10, the words "the same not to exceed $225," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and is hereby, authorized during the Sixty-fourth Congress to hold hearings on the bill (S. 4086) to provide for the care and treatment of persons afflicted with leprosy and to prevent the spread of leprosy in the United States; to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths; to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page; to pay the expenses of witnesses under the limitations provided by law, the same not to exceed $225; and to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee; the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or the recess of the Senate.

Mr. RANSDELL. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution. The purpose is to permit the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine to summon witnesses on the bill to provide for the care and treatment of persons afflicted with leprosy, and to prevent the spread of leprosy in the United States. That bill is one of the most important matters in a way that could come before us. The investigation will involve an expense not exceeding $225. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. I am a member of the committee reporting the resolution. I thought we had stricken from the resolution the provision authorizing the chairman of the committee to summon witnesses and require papers to be presented. I should like to know what persons the Senator wants summoned here to testify.

Mr. RANSDELL. I want to summon several of the best experts on leprosy in the United States—Dr. Frank Parker, of Boston; Dr. Isadore Dyer, of New Orleans; and a famous doctor in Minnesota. The cost is not to exceed $225.

Mr. SMOOT. The only thing that I was thinking of, Mr. President, was that in the case of every other hearing we have had upon any of these questions, doctors have been here at their own expense to testify; and are they not ready to come here now and testify?

Mr. RANSDELL. I do not think they are, Mr. President. Some of the doctors are willing to come, but others are not, unless their expenses are paid. They are very busy men, and we ought at least to pay their fair traveling expenses; and that is all this resolution provides for.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not going to object, Mr. President, but I am going to say that my experience in the past has been that persons interested have never had to receive an invitation to be here to attend any investigation of this kind; but they have always been on hand forcing the committees to have a hearing. I shall, however, not object to the resolution.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, let me say just a word. Dr. Dyer, of Louisiana, certainly is not forcing it, and Louisiana is not back of it. Louisiana has a leprosarium of its own, where it takes care of 105 of the most unfortunate beings in this world, and they are as happy as people of that kind can be; but right in the city of Washington there is a poor man afflicted with leprosy who is in solitary confinement and is suffering terribly. In many other parts of this country there are poor people afflicted with leprosy in solitary confinement, because there is no place to take them and no place to put them. The bill on which we are seeking to get light proposes to establish a national leprosarium. All we are trying to do now is to obtain authority to summon witnesses here, and to pay their expenses, not exceeding $225. I hope there will be no objection to this request.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. There will be no objection unless the Senator continues to discuss it, Mr. President.

Mr. RANSDELL. The Senator from Louisiana will not occupy any longer time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON THE LIBRARY.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report back favorably, without amendment, Senate resolution No. 89, authorizing the Committee on the Library to employ a stenographer to report hearings held before the committee.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Is the report at the desk with reference to the Committee on the Library?

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. It is.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Then, it is simply a resolution authorizing the employment of a stenographer?

Mr. SMOOT. I object to the consideration of any further business by unanimous consent at this time of day.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I move that Senate resolution No. 60, being Order of Business No. 33, be taken up and made the unfinished business.

Mr. SMOOT. I object, Mr. President.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] has given notice, which is on the calendar, of his intention to move to take up another bill; and I think he has the right of way.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will not press my request under those circumstances.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Senate adjourn until Monday next at 12 o'clock m.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, February 7, 1916, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 4, 1916.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou great Spirit, who hast ever been the inspiration of men to high and noble achievements, help us to realize that it is not what we get out of the world but what we put into it that counts for righteousness. Inspire us, therefore, with great thoughts and help us to noble endeavors that we may leave the world a little better than we found it. In the spirit of Him who came that we might have life and that we might have it more abundantly. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

Holloway, late clerk to continue digest of claims, an amount equal to six months of his salary as such employee, $1,250, and an amount not exceeding $250 to defray the funeral expenses of said Junius B. Holloway.

Mr. LLOYD. This is a similar resolution to the ones usually passed in such cases.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for leave of absence until next Monday, on account of public business, for my colleague, Mr. BRITT.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PREPAREDNESS.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ALLEN] proceeding for three minutes?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I shall not object to this, Mr. Speaker, but I will object to any others. The gentleman only asks for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, in the time allotted to me I would like to have read from the Clerk's desk a letter on the subject of preparedness which I received this morning from former Gov. Harmon, of Ohio.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

CINCINNATI, OHIO, February 2, 1916.

Hon. ALFRED G. ALLEN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

FRIEND ALLEN: I thank you for your kind letter of 31st ultimo, and for the copy of the Congressional Directory containing the committees.

I hope the opposition to preparedness is subsiding. The more I think of it, the more indignant I become, that anybody with pretensions to the rank of patriot should oppose the President's policies in this respect.

I have been reading, for the third time in my life, Gibbon's "Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire." The other night I came to the fall of Constantinople before Mohammed II—the wiping out of the Eastern Empire. I was struck by the part that wealth and unpreparedness together played in it. When Constantine asked the people for contributions for defense, Gibbon says they preferred to keep their wealth for the Turks, who took it all, rather than give a part of it to defend the country. And when the Emperor sent men all over the city to take a list of citizens who were capable to serve as defenders he found only between four and five thousand, out of the great population of the city.

As you will recall, these few, with Constantine at their head, showed great courage and perished at last before the vast numbers of the Turks; but this fact will never redeem the people from the reproach, which will stain their memory to the end of time, that they folded their hands, closed their purses, shut their eyes, and dreamed of peace when the danger of war was written across the sky.

Very truly, yours,

JUDSON HARMON.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman yields back the balance of his time.

AMENDING HOUSE RULE—FLOOD CONTROL.

On motion of Mr. GARRETT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the House resolution 122 was passed on yesterday was laid on the table.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10385, the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill, with Mr. FOSTER in the chair.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, before the California item is reached I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The recollection of the Chair is that California was reached last night. The Clerk informs me that that word "California" had been read.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arizona offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 20, after line 9, by inserting as a new paragraph:

"For the construction of three additional steel spans, with abutment and piers, to extend the bridge across the Gila River on the San Carlos Indian Reservation, near San Carlos, Ariz., $17,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available."

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, in support of my amendment I desire to say that I have lately received from the clerks of the boards of supervisors of Graham and Gila Counties copies of a letter from Superintendent Stecker, of the San Carlos Indian Agency, as follows:

SAN CARLOS INDIAN AGENCY,
San Carlos, Ariz., January 23, 1916.

To the BOARD OF SUPERVISORS OF GILA AND GRAHAM COUNTIES, ARIZ.

GENTLEMEN: I am very sorry to be compelled to notify you that the Gila River flood waters have about cut off the bridge on the Gila River near Natches, and, from the present rate of cutting, it will, in all probability, require three more spans of bridging to connect the bridge with the new river banks. Mr. Perry McMurren, with a large detachment of Indians, fought the water all night, but their efforts were of no avail.

I suggest that you notify Representative CARL HAYDEN accordingly, in order that he may take such action as may be necessary to provide the new bridge work made necessary on account of the flood damage.

Very respectfully,

ERNEST STECKER, Superintendent.

The necessity for a bridge across the Gila River at this point was first ascertained by a report made pursuant to the Indian appropriation act of August 24, 1912, by John Charles, supervisor of construction in the Indian Service. His report is found in House Document No. 1013, Sixty-second Congress, on page 7 of which are the specifications for this bridge, as follows:

The work included in this project is the building, complete and ready for use, of seven 138-foot steel spans with a 16-foot roadway, two concrete abutments, and six tubular piers, as shown on the accompanying plans.

Forty-five thousand five hundred dollars was appropriated for the construction of this bridge by an item in the Indian appropriation act of June 30, 1913, and it was built by the Omaha Structural Steel Co. at a contract price of $38,800.

You will note that the specifications call for seven 138-foot spans, and by dividing the contract price by seven we ascertain that the cost of a single span is $5,443. Three new spans at this price would cost $16,629, so that I have asked for a total appropriation of $17,000, which I believe sufficient to do the work. If there should be any deficit, I am sure that the boards of supervisors of Graham and Gila Counties will find a way to raise any additional funds that may be necessary.

In order that the House may be aware of the serious difficulties that encumber bridge building on the Gila, I offer this illuminating article from the pen of one of the foremost editors of the Southwest, Col. Fred S. Breen, of the Coconino Sun:

THE ONLY BRIDGE-SHY RIVER IN THE WORLD.

While the flood situation is serious at Florence, the actions of the Gila River toward the bridges that have been built across it are exceedingly peculiar, not to say coy, shy, and hard to please. Once the river sidestepped the bridge and wandered off a mile or so to keep from running under it, and latest reports indicate that the river has every symptom of endeavoring to meander around the new bridge completed by the State a year or so ago. Along at this point the Gila seems to be the most irritable and finicky stream of wet in the country. About the last resort seems either to serve an injunction on the durned damp lane or build a whole scatterment of bridges to bewilder it into not running around or over one of them. There are very few conservative and respectable rivers that persistently refuse to run under a bridge, and it seems strange to see a river run off a mile or two and leave a perfectly good bridge covering a sand hill. Many tourists look at the bridge under such circumstances and wonder what the natives went to so much expense for in covering up the sand hill, while the river is a mile away gurgling along to itself, only a few inches deep, waiting for some other sucker to build a bridge over it. At present it looks like the only safe method would be to build a bridge around the Gila and let nature take its course.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. This is on an Indian reservation, is it?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. Is it reimbursable?

Mr. HAYDEN. I have an amendment here that I prepared yesterday in connection with another bridge appropriation, which I think will accomplish that purpose. Mr. Chairman, I offer to amend the amendment by adding at the end the following language.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment offered by Mr. HAYDEN by adding at the end thereof the following:

"Reimbursable to the United States by the Indians having tribal rights on said reservation and to remain a charge and lien upon the land and funds belonging to said Indians until paid."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is this proposition similar in its purpose to that which was objected to yesterday, and which went out on a point of order, concerning a bridge over the Gila River?

Mr. HAYDEN. No, sir. As I have already stated, this bridge was built by the Indian Office under the direction of Congress and was completed about a year ago. It is wholly within the San Carlos Indian Reservation. This appropriation has nothing to do with the matters that were stricken from this bill on points of order made yesterday.

Mr. STAFFORD. The bridge has been constructed, and this is mainly for maintenance and repair, is it?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes. The high water on the Gila washed out the southern abutment, so that three new spans are necessary to connect the bridge with the bank of the river.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arizona.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arizona offers another amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 20, after line 9, by inserting as a separate paragraph:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to expend not exceeding $10,000 from the proceeds from the sale of town lots on the Colorado River Reservation, arising under the act of April 30, 1908 (35 Stat. L., p. 77), for the examination and final location surveys of a dam site on the Colorado River, and the investigation and survey of an irrigation system to supply the land of the Colorado River Reservation from said dam, and for the design, preparation of maps, plans and detailed specifications for said works, and estimate of cost thereof, for the utilization of the reserved rights to water from the Colorado River in the State of Arizona for the irrigation of approximately 150,000 acres of land on said reservation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I reserve the right to object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that.

Mr. HAYDEN. Will the gentleman from Kansas permit me to explain my amendment?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, let us get on. We have thrashed out these matters in good faith and have cut out of the bill every item of legislation that other Members had, and I am going to make points of order on the floor, as I did in committee, against proposed amendments.

Mr. HAYDEN. If the gentleman will hear me, this proposition was approved by our committee, except that $5,000 was to be appropriated directly from the Treasury, while the pending amendment permits the use of $10,000 of the funds received from the proceeds of town sites on the Colorado River Indian Reservation. The gentleman from Kansas will find this appropriation of $5,000 on page 15 of the bill, beginning with the proviso at line 19. He will remember that this proviso was stricken from the bill on a point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

In order that we may understand this situation, I desire to present the following article, which was printed in the Parker Post on September 11, 1915:

It is now a little over five years ago since Uncle Sam's real estate agents slipped into Parker and sold about $100,000 worth of sandy desert lots to the people of this community, and other investors, who relied upon the implied promises of the Government that the surplus lands of the Colorado River Indian Reservation would be open to settlement and entry within a reasonable time.

At the time of the auction sale of lots in the Parker town site a horde of deputy United States marshals accompanied the receiver of the Phoenix Land Office for the purpose of guarding the treasure chest which Uncle Sam accumulated here through the enterprise of his real estate sharks. Before the week ended our good uncle cleaned us up a la Wallingford, the guardians of the money chest departed, and not a peep has been heard from his fly-by-night agents since.

Any cheap real estate grafter who had gotten away with one one-hundredth part of the amount which Uncle Sam filched from the Parker people would now be serving a term in the penitentiary. Yet, in view of the rotten deal we have had from our Government, our Senators and Congressman have been powerless to do anything toward making the Government fulfill its promises or make restitution to the investors in town lots, which are absolutely worthless until such time as the surplus lands of the reservation are opened to settlement.

On page 165 of the hearings you will find the following statement relative to the sale of town lots at Parker:

Proceeds of town sites, Colorado River Indian Reservation, Ariz.

Total receipts to Sept. 30, 1915	$62,103.00
Amount reimbursed to the United States on account of expenditures from reimbursable appropriations for survey, etc	7,089.08
Balance in Treasury Dec. 22, 1915	55,013.92

The Indian Bureau sought to obtain authority to expend not exceeding $50,000 of this amount in continuing the construction of the pumping plant and irrigation system on the Colorado River Indian Reservation, but in the committee I made a point of order against this proposal and stated that I intended to see that this money is not used for any such purpose.

Objection having been made to a direct appropriation from the Treasury for the purpose of preparing plans and estimates for the construction of the necessary irrigation works on this reservation, I am now seeking to use some of the money that was obtained under false pretenses for this purpose. Nobody would have paid a dollar for any lot at Parker except under the belief that the reservation was to be opened to settlement and the lands irrigated in the near future. I know that every lot owner would be glad to see his money used in a way that will ascertain the facts and open the way to an agreement on a definite policy respecting the reclamation and settlement of the agricultural lands on the Colorado River Indian Reservation.

The amendment that I have offered is identical in its terms with a Senate amendment to the Indian bill which failed last year, except that I now propose to use some of the money received from the sale of lots at Parker instead of asking for a direct appropriation from the Treasury.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a memorial passed by the Arizona Legislature on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arizona asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The memorial is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Second Legislature of the State of Arizona, in regular session convened, respectfully represent:

That during the years of 1908 and 1909 the then Indian agent of the Colorado River Indian Reservation under authority of the Department of the Interior granted numerous permits to persons to settle upon certain lots in the Parker town site, Yuma County, Ariz.

That an appraisement was made of the lots of said town site under the direction of the Department of the Interior during the year 1909, and the persons occupying lots under permits granted by the department were given a preference right to purchase said lots.

That about 90 days thereafter a second appraisement of all lots in the Parker town site, including those occupied by permittees, was ordered by the Department of the Interior, and the valuation was raised from 300 to 600 per cent above the figures set forth in the first appraisement. That this raise in appraised values was made because of the fact that the town site of Parker is within a short distance of the allotted Indian land on the Colorado River Indian Reservation, the surplus area of which was planned by the Department of the Interior to be opened to purchase and settlement at an early date.

That the said permittees occupying lots upon the Parker town site have paid to the United States under the valuations of town lots under the second appraisement the sum of $24,562.

That on May 10, 1910, the authorities of the United States held an auction sale of lots within the Parker town site and $56,698 worth of said lots were sold to residents of Parker and other investors. That $37,623 have been paid to the United States for lots purchased at said auction sale and there is still owing to the United States upon said sales the sum of $19,075.

That immediately prior to the auction sale of town-site lots at Parker Congress passed an act as follows:

"For the construction of a pumping plant to be used for irrigation purposes on the Colorado River Reservation, together with the necessary canals and laterals, for the utilization of water in connection therewith, for the purpose of securing an appropriation of water for the irrigation of approximately 150,000 acres of land, $50,000, to be reimbursed from the sale of the surplus lands of the reservation."

That the above act was, in effect, a representation by the United States that the surplus land of the Colorado River Indian Reservation was soon to be opened to settlement and entry by bona fide settlers. That the lots put up for sale at said auction had a prospective value only upon the assumption that said surplus lands would be opened to settlement at an early date. That the enormous increase in the valuation of lots in the Parker town site by the second appraisement above referred to was only justified by the carrying out of the implied promise contained in the above act that the surplus lands of the Colorado River Indian Reservation would be open to settlement.

That the town site of Parker is a barren desert, on land having an intrinsic value of less than $1 an acre. That whatever added value it may have arises from the fact that it is adjacent to the bottom lands of the Colorado River Indian Reservation, in which the surplus lands above referred to lie; and unless said lands are opened to settlement and entry the town site of Parker is worth little, or not more than any other desert land.

That the residents of Parker and numerous other residents of the State of Arizona interested therein, who were induced to purchase lots in the Parker town site by reason of the implied promise of the United States above set forth to open the reservation lands to entry, have repeatedly petitioned Congress and the Department of the Interior for the opening of said surplus lands.

That said purchasers of lots in Parker have further evidenced their reliance upon said implied promise of the United States to open said lands by investing large sums of money in buildings and improvements in said town of Parker, all of which will be worthless unless the said lands are opened to settlement.

That the allotments of land to the Indian belonging on said reservation have been approved by the Department of the Interior and the surplus land, amounting to approximately 125,000 acres, which might be open to entry is segregated.

That, to the best knowledge and belief of your memorialists, there exists a sufficient flow of underground water for the irrigation and reclamation of the surplus lands.

That the surplus Indian lands above described are highly desirable as prospective farms, and hundreds of energetic and enterprising citizens of this State alone are awaiting the opportunity to secure tracts of lands for the purpose of making their homes thereon. That to the best knowledge and belief of your memoralists a large amount of the delay in opening the surplus lands of said reservation to settlement in accordance with the said implied promise of the United States has been caused by unnecessary entangiements of official red tape in the various bureaus at Washington having charge of reclamation work and Indian affairs.

That another reason which has been assigned for the delay in opening said lands for settlement is the fact that people having large cattle interests have leased certain of the lands involved and have been exerting their influence to delay the opening of said lands for settlement: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the Legislature of the State of Arizona, That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, urged to enact any legislation which may be necessary for the opening for settlement of said lands, to the end that the implied promise of the United States, made to the settlers and purchasers of lots within the Parker town site, to the effect that Indian lands within the Indian reservation would be opened for settlement, be carried out.

Resolved further, That a copy of this memorial and these resolutions be forwarded to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Secretary of the Interior, and to the Representatives of Arizona in Congress; and that our Representatives in Congress be, and they are hereby, requested to do all in their power to accomplish the enactment of such legislation.

Passed the senate March 6, 1915, by a vote of 17 ayes; 2 absent.

W. P. SIMS, President.
OSCAR COLE, Secretary.
By C. P. CRONIN,
Assistant Secretary.

Passed the house March 4, 1915, by a vote of 28 ayes; 7 absent.

WM. E. BROOKS,
Speaker of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order is made. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

CALIFORNIA.

SEC. 3. For support and civilization of Indians in California, including pay of employees, $42,000.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the purpose for which I rise now is to ask the chairman if there would be any objection to fixing this item in the same amount that the department reported it for?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I could not agree to that. In fact, this bill has been agreed upon as it stands, and I could not yield. I would not have the right to change the will of the committee for that of some person interested in a State. Therefore, candidly, I can not accede to the gentleman's request.

Mr. RAKER. The only thing I wanted to say was that it will be noticed by the report that all the money was used last year. After making personal investigation in a number of counties in California I found blind, poor, destitute Indians unprovided for. The counties were assisting them, and many of the destitute Indians were provided for by charity, to my own personal knowledge. The matter was taken up with the department, but they said they had no funds to assist in the relief of these Indians. They said, however, that they would attempt in this legislation this year to provide for them.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from California that the facts in regard to this very important item are not sustained by the statement that he makes. The record is contrary to it. There is an unexpended balance here of $1,430.79 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915. The amount appropriated was $42,000 even. The amount expended was $40,569.21, leaving an unexpended balance of $1,430.79, so that the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. RAKER. No; I am not mistaken.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then the department is mistaken.

Mr. RAKER. No; the department covers it. On page 185 of the hearings they exhibit the financial statement. The unexpended balance is covered by obligations. Now they have expended all of the money. After a personal interview with the commissioner and the assistant commissioner, as well as with the superintendents of the agency, and after a personal trip with the superintendent in charge, with the physicians of the various districts, I took a number of days and went to these Indian camps. I saw there blind, aged, destitute Indians that were being provided for by the charity of the local communities. We presented a report to the department, and they said they would attempt to provide for it in this legislation.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. NORTON. What is being discussed?

Mr. RAKER. I moved to strike out the last word and asked a question of the chairman, if there would be any objection to raising this amount up to the amount that was placed in the estimates by the department.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would state to the gentleman that I certainly shall object to raising the amount fixed by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase of lands for the homeless Indians in California, including improvements thereon, for the use and occupancy of said Indians, $10,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, said funds to be expended under such regulations and conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the item.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves a point of order.

Mr. MANN. What is the reason for making this fund available until expended? It is a current item of appropriation.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. That is an amount provided for the purpose of purchasing homes for homeless Indians, as it shows. It was explained to us that contracts are sometimes made in one year for the purchase of homes, but owing to the delay in making titles, and so forth, it is necessary to carry the deal over into the next fiscal year or even longer, sometimes until the appropriation expires.

Mr. MANN. I do not think that is the real reason.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Perhaps not; but that was the explanation given us as I remember.

Mr. MANN. We have carried this item in appropriation bills for many years, authorizing the department at its discretion to purchase lands for Indians in California. There has never been a very satisfactory explanation, although there have been explanations of it which may be reasonable. Last year I think the item was stricken out on a point of order, on the ground that it was not wise to give the department authority over a fund with which it could go out and buy land; and I assume that the real reason for the insertion of these words is that the department fear that if the item stays in this year it may go out next year, and they still want this fund. Perhaps they have gone ahead and arranged to buy land notwithstanding there was no intention to make an appropriation last year.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I think the gentleman is perhaps correct about that, and if any contracts were made for the purchase of land, the title to which had not been cleared up, it would perhaps be necessary to use this money next year if we had no subsequent appropriation.

Mr. MANN. If there have been any contracts made for the purchase of lands, they are illegal contracts, because the department is directly and expressly forbidden by law to make contracts for such purpose where there is no appropriation.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And there is no appropriation, unless it is under the resolution continuing the appropriation made two years ago. That may be true. I do not know.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. If the gentleman will permit, perhaps when the bureau makes these contracts it thinks the title to the land can be completed during the fiscal year, but sometimes finds that the title can not be cleared until after the appropriation has expired.

Mr. MANN. If they make a contract under this appropriation, they can still use the money after the end of the fiscal year for the purpose of carrying out the contract. The gentleman understands that very well. The money is not covered back into the Treasury until the expiration of two years. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the language on page 20, lines 15 and 16—

To be immediately available and to remain available until expended.

And I will make the point of order against the entire item, unless the gentleman is satisfied to let that language go out of the bill.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Oh, that is clearly subject to the point of order.

Mr. MANN. The whole item is subject to the point of order if made.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. There is no contention about that language being subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes the point of order on the language indicated by him and not on the entire paragraph.

Mr. MANN. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and education of 700 Indian pupils at the Sherman Institute, Riverside, Cal., including pay of superintendent, $119,500; for general repairs and improvements, $10,000; in all, $129,500.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to say to the committee in reference to the previous paragraph that one of the chief objections to the expenditure of money by the Indian Bureau for the purchase of land for the Indians was found by the Committee on Indian Affairs to be this, that where $10,000 has been appropriated for the purchase of land the Indian Bureau has in some cases expended about 50 per cent of it for paying officials of the bureau to go about the country to see where they can buy land. The committee exacted a promise from the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs that in the future this policy of extravagance would not be pursued, and that the expenses in connection with the purchase of the land for Indians would in the future be very much less than in the past and that the work would be done with real regard to business methods and economy.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For reclamation and maintenance charge on Yuma allotments, $10,000, to remain available until expended and to be reimbursed from the sale of surplus lands or from other funds that may be available, in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1911.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee what Yuma allotments are referred to in this item.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. On page 195 of the hearings, in the justification for this item, it is stated that—

This appropriation is for payment of building charges for the area which may be supplied with water under completed lateral system. By the approval of the Secretary of the Interior to an agreement between the Indian Bureau and the Reclamation Service, the Indian lands are to take advantage of the law permitting payment of building charges over a longer period. The amount here requested will be sufficient to cover that required for the fiscal year 1917, on account of credits which will result from adjustments of the maintenance and operation charges already paid.

Mr. MONDELL. Are these the allotments under the Yuma reclamation project?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I understand that they are.

Mr. MONDELL. These Indians have some funds, have they not?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They may have funds, but they are not available at the present time.

Mr. MONDELL. I understand that the Indians are located on the lands. Why should we be called upon to maintain their irrigation system, which has been built at very large cost, when the Indians themselves are upon the lands and supposed to be engaged in farming.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I understand from what the gentleman says he desires that this money should be reimbursible. He will see that it is, under the language of the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. The money should be reimbursible if these Indians have any funds, or are likely to have any funds, from which the Government could be reimbursed.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. By examining the language here the gentleman will see that it is reimbursible.

Mr. MONDELL. As a matter of fact, have these Indians any resources, so that this item could be reimbursed?

Mr. NORTON. If the gentleman will yield, I will say that the fiscal report of the Bureau of Indian Affairs for the year ending June 30, 1915, shows that the Indians of the Yuma Reservation had on hand the sum of $10,728.22, from the proceeds of their irrigable lands.

Mr. MONDELL. That they have that on hand at this time?

Mr. NORTON. That they had it on hand June 30, 1915.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Is this $10,000 to pay all the maintenance charges of all the Indians on this irrigation scheme?

Mr. NORTON. I can not give the gentleman that information.

Mr. MANN. Or if it is not, is the charge against a part of the Indians to be paid out of the funds due to all of the Indians?

Mr. NORTON. I do not know for a certainty, but I would judge that under the law this would be reimbursed out of the funds belonging to those who had received the benefits from it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman permit me to state that it is my understanding that this language here covers this exact question:

For reclamation and maintenance charge on Yuma allotments, $10,000, to remain available until expended and to be reimbursed from the sale of surplus lands or from other funds that may be available, in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1911.

I have not that act before me, but my recollection is that it required these funds to be turned into the Treasury, and that it required an appropriation to get the money out of the Treasury. The gentleman will find in the fiscal statement of the Indian Office for the year ending June 30, 1915, this statement:

Proceeds of irrigible lands, Yuma Reservation, Cal., $10,728.22.

Under the heading "How and when created," in another column appears:

April 21, 1904, Thirty-third Statutes at Large.

Mr. MANN. I take it that that fund that is on hand, a little over $10,000, belongs to all the Indians, and not to a few of them.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is turned into the Treasury and requires an act of Congress to reach it.

Mr. MANN. What I want to know is, is the maintenance charge against a few Indians to be paid out of the money belonging to all the Indians, or is it to be paid only out of the funds belonging to a part of the Indians?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is controlled by the rules and regulations of the department.

Mr. MANN. It is controlled by act of Congress.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The act of Congress makes the funds available, but as to the bookkeeping, I do not know whether it is to be charged up against the individual Indians or to the tribe.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and education of 100 Indian pupils at the Fort Bidwell Indian School, Cal., including pay of superintendent, $18,200; for general repairs and improvements, $3,600; in all, $21,800.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 21, line 7, by striking out the figures "18,200" and inserting the figures "22,375."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I reserve a point of order against that.

Mr. STAFFORD. You can not reserve a point of order against it.

Mr. MANN. It is not subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, this particular matter was estimated for by the Indian Service and approved by the Secretary of the Interior and by the Treasury Department. Justification given by the hearings shows that they need this amount of money. I had the pleasure of investigating this school at least three times when home, and they are much in need of this money for the purpose of keeping up and maintaining the school to a proper degree of efficiency. The commissioner, Mr. Sells, was before the committee yesterday and made the statement that this amount of money is needed very much and he hoped the committee would permit it to be inserted in the bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I find from Report No. 87, a special report made on all the school estimates, that the Indian school at Fort Bidwell, Cal., is a gratuity, and that $24,100 is the current law. The estimate for this school was $33,500, and the committee, after a full investigation of the matter, reduced it to $21,800. You will find that on page 195 of the hearings. We think we gave that school all that we possibly could give it under the statements made by the department. The amount per capita of this school is excessive. The cost per capita, based on the enrollment, is $271.04. Based on the average attendance it is $318.87. These two schools in California are the highest cost in the United States. A few years ago the law was repealed which before that time set the amount of the per capita cost at $167 on nonreservation schools such as this, and that is all they would be entitled to. The limit was raised afterwards for some purpose. Now we find they have climbed up to $318.87. They have only a few pupils. The average attendance is only 61, and the school is costing entirely too much. I hope this amount will not be raised. If we continue to educate these children it would be better to send them to a larger school where it will not cost the Government more than $167 per capita. There is a very bad showing made here. We find the salaries and wages amount to $9,934 for 60 pupils. Transportation of supplies, $535. I understand they are some distance from the railroad. We can not reduce this expense unless we have a larger attendance at the school. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the committee that the Committee on Indian Affairs has made a practice of allowing to each school $167 for each pupil, in addition to the salary of the superintendent. If that allowance were made to this school instead of the amount being $18,200, as in the bill, it would be $13,350. So, under the rule, the Committee on Indian Affairs has granted a very liberal amount for this school.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman think that one would be justified in moving a reduction of the amount carried in the bill?

Mr. NORTON. The gentleman may draw his own conclusions from the statements that have been made.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Last year the expense of every pupil in this school was $318. We are trying to keep the expense down to $167 per pupil after the superintendent's salary has been paid.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I call the gentleman's attention to the hearings, page 197, in which Mr. Meritt, the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, makes this statement:

In view of the showing made here of the per capita cost, I will not ask for an increase in this school.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I recall that when we went into this matter the estimate was reduced with the assent of the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. The Secretary of the Interior made a special report to the committee upon this bill, recommending the full amount in addition to the estimate. Day before yesterday Commissioner Sells was before the committee and the matter came up. He stated that this amount should be allowed.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The committee can not change its mind as often as some people may or wish it to. The committee thrashed this out thoroughly, went into every detail with the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs and his aids. We analyzed this matter, and the gentleman from California should be thankful that this is not a reduction below the amount carried in the bill.

Mr. RAKER. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in other schools the estimates run above $167.

Mr. CAMPBELL. But in no instance does it run to the amount in that school.

Mr. RAKER. That is true; but this school is off the railroad, and they have for the school what was once a fort.

Mr. CAMPBELL. And there has been some talk of abolishing this school because it is off the railroad and because it is so expensive. If the gentleman insists upon it, he will probably lead to that action.

Mr. RAKER. I insist upon it because I believe it is right. Investigation shows it; and if the committee sees fit to increase it, it ought to be increased. If they do not, I shall have to submit to the judgment of the committee. I hope the committee will increase it, as it ought to be, for the protection of these Indians.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, this school is provided for with a larger per capita than any other Indian school in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 21, line 8, by striking out, on line 8, all after the word "improvements," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$5,000; for new school building, $8,000; in all, $35,375."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on it. I hope that the gentleman will not make the point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order for a moment.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, the item for a new school building of $8,000 has been recommended by the department after a thorough investigation in the field and a report to the department by the agent, as well as by the report from the superintendent. The present school building, now occupied and used by the school, is an old building that has been there in the neighborhood of 40 or 45 years, and was used as a hospital by the fort when they had the soldiers there. This is the only place they have. It is on the hill back three or four hundred yards from the rest of the buildings; that is, the dormitory and the main building of the school. It is necessary; it ought to be provided for; it will give the superintendent and the teachers a better opportunity to get results. We are improving the other school; and it seems to me from all of the facts as presented, recommended, and requested by the department that it ought to be allowed. I hope the committee will see fit to place it in the bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that this is not authorized by law, and sustains the point order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and education of 90 Indian pupils at the Greenville Indian School, Cal., including pay of superintendent, $16,530; for general repairs and improvements, $3,600; for purchase of additional land for school farm, $1,500; in all, $21,630.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

Amend, on page 21, line 11, by striking out the figures "16,530" and inserting "18,400."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, the department has recommended the increase in this to $18,400, so as to give a sufficient amount of means so that the school might be maintained in an efficient way as the other schools are. Along in September I visited this school, went over the situation, and after the matter had been thoroughly investigated by the department they came to the conclusion unhesitatingly that this amount of money should be added. In other words, the prior appropriation should be increased so as to make it $18,400, to make the school efficient and give them a sufficient amount of money to run it as the other schools, and I trust that the committee may see its way clear to grant this increase.

Mr. KONOP. Mr. Chairman, I hope the committee will not adopt this amendment. In the justification by the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, it will be seen that 100 pupils were provided for. The capacity of the school at Greenville is only 90 pupils, and furthermore there is an enrollment of only 71 pupils and an average attendance of 61. So the committee was fully justified in reducing the number of pupils asked for by the department from 100 to 90. The cost of educating 90 pupils would be only $16,530, as provided in the bill. Furthermore, this is another one of the schools that has a high per capita expense. The cost per capita based upon the enrollment is $240.23 and the cost per capita based on the average attendance reaches up to the sum of $279.62. So I think the committee has been very liberal in allowing for the support of 90 pupils when there is an enrollment of only 71 and an attendance of only 61. I therefore hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, the conditions there are as in the other schools. The school is in the mountains, away from the railroad, and built so as to accommodate the Indians. There are in this neighborhood about twenty-five hundred Indians. They claim there are 100 pupils, the same number last year, contemplated to be provided for by this money, $18,400. It does not seem as though the committee should figure on depriving a school of the amount of money to run it so that it will compare with a school where there are 600 or 700 pupils, where they can get provisions more cheaply and everything else. We ought not to deprive those who live in the more remote districts from the same opportunities obtained by those who are at a place where you put your school in the center of population. For instance, they have taken a number of schools—and I shall not refer to them particularly for I do not want to be invidious—and have placed them in the center of some large population, taking the children from their homes and parents, instead of placing the school right among the Indians near by, where they have lived for years, and give them a better opportunity to be educated, so that they may have better conditions surrounding them, and because the expense is a little larger than the other school it does not seem hardly fair that that particular school should be so cut down as to deprive it of its efficiency.

Mr. KONOP. Mr. Chairman, we are not cutting down the appropriation; we are simply cutting down the number of pupils to the capacity of the school, and that necessitated a cut in the appropriation. Now, the enrollment at that school has been only 71, and the attendance has been only 61. We are providing for the education of 90 pupils. The department asked for 100, and we reduced it by 10, thinking that 90 was ample for the capacity of the school. That is all they have the capacity for, and I think we are providing very liberally for the school.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from California, if I may, how long has this school been maintained by the Government?

Mr. RAKER. It has been maintained, to my recollection, between seven and eight years.

Mr. MANN. Only eight years?

Mr. RAKER. I think that is about all.

Mr. MANN. And the number of pupils is going down?

Mr. RAKER. Well, not necessarily; no. Of course they are not all attending the school. This school was built, according to my recollection, by a missionary society, and the Government then bought it and took it over; and for a number of years—I think about seven years—the Government has owned, controlled, and run it.

Mr. MANN. How long did the missionary society run it?

Mr. RAKER. They only had it a couple of years.

Mr. MANN. Just as soon as they started it they turned it over to the Government for the Government to pay the expense.

Mr. RAKER. They had it a couple of years.

Mr. MANN. And then when they found it did not pay they loaded it onto the Government to pay the expense.

Mr. RAKER. No; I do not think that is it. I believe they had the idea that the Indians in that locality should be given the same treatment and consideration that they were given in other localities in the United States, and that a school there, near by the homes of their fathers and mothers, should be provided for these young Indians.

Mr. MANN. Is this on an Indian reservation?

Mr. RAKER. It is not. It is a nonreservation Indian school.

Mr. MANN. Do the Indians own their land there?

Mr. RAKER. A few of them do—have allotments—but a good many do not.

Mr. MANN. Have they contributed anything at all to the school expenses?

Mr. RAKER. I think not. It is a school that is maintained like the one at Carlisle and the Sherman Institute and many others which are maintained for the purpose of giving the Indians a better opportunity——

Mr. MANN. If it is like the school maintained at Carlisle and at the Sherman Institute we ought to abolish this because there is no object in maintaining this and the others, too. If the gentleman is correct, then this item ought to go out entirely.

Mr. RAKER. This is like a dozen schools which are maintained by the Government and on which the Government expends money for their maintenance.

Mr. MANN. Is there any place where the Government has maintained a school for years for the benefit of the Indians to which they contribute no portion of the expense; where they have not been able in the course of time to contribute to the expense of the school and the education we give to the young Indians to enable them in the course of time to take care of themselves; where they do not contribute anything toward the expense of educating their children?

Mr. RAKER. I think and I believe that the purpose of the school is to assist them in maintaining themselves after they have left the school, and I know of no place where they have contributed afterwards to the maintenance of the school. Now, the committee may inform the gentleman in reference to that fact, but personally I do not know.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has a wide experience about Indians. He has never heard of such a case and probably will not, if he stays here 40 years.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 21, by striking out, in lines 12 and 13, the language "$3,600; for purchase of additional land for school farm, $1,500; in all, $21,630" and insert in lieu thereof "including purchase of additional land for school farm, $8,000; for new school building, $8,000; for installation of laundry equipment, $12,000; in all, $35,600."

Mr. KONOP. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. MANN. I reserve a point of order, Mr. Chairman, on the amendment.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, this school has about 200 acres of land. Now, I am not responsible for this location as purchased by the Government. It is a school that has been recognized for the purpose of sending Indian children to for education the same as the other schools that have been provided for by this bill. The department recommended these items and recommended that they be placed upon the bill the same as the other items contained in the bill, with the same justification and no more than the other items for barns and for new school buildings, septic tank, and what not for the other Indian schools. The Secretary of the Interior made a special report upon this particular improvement, and I believed that without question as the others have been allowed that it would be allowed. I do not care to refer to what has been allowed to the other schools. I do not care to call the attention of the committee to the building of a barn for the other schools for practically $5,000, but practically the same justification and no more is provided for in this, and I took it for granted; and when I appeared before the committee last Friday I believed, from what gentlemen told me that there would be no question of points of order being raised, and under the statement then made by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Mr. Sells, to the committee, that the matter would be allowed, without a point of order.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I yield.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentleman must recognize the fact that when he appeared before the committee on Friday the Indian bill had had final action by the Committee on Indian Affairs and had been reported.

Mr. RAKER. I do.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I think what the gentleman was told was that if he could get all the members of the committee to agree to it and justify it sufficiently there would be no objection.

Mr. RAKER. I thought I had.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. But certainly it would take almost unanimous action in the House Committee on Indian Affairs to change a recommendation already made before the gentleman appeared before that committee.

Mr. RAKER. Well, I do not care and am not going to say anything about the appearance before the committee or anything of that kind, because I suppose it could be justified and could be disposed of here, and I do not care to go into those matters. I want to get into the merits of this particular place.

I want to call the committee's attention to this, that this tract of land and the buildings are back at least 400 yards from the public road, without any access from the public road to these grounds or to this building. In front of the building are two houses, owned by others and upon their land, to the inconvenience of the Indian Service, and they ought to be purchased and owned by the Government. With these scholars there they have no land upon which they may maintain a dairy; they have no land upon which they can raise stock; they have no water right for the purpose of irrigating that land which they have. They have been putting in a small tank for the purpose of water for the school building only, and the main building is the greater part of wood. The boys and girls are in the same building, with no separate place in the school building for the boys or for the girls, and it has been the desire of the service for the last four years to have a new building, so that they can keep the boys in one building and the girls in the other, and then have a main classroom or classrooms for the purpose of giving both instruction.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAKER. In regard to the purchase of the land, the very object and the very purpose of the Indian Service and of these schools ought to be and is unquestionably to give these young men and women some instruction in the everyday occurrences of life, so that they may be of some benefit to themselves or their parents when they leave school, so that they will not be simply going out with the rudimentary education that they receive in the school. Education in regard to farming and in regard to dairying, and other matters connected therewith, might be of some value to them, and they might themselves assist in maintaining the school in the way of helping to farm, in the way of learning how to handle horses, and in the way of learning how to dairy. Here is a school for which we simply ask for $1,200 for the laundry equipment.

Now, unquestionably, if you build a barn for $5,000 for a few cows and horses you ought to expend at least $1,200 to put a laundry into a school of this kind, to the end that they might do their own work. They could then do their own washing, their own ironing, their own laundering. And this committee ought not to deprive this institution of the opportunity of having them keep their clothes clean, their bedding clean, and the various kitchen and dining-room linen clean.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I yield.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does not the gentleman think it would be very bad legislation on the part of Congress, when it costs $279 to educate a pupil at Fort Bidwell and when they can get better schools for $167, much better schools, and pay the transportation, too?

Mr. RAKER. I do not.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I disagree with you.

Mr. RAKER. I do not believe it, but I believe that these country schools, with just as good teachers as they have in the larger places, where the pupils are close to the surroundings in which they were born, where they can go home if they want to, at the proper time, and where they can learn some of the things relative to agriculture, where they can become familiar with cattle and horses, and with dairying, and all similar kinds of work, make them more self-supporting, and you give them a better opportunity than you do if you take them off a thousand or five hundred miles and put them into a school where they are confined in an inclosure of 8 or 10 acres, as compared with the open country and as it would be in a country school. They have the same books and they have the same teachers and ought to have the same program. Here is a program printed by this school which, if carried out, is as efficient, will give as good results, will give the young Indian as much opportunity to become a self-supporting individual as those at the larger places.

And therefore from all considerations and conditions you ought not to be gathering the Indian from the place of his nativity and taking him off to some particularly large locality where you have a large school.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman seeks to increase the appropriation for this school at Greenville, Cal., as I understand it?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Well, what sort of training on the farm is done at these schools?

Mr. RAKER. They have not a farm. That is what we are trying to get.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman spoke a while ago of cattle and horses.

Mr. RAKER. I said they had not any. That is what we want the appropriation for. We have not any land.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is what I want to ask the gentleman about.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I am interested in this paragraph.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this item close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania can not strike out the last word.

Mr. STAFFORD. You can not do that until the point of order is disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] asks unanimous consent that debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I raise the question of the propriety of that, for there is a point of order pending.

Mr. KONOP. I reserve the point of order, Mr. Chairman, for five minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. You can not close debate with a point of order pending.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to speak on the merits of the proposition.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no objection to unanimous consent for gentlemen to go ahead, but you can not close debate with a point of order pending.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] is not insisting upon making his remarks on this particular paragraph, and I suggest we dispose of this in one way or another.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is pending. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order, and the point of order is sustained.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Are all pro forma amendments exhausted?

The CHAIRMAN. They are all exhausted.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the proceeds arising from the sale of said lands shall constitute a fund to be used under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for the maintenance and education of the Indians and their children now residing on said lands, and for the construction of roads, trails, and other improvements, and for other purposes, for their benefit.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin reserves a point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, my inquiries of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] a moment ago were for the purpose of calling attention to sheep raising in the United States. I desired to find out whether in this matter of educating the Indians any attention was being paid to the encouragement of the sheep industry. If Indians are to be taught the use of cattle and their availability for the market, I think it would be important also to direct their attention to the cultivation of sheep. This question is not sectional to California and not applicable particularly to the gentleman's district, and maybe not to this particular paragraph, but my attention has recently been called to the fact that the sheep industry is not making that progress that it ought to make in the United States.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, may I answer that question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. I do not refer to the particular appropriation, but I notice that they are providing for the cultivation of hogs and sheep by an appropriation of $8,000, by building a barn for the purpose of housing 2 boars and 1 bull and 24 cows and 8 horses and 1 mule and 1 man. Now, of course, that object to the Indians, at an expense of $8,000, is more necessary than to provide $1,200 to institute and put in a laundry equipment for their cleanliness.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. My point was that while we were discussing the education of the Indian, and making appropriations for him, we might direct his attention to that particular education which is comprehended in the raising of sheep. If you are going to make appropriations for him for horse culture and cattle culture, you might also have him think a little bit about the opportunities that present themselves in the raising of sheep.

Mr. RAKER. In the Fort Bidwell Indian School they have about 10,000 acres of the military reservation that belongs to the school. They are raising horses and cattle and hogs there, and they can go into the raising of sheep if they are encouraged to do it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman knows that there is a very large demand at the present time for wool?

Mr. RAKER. Surely, and also for mutton.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And that war conditions have increased that demand?

Mr. RAKER. Yes. There is an increased demand for horses, just the same. The war conditions have raised the demand for horses and their prices.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman knows that the price of mutton has gone up in recent years.

Mr. RAKER. There is no question about that. I think the committee has made many provisions in the bill in other places to give the Indians opportunity to go into the sheep business. They are in the sheep business down in New Mexico and in Arizona, and very properly so.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am dealing with the sheep question now, as it relates to the wool clip, and as it relates to sheep meat for food. The gentleman would not compare horse meat with sheep meat for food, would he?

Mr. RAKER. No; I certainly would not. I will answer the gentleman's question the best I can. It would be good business for the school to have sheep in connection with their institution and reservation, for wool and for meat, beyond all question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am glad that the gentleman agrees with me that it would be a good thing for the Indian, as well as the white man, to pay a little attention to sheep raising, particularly at the present time.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. The gentleman probably knows that at this time it is generally conceded that there is a greater return of profit for money invested in sheep than in either horses or cattle or any other live stock; that is, a dollar invested in sheep to-day will, in returns, not taking into consideration the cost of herders, bring 100 per cent in a year.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am very glad the gentleman from North Dakota has made that statement. It confirms the statement made by the gentleman from California, and sets the word of a good Republican alongside that of a good Democrat. But, Mr. Chairman, my people are very much interested in the sheep industry. We want more wool, and we want to reduce, if possible, the price of sheep food. Therefore I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to extend my remarks in the RECORD on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of wool and mutton. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

In extension of remarks Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania said:

The sheep industry is one of the bonds of union between the Western and Southern States and the East. It helps as much as any other to prove our mutual interest and interdependence. The farmer sometimes feels that the city stands aloof and that undue prejudices exist. This question frequently arises in the discussion of the tariff—a suggestion which it would be well to remember in connection with the present desire of the eastern or wool manufacturing States to encourage the production of raw wool in the West.

That the eastern consumers of the products of sheep have no undue advantage over the producers of sheep is demonstrated by the prices they are compelled to pay for lamb and mutton and for clothing made of wool. The consumer of the East surely has no advantage over the consumer of the South and West in this regard; but the manufacturer of wool and the consumer of sheep meat in foreign countries where sheep are raised in more favorable climates and at less expense than they are raised in the rigorous climate of the Northwest, for instance, undoubtedly have a great advantage over the producers and consumers, as well as the manufacturers, of the United States. This, of course, presuming that no duties are laid upon foreign imports coming into the United States to compete with American products.

But, Mr. Chairman, I do not raise this question for the purpose of discussing the tariff upon wool or upon the products of wool. The people of my city and State are progressive and they desire to improve their trade relations with the people of other States. If the sheep-raising industry is developed in Ohio or Idaho or Montana, or in other sections where we are dispensing public lands, it will be just as helpful to the people of my city in providing us with a better supply of raw materials, as it will be helpful to the people of these Western States to obtain from us the woolen garments which protect them from the blasts of winter.

The wool people of Philadelphia, in particular, have been giving thought to this subject, and in order that their views as expressed by the Philadelphia Wool and Textile Association may be laid before Congress I submit the following letter and brief just received from them:

PHILADELPHIA WOOL AND TEXTILE ASSOCIATION,
Philadelphia, February 3, 1916.

Hon. J. HAMPTON MOORE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At a special meeting of this association, the executive committee was instructed to inaugurate a campaign to arouse interest in all directions and to make an effort to get action for the purpose of developing the industry of raising sheep. Resolutions were passed, a copy of which it is intended will be mailed to each Member of the Congress in Washington. I inclose herewith a general statement which covers our position. We desire that this matter shall be taken up energetically and expect to obtain a general cooperation, especially of trade interests, for that purpose. * * * From your connections with us we look to you for assistance. Will you please advise me what is the best manner in which this can be presented to the Congress and what action you would recommend in connection therewith.

With best regards personally, I am,

Yours, respectfully, A. C. BIGELOW, President.

REASONS WHY THE SHEEP-RAISING INDUSTRY SHOULD BE PROTECTED AND ENCOURAGED—ARGUMENT OF THE PHILADELPHIA WOOL AND TEXTILE ASSOCIATION.

The Philadelphia Wool and Textile Association, being intimately acquainted by their trade requirements with the sheep industry of the world and especially of the United States, feel it to be their duty to arouse the attention of the people of the United States to the decrease in the number of sheep in the United States, and in consequence thereof to the decreased supply of wool and meat available for the needs of our population. From the facts regarding this matter which comes to our knowledge we not only have evidence of decreased production, but it appears to us that this decrease will continue unless some effective efforts are made to interest and encourage our farming population to engage more generally in the maintenance of sheep. Moreover, we are aware that these supplies available from foreign sources are evidently also on the decline, and we have seen what serious effect a foreign war can produce on such foreign sources of supply.

The meat and clothing supply of our people is a vital necessity, and with an ever-increasing population, any decrease in said supply should engage the most serious attention of everyone. The needs of our people in peace and a reasonable preparedness for possible war makes it imperative that this country shall at once take steps to increase our domestic production.

It is a fact that sheep are profitable on almost any farm, and the size of the flocks will depend upon varying conditions. As both wool and mutton realize high prices now and are likely to do so in the future, there is no doubt that a proper campaign of education will be effective to induce our farmers to engage more generally in this industry. One of the great factors which has operated in the past to discourage our eastern farmers from keeping sheep on the farm has been the wanton killing of sheep by dogs. It will be absolutely necessary to have stringent laws passed and enforced which will be effective to protect the flocks from the ravages of these animals.

It appears decidedly illogical that so little protection is given to the sheep which can supply us with food and clothing, while all States have laws for the protection of game animals and fish, whose value to the community is relatively insignificant.

There is scarcely any part of our country where at least a few sheep can not be kept on each farm to advantage, and there is now a very large area of practically unproductive lands on the hill and mountain ranges which stretch along our entire eastern section which is especially adapted to the grazing of sheep. It is in this section that we see the best opening for a large increase in our flocks of sheep. There is here a wonderful opportunity for developing an industry profitable to those engaged therein and absolutely essential to our economic needs. It is more than an economic proposition, however; it is a patriotic one, which fits in with that conservation of resources making for national preparedness.

This is a matter which affects the common good of all, and we desire to awaken the interest of the public to its importance. We solicit the cooperation of organized trade bodies generally with the view to concerted action in the matter. We ask the attention of our Representatives who make our laws to an investigation of this subject, that they may be prepared to develop action and pass laws which shall protect and encourage this important industry.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserved a point of order to this paragraph for the purpose of obtaining some information. I would like to inquire of some member of the committee whether this is not the same proposition that was reported to the House in the last Congress in the form of a separate bill?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes; I think it is.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I recall the discussion anent that measure, it showed that a few of these Indians living somewhat removed from civilization have a surplus fund of something like $25,000, which was proposed by that bill to be expended on roads and bridges. By observation of the new language, I notice that you contemplate incorporating in this paragraph here a provision to build a road and bridges leading somewhere outside the reservation.

As I recall the discussion at that time, there was not sufficient showing made to justify the expenditure of all the surplus funds of those poor Indians for the purpose of building roads that would be utilized by the public generally.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I do not recall that fact now. I think I was perfectly satisfied with the justification at that time, but it has been two or three years, and some phases have escaped my mind at this time.

Mr. STAFFORD. The purpose of this change of phraseology is to enable the department to utilize the surplus funds of these Indians in the construction of wagon roads and bridges on this narrow reservation, which is somewhat removed from civilization?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes. If the gentleman will permit me, the sum of $25,000 has been derived from the sale of the surplus lands, but under existing law these funds can not be used for any purpose except support and education. It is now desired to construct roads on the reservation, and in order to do that this item has been inserted.

Mr. STAFFORD. The surplus derived from those lands, now amounting to about $25,000, can, under the law, be used only for the maintenance and education of the Indians. It was proposed in the last Congress by a separate bill not to utilize that fund for the maintenance and education of these poor Indians, but to have it expended in the construction of roads and bridges for the benefit of outsiders. I question, Mr. Chairman, the propriety of opening this small fund of $25,000, the only balance that these Indians have for their maintenance and support, and utilize it for the building of some roads and bridges under the direction of some Indian agent, and therefore I make the point of order.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Before the gentleman makes the point of order——

Mr. STAFFORD. I will reserve it, to allow the gentleman to make a further explanation.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I should like to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the bureau officials stated that the object of the expenditure of this money was to build a road so that the Indians might get to the school. An appropriation of money for the education of the Indians will do them very little good unless they can have a road to reach the school.

Mr. STAFFORD. Did not the hearings disclose that this fund is not sufficient to complete the road? I believe the gentleman will find that they just merely wished to utilize this work on a part of the road and that it will not be completed with this $25,000.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Oh, yes; it does say they can not complete the entire system, but they propose to use it to the maximum advantage in getting results and to complete the distance with a trail, which would give them access to the school.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I recall the discussion of the bill a year ago, at which time we went into it very thoroughly, it was the opinion of quite a few members of the committee that it was not advantageous to divert this money from maintenance and education to the building of a road. They have a trail at present. Therefore I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes a point of order which the Chair sustains. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

FLORIDA.

SEC. 4. For relief of distress among the Seminole Indians in Florida, and for purposes of their civilization and education, $8,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of ascertaining the real purpose of this item. It is something new in the Indian appropriation bill, and I think there should be some explanation of the reason for it.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I think the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SEARS] can explain that.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, this is not a new proposition.

Mr. STAFFORD. It has not been carried in the bill recently. It was not carried last year.

Mr. SEARS. There has been an unexpended balance.

Mr. STAFFORD. Perhaps 10 years ago there was an appropriation of $10,000, and the unexpended balance of that original appropriation has been made available each year for the use of these Seminole Indians. Here you are appropriating $8,000 in one year, when it is disclosed that it requires only about $2,000 to support them in any one year. I would like to have some explanation as to the reason for this additional appropriation, if the gentleman will give it.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, there was an appropriation of $10,000 made some years ago. Of that appropriation an unexpended balance remains. We have had a great deal of difficulty in doing anything with the Seminoles of Florida, but they are beginning to realize that the white men are their friends, and last year the superintendent of that agency was successful in getting six Indians to go to a public white school. That shows that he is accomplishing something. There was an unexpended balance last year of $2,000, and the department practically asked for $10,000, but my idea was to keep the appropriation at $10,000, the amount made some years ago. As the gentleman from Wisconsin no doubt knows, or will learn by referring to the hearings, the agent who has been working with the Seminoles was criticized because of the policy he was pursuing. I want to state to the gentleman frankly that I indorse the policy of the agent of the Seminoles of Florida. That policy has been not to give a Seminole one dollar in the way of support unless the Seminole actually needed it. These Indians are making a poor living, but they are able so far to do so. They do not mind work such as they are use to, and we of Florida do not want them to be put in the position of begging this Government for assistance or to be taught that the Government will support them whether they try to help themselves or not. I only want to keep this fund up to the sum of $10,000 in order that we may take care of any case of helplessness, sickness, or poverty that may come before this agent; that we may continue the work which we have thus begun; have these children go to the public schools, and if necessary build a school for their education.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman states that about $2,000 is all that is necessary for their care. Here is an appropriation of $8,000; not a continuing appropriation, but merely for the coming fiscal year—much more than is necessary for their support. I should like to address the gentleman on another subject, and inquire whether, as has been suggested, this additional appropriation is not for the purpose of purchasing lands?

Mr. SEARS. It is not. On my own motion I had that stricken from the item.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, upon my motion the committee struck out the provision for the purchase of land. I do not want to include that in the bill, because I feel that if the purchase of land should be desired for the Seminoles, it should be authorized by a special bill introduced for that purpose.

For the information of the gentleman, I will state that I introduced a bill with that end in view, and I myself asked the committee not to include it in this appropriation for the support, civilization, and education of the Seminoles. Last year practically nothing was spent for the support of about 800 Seminoles. I think that is a good showing. I hope that will always be the case, but we can not tell. The Seminoles are being gradually crowded out.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman explain why he does not believe it is feasible to purchase land for these Seminoles to work?

Mr. SEARS. It is not feasible with this small amount.

Mr. STAFFORD. But with the original recommendation of $10,000 there was a provision including the purchase of such lands as the Secretary might deem proper. I should like to inquire why the gentleman did not favor the purchase of lands for these Indians.

Mr. SEARS. I do favor it; but I was informed by the committee that it was subject to a point of order, and I stated that I would bring that matter up before Congress at a later date.

Mr. STAFFORD. There are many things which are subject to points of order carried in this bill, which get through because there is merit in the propositions.

Mr. SEARS. That may be true; but I did not want to tack it onto this bill and try to get it through in that way. Unless I can convince the Members of the House that the purchase of land is a meritorious proposition, I do not want it.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman certainly takes a very commendable position; and, in view of what he has said, I will not go any further, and will withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 7. For clearing the title to lands owned or possessed by the Chettimanchi Band of Indians of Louisiana, for purchase of such lands as may be required to place them on a basis of self-support, and for such other relief as may be needed in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, $1,500: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, require that the legal title to all property purchased, or the title to which is to be cleared, with the funds hereby appropriated shall be in the name of the United States for the use and benefit of the Indians.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order to the paragraph. I would like to inquire of the chairman in reference to this paragraph. This is a new paragraph in the bill. Will the chairman kindly state who the Indians are designated by the title Chettimanchi, how many there are, and where they are?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I understand there are about 500 Indians in the band. Under the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 17, 1844, to provide for the adjustment of land claims within the States of Missouri, Arkansas, and Louisiana, to enable the claimants to land within certain States to institute proceedings to try the validity of their claim, the Chettimanchi Indians, through Alexander Bertin, acting as their chief, and Joseph Yoyo, on the 15th of June, 1846, filed their petition in the district court of the United States for the district of Louisiana, praying for certificate of title to a tract of land in the parish of St. Mary claimed by the Chettimanchi Indians, of which they had been in possession more than 70 years preceding the present suit.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I am aware of what is generally in the hearings, but what I want to ask is, is this band related to the Choctaws?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is a band of Indians closely allied, I think, to the Five Original Tribes across the Mississippi River who settled in Louisiana.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. With the Choctaws?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. No; I think not.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. To which tribe of Indians did they belong? What is their racial classification?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The Indians belong to the same racial classification as the Five Civilized Tribes, I think.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. But the five tribes do not all belong to the same race.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They were semicivilized Indians. The five tribes were known originally as the Five Civilized Tribes. We have the old Alabama Tribe in my State and the Chettimanchis in Louisiana, and it seems as if there might be some racial connection between those Indians and others that followed farming.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I would like to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma if these Indians are Choctaws?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I never heard of these Indians until last year, when after this bill had passed the House and Senate we went into conference, and I found this provision in the bill. It was explained then by the managers on the part of the Senate and by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that land had been purchased for these Indians and there was some defect in the title which required about $1,500 to cure. That amount had been placed in the bill on the floor of the Senate and was finally agreed to in conference. I do not think the conference report ever got to the House.

I do not know what the racial classification of these Indians is, but I do not think they are any part of the Five Civilized Tribes. They seem to be a separate band of Indians. I have not looked up to see what stock of the Indian race they came from.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The gentleman from Oklahoma well knows that numerous bands belonging to the Choctaws moved from their home in Mississippi; that some have gone into Texas and some into Louisiana, and small bands elsewhere, who did not like to join the large band in what is now Oklahoma. Is it the gentleman's opinion that this is one of those wandering bands?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. No. If I recollect correctly, it was explained that they were a separate tribe.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. They can not be Creeks or Chickasaws.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. No; they are Chettimanchis, a tribe I never heard of until last year; but that is the explanation made by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The United States Government on the 15th of June, 1846, recognized them as Chettimanchis, and as having occupied the land for 70 years before.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I understand there are about 500 of these Indians, whatever may be their racial classification, for whom provision was made many years ago by the purchase of land; that some defect in title has developed, and this $1,500 is for the purpose of curing the defects in the title. Now, Mr. Chairman, if there is a defect in the title such as will require the purchase of somebody else's rights, does the gentleman think that $1,500 will go very far toward the purchase of these rights?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I will say to the gentleman that the commissioner stated to us that this $1,500 would protect the Indians completely in the lands and would cure any defect in title. If my memory serves me right, this land was given to the Indians by some philanthropic institution or person, and was taken care of for them, but in some way or other the title was not quite complete, and it took $1,500 to cure it. I asked the commissioner especially, when before the conference committee, if this contemplated the establishment of a new bureau, and he said it would not; he said that the Indians were self-supporting.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. I renew the point of order, Mr. Chairman, and will withhold it for the time being.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the matter.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not know that I shall want to insist on the point of order. I want to call attention to the fact that this appropriation is for the purpose, as I see from the statement on page 220 of the hearings, of paying an attorney's fee. It seems that these Indians way back in 1848 filed their petition in the district court of the United States for the district of Louisiana for the purpose of securing a certificate of title to a tract of land in the Parish of St. Mary claimed by them.

There was some litigation running along for a number of years and finally the litigation was settled in favor of the Indians. An attorney who represented the Indians in some of these proceedings had a claim against the Indians for $1,200. The Indians not paying it, judgment was secured and the lands were to be sold to settle the judgment, but as no offer was made equal to two-thirds of the appraised price they were not sold, whereupon a Miss McIlhenny, of New Orleans, came forward and paid the judgment. The amount appropriated would, I presume, be used for the purpose of reimbursing Miss McIlhenny for the sum she paid out to satisfy the judgment of the attorney. It may be an entirely proper thing for us to go about over the land searching out cases where persons having Indian ancestry or some strain of Indian blood have gotten into debt and are in hard luck and pay the judgments against them and their debts generally.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Of course it is very patent that if we are going to start in on that sort of policy we will go far afield and spend a great deal of money before we get through. There are 500 of these Indians, or there were, and it would seem that among 500 Indians enough money could be raised to pay a judgment of $1,200. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, there are 260 acres of this land, I believe, in controversy, and the land of the Indians was valued at a little more than $30 per acre. The improvements thereon are valued at from two to three thousand dollars, and if we take $1,200 to pay the judgment there would be little left for the purchase of additional lands. An appropriation at this time will serve to save the Indians their property and will save a larger draft upon the public at a later date.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I am not denying that a proposition of this kind appeals to one's generosity. I think the lady who paid the judgment and thus saved the Indians their home is entitled to a great deal of credit, but it is a question whether the Government of the United States should assume to pay every claim or judgment or debt against people of Indian blood.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will withdraw his point of order. These are poor Indians, and he well knows that all of the Indians in the United States—and the United States has recognized these people as Indians—are the wards of the Government. These particular Indians are the wards of the Government just as much as any other Indian, and they are about to lose their lands for the amount of $1,200, and I think the Government ought to take care of them.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I am discussing this because it involves an important question. When does an Indian or an individual with some Indian blood cease to be a ward of the Government, or, never having been in fact a ward of the Government, how long is the Government responsible for their debts? These Indians acquired their lands in 1848, or at least proceedings were instituted at that time under which they secured the lands. They had then been in possession of this land for 70 years. I know nothing about them, but I presume it is altogether likely that if you were to go down into that community you would have some difficulty in segregating these so-called Indians from the people of the community generally. So far as we have any information to the contrary, they may be Indians in name only. The probability is that they are people who have largely intermarried with the whites. At least they have lived there now for nigh onto 100 years without having any official relationship with the Federal Government. After 100 years we find that an attorney who attended to some business for them secured a judgment against them in the sum of $1,200, whereupon some sympathetic folks concluded that it would be a very fine thing to relieve these so-called Indians, or these alleged Indians, from their burden of indebtedness by saddling it on the Federal Government. I shall not make the point of order, but I do want to suggest that unless we draw the line somewhere we will ultimately be called upon to pay the debts of people all over the country upon the theory that they have some Indian blood. Upon the theory that their forefathers having at one time been wards of the Government, or competent to be considered wards of the Government, we are under obligation to relieve them whenever we find them in trouble or distress.

For quite a good many years it was the policy of the Indian Bureau to endeavor to make the Indian a self-supporting citizen, and to sever his connection with the Federal Government and withdraw our responsibility from these people. Here are Indians that, so far as we know, have not for four or five generations had any official relationship with the Federal Government, so far at least as being considered wards of the Government is concerned. The probability is that at no time were these Indians or their ancestors recognized as wards of the Government in the sense in which we use that term with regard to reservation Indians, and yet inasmuch as they have some Indian blood and could not pay a little claim and are in debt, not disposed to pay, it is proposed to unload the burden on Uncle Sam.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has again expired. The point of order is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

MINNESOTA.

SEC. 9. For support and education of 225 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Pipestone, Minn., including pay of superintendent, $39,175; for general repairs and improvements, and for remodeling building for dormitory purposes, $7,000; for mechanical and general utility shop building, $10,000; for septic tank, $5,500; in all, $61,675.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. It is my recollection that this item is about $35,000 above the estimate. I presume there is a very good reason for that increase, but I should like to inquire what the increase above the appropriation is to be used for?

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, the amount used in the fiscal year preceding was $55,000. The estimate that came in from the department was $51,000, and that was changed by increasing it about $10,000 for the purpose of remodeling a building to make a dormitory, and at the same time building a shop building to be used for general utility purposes, such as plumbing, carpentering, tailoring, and various vocations taught at that school. I think that is the best of any of the Indian schools in the country possibly outside of Carlisle, and it is for the purpose of an inexpensive way arriving at a solution of the problem of getting further dormitory accommodations at this school.

I think it is a most economical proposition, because better facilities can be offered there than anywhere else for the same money.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I am very glad the gentleman from Wyoming recognizes the propriety of this slight increase, and I have made this pro forma amendment for the sole purpose of calling attention to certain facts relative to Minnesota. This school is located in the State at Pipestone, practically on the border line between South Dakota and Minnesota. It is the only school in the State of any character receiving a gratuity from the United States Government. There is scarcely an Indian in the State of Minnesota who is deriving any benefit from the school. There are a few, but very few indeed. The great majority of the students of the school come from distant places—South Dakota, even Nebraska and other States. The climate is splendid, the community one of the best in the world, the morale of the school extraordinarily high, and it is a school that is serving not a local but a general purpose. Therefore it seems to me that the committee was extremely well advised when it made the slight increase in the appropriation for repairs.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I will.

Mr. MONDELL. It is true some of the Minnesota Indians attend this school?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I looked into that three or four years ago, and the number was so ridiculously small that it was almost negligible. This school is located in the Sioux country, and practically all the Sioux Indians of our State have left or were driven out subsequent to 1862. The Indians of our State are almost exclusively of the Chippewa Band and do not go to the school. I think I am correct in that statement; if not, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ELLSWORTH] can correct me. This school is doing an exceedingly valuable work for the Indians of that entire region and not for those particularly from Minnesota.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, the increase in this item was very carefully considered by the committee and it was agreed to on the very fine showing for the need of an increase that was presented by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ELLSWORTH]. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ELLSWORTH] has been at the school and he has carefully investigated the work done by the school and the needs of the school. The agreement to increase this appropriation was unanimous in the committee, and I think I am safe in saying that there was no better showing made by anyone before the committee for an increase in the amount recommended by the Indian Bureau than was made in this particular case by the very affable, able, and energetic gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ELLSWORTH].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States, at his discretion, the sum of $185,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the principal sum on deposit to the credit of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, arising under section 7 of the act of January 14, 1889, entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota," and to use the same for the purpose of promoting civilization and self-support among the said Indians in manner and for purposes provided for in said act.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the figures "$185,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$100,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 24, line 10, strike out the figures "$185,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$100,000."

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, in support of this offered amendment I would like to have the attention of the committee while I present certain facts which I think are worthy of serious consideration. The Indians in Minnesota are paying their own bills. At no time within a great many years have any gratuities been extended by the United States to the Chippewas of Minnesota. The treaty which was made between the United States and the Chippewa Bands, assembled into one, acting as a unit, in 1889 provided that thereafter the property of the Indians should be placed in the hands of the United States, a part to be distributed for certain purposes at a certain time and a part to be distributed at the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior from time to time, not exceeding a certain amount, and the residue to be distributed among the people living and members of the tribe at the end of 50 years. The justification for this paragraph is found in that part of the treaty which says that Congress can appropriate from time to time sums of money not exceeding 5 per cent of the annual income on the trust fund held by the United States belonging to these Indians, such sums to be turned over to the Secretary of the Interior, by him to be expended for the support and civilization of the Indians. Under that large sums of money have been spent in the past. It seems that every year there has been an increase in the expenses connected with this administration, notwithstanding the fact that every year has shown a decrease in the number of Indians actually to be supervised and a large increase in the number of Indians who have become self-supporting and registered among the competents. It seems easy to add an official, to begin an expense, but mighty difficult ever to stop or to cut it off. I was extremely surprised to find what it is costing to spend the money of the Indians of Minnesota.

For four years I have been trying to get a detailed statement from the Indian Office showing the items that come out of this appropriation annually made, but by reason of lack of clerical assistance or by reason of bookkeeping not being such as to make the figures easily ascertainable I have never yet been able to get that detailed account, although they have supplied me with certain lump sums or general subjects of appropriations so that we may know what the general sums and general purposes are which are cared for out of these funds. I find from the letter of the Secretary of the Interior transmitted December 6 last, the year just closed, there were expended for the support and civilization of the Indians of Minnesota out of their own funds $274,000. If you gentlemen will recall, last year the bill carried not only this $185,000 but an additional appropriation of $25,000 for a hospital and some other minor appropriations. I think there was also one of $40,000 with which to purchase land for the Mille Lacs Lake Indians. Now, do you know what it cost——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to speak five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have an understanding with the gentleman as to the length of debate. Will the gentleman from Minnesota consume more than 10 minutes?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, this is a very important item. The gentleman is seeking to save the Government $85,000 and to save the Indian funds at the same time.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I do not expect that I shall ask for more than 10 minutes myself, but I would like to get consent for as much time as may be necessary.

Mr. STAFFORD. Say at the end of 25 or 30 minutes; that will be entirely acceptable.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that at the end of 25 minutes all debate on this section and amendments thereto close.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that at the end of 25 minutes all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Gentlemen, I was about to inquire if any of you could imagine what it costs the Indians for the United States officials to spend $274,000 for their benefit. I tell you it costs $215,000. Here is the letter from the Secretary of the Interior containing the figures. In other words, if a man has to pay rent for his house of $50 a month, if he were an Indian it would cost another $50 to make the transaction. In other words, it would cost him about $100 for his rent. If an Indian wants to buy a team of horses for $500, it would cost him about $1,000 before he got it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Who pays that?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The Indian pays it out of his own money.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is, he pays $274,000?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. And he pays the $215,000.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Out of his own money?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Out of his own money. And I feel justified in making this statement, because there is generally a wide dissatisfaction among the Indians of my State over the rapid depletion of their trust funds. They feel they are not getting their money's worth. They are not getting value received. Now, the inquiry naturally comes, are those Indians incompetent? Are they of such a character that we must spend their money for them—and for every dollar that we invest for their benefit it will cost them a dollar because of our work?

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I will be pleased to do so, but I was about to complete the statement.

Mr. NORTON. A general complaint was made before the committee on this item. A delegation, as the gentleman probably knows, appeared before the committee, and appeared by an attorney, or by a so-called attorney.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. He was an attorney. That was Ed Rogers, the best football player in the United States—a perfect gentleman and a first-class lawyer.

Mr. NORTON. No; I do not refer to Ed Rogers. I know Mr. Rogers well and most favorably. The delegation and the one who addressed the committee as their attorney were asked to make charges as to some particular misuse of these funds. They were unable to do so. Now, can the gentleman present to this committee any specific charges of misuse of the funds?

I desire to say that I quite agree with the gentleman that about 90 per cent of these Indians should be released from the control of the Government and be given the funds that are now in the Treasury belonging to them, but has the gentleman any bill of particulars to present in the case other than the general statement he makes here now and has made before?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. No; I have no bill of particulars to file that would be complete. I desire to direct the attention of the committee to certain items illustrative of what I think the general condition is. I, of course, have not taken the time or opportunity to make a detailed investigation of this matter.

I was a little bit incorrect when I said it cost the Indians $215,000 to have spent for them $274,000. It costs them more than that. The $215,000 was paid out of their money for salaries alone, for employees, according to the letter of the Secretary of the Interior. You have got to add to this the cost of transportation of their supplies and things of that kind, which will make the amount much larger.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. By what names do these employees go?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Some are superintendents, some are teachers, some are farmers, some are laborers, and some are Indian policemen. I think those classes include them all.

Mr. CAMPBELL. In your judgment, would the reduction you have suggested in this item in any way cripple the real work that ought to be done among the Indians in their schools or in other directions?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] has again expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Minnesota may proceed for five minutes more.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. To be taken out of the time they have got.

Mr. CAMPBELL. To be taken out of that time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. That question has been in my mind ever since I have considered the advisability of making this motion. And I am frank to say I do not know. I have been requested to make the reduction very much greater than I have made it by this motion. I thought it would be wise not to reduce it below $100,000. I am not certain but that to reduce it by $85,000 at one blow might work some disadvantage, and I certainly do not want to cripple any needed work for these Indians. Some of the work I know is splendid. I do not want to be captious about it, but I do not know. It seems to me if the sum is reduced to $100,000, and there is reasonable attention given to the necessities of the situation, no great harm will result. I was about to make a further inquiry. What is the condition of these Indians whose money is thus being expended year after year? I find from the hearings the statement of the Assistant Indian Commissioner, Mr. Meritt, that there are practically 11,200 Indians in Minnesota subject to the jurisdiction of the Government. In these 11,000, however, 6,000 are unallotted. That means 6,000 Indians no longer having tribal relations, or who are children born since the date when the allotments were made, and, of course, small children. There are only 2,000 of them having trust patents. Three thousand five hundred of them have been adjudged competents by the Indian Office itself, and patents in fee have hitherto been issued to them. However, we must modify that by the further statement that some of these patents in fee were secured under the so-called Clapp Act and some of them are now involved in litigation, it being claimed they were issued full-blood and therefore presumably to incompetent Indians. Especially the commissioner before the Indian Committee, I am informed, and the chairman will correct me if I misstate the facts, as I was not there and can not state them of my own knowledge. The Indian Commissioner or his assistant before the Indian Committee a few days ago said that at least 60 or 70 per cent of the Indians in Minnesota are perfectly competent to manager their own affairs.

Therefore, it seems to me, it is very safe to say that of the 11,000 Indians who are subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Government, not more than 4,000 or 5,000 at the outside need the care of the United States Government in any degree. Personally I think the number is not over 2,500. If 2,500, it is costing them about $100 apiece each year to have the Government manage their affairs for them. It is costing these men who are competent, under any consideration or aspect of the case, almost as much to have their business done for them as the value of the business is when it is done.

Now, to cite some illustrations, I made some statements before the Committee on Indian Affairs the other day to the effect that I had learned to my infinite surprise that at the White Earth Indian Reservation alone there were six Indian farmers, and I venture to say that of the six there was not one who could make his living on a piece of land in the woods if he were left there. There is no use for six. Nobody contends that there is use for the six. I understand that since that time five of them have been taken away—that is, in the last 10 days. I also am advised that certain other employees of that agency who certainly were supernumerary have been taken away. I do not know how many ought to be taken away from the service, but I do know that there are still too many of them there now.

I do not want to cripple the service. I do not want to stifle any of the good work that has been done, or that ought to be done; but I do not like to see the substance of these Indians, the property that they have in the hands of the Government, over which they are helpless to exercise any control, year by year frittered away and wasted in salaries of unnecessary employees. Consequently, I place these facts before the committee that they may receive consideration. If not now, some day soon something should be done.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Can the gentleman give the aggregate number of employees to whom that $214,000 is paid?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I wish I could, but I can not. There are some places in the State where excellent work is being done.

I will say to the committee that if this motion prevails I am going to follow it with another amendment, appropriating $35,000, to be used exclusively in the building of roads.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has again expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I will recognize the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ELLSWORTH].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ELLSWORTH] is recognized.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, being from the State of Minnesota, where these Chippewa Indians are situated, and a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I feel that it is my duty when an amendment of this kind is pending in the House, in the consideration of the measure in the Committee of the Whole, to say something about it.

I sat through the hearings of the committee, and I heard all that was said in the hearings before the Committee on Indian Affairs in reference to the $185,000 item of the Chippewas, coming from their fund; and I want to say now not only as to this amendment but, so far as my service in this House is concerned, I hope at any time I shall not rise or strike out the last word or ask for time on the floor of this House for the purpose of making a speech. I have no speech to make upon this question, but I want to say a few things in reference to it, because I feel, coming as I do from this State and having a membership on this committee, that it would not be proper for me to remain silent and refuse to speak on an amendment which, I want to say at this time, I do not favor. I do not favor it because this committee, I believe, is a fair-minded committee. It has stood ready to reduce the amount to be taken from the Chippewa Indians' fund in Minnesota upon proof submitted to it of a tangible nature of the fact that the money has been squandered.

There were a great many things said before the committee of a sort of ethereal type about the money being squandered in different ways. There was a great deal of time spent before the committee upon these items, but when it was finally simmered down to the last analysis it amounted to this—that one man who said he was an attorney, and appeared for the Chippewas, charged that there was a superintendent hired in one of the schools—which was one of the several dozen or scores of items making up the amount—who drew $1,000 salary, and he did not know but that that superintendent's services could be dispensed with. Thereupon I called this football player of Carlisle and Minnesota, concerning whom my colleague has made such an eloquent speech, and asked him if he wanted to have this item of $1,000 stricken out, and he said he would talk with his colleagues on the reservation about it; and after doing so he did not know whether they wanted to do that or not. Deducting the tangible part of that sum of $185,000 that this man wanted stricken out, would leave $184,000, and they were not sure that they wanted that stricken.

I am for anything tangible that is submitted to the committee. I want everything reasonable in the reduction of this fund when the suggestion comes from a responsible source, but, as a new Member of this House, I think the committee should be sustained, and as a member of the committee I shall stand for what that committee stands for, no matter what the political complexion of the majority of the committee may be, unless those who want changes made come before the committee and present evidence in some kind of tangible form. Notwithstanding the fact that my colleague from Minnesota urges it, I believe that the committee's report and the bill should be sustained, and I believe that this amendment should fail, because there is nothing tangible upon which to base it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER]

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, is hereby authorized to advance to any individual Chippewa Indian in the State of Minnesota entitled to participate in the permanent fund of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota one-fourth of the amount which would now be coming to said Indian under a pro rata distribution of said permanent fund: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, may use for or advance to any Chippewa Indian in the State of Minnesota entitled to share in said fund who is blind, crippled, decrepit, or helpless from old age, disease, or accident, one-fourth of the amount which would now be coming to said Indian under a pro rata distribution of said permanent fund: Provided further, That any money received hereunder by any member of said tribe or used for his or her benefit shall be deducted from the share of said member in the permanent fund of the said Chippewa Indians in Minnesota to which he or she would be entitled: Provided further, That no funds paid hereunder to Indians shall be available for paying the debts of said Indians incurred prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the proviso from the last paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. That can not be done when a point of order is pending.

Mr. STAFFORD. I made the reservation of the point of order, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of obtaining information which was the basis of the motion which I assume the gentleman was going to make. That was to know the occasion for this last proviso, "That no funds paid hereunder to Indians shall be available for paying the debts of said Indians incurred prior to the passage of this act."

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ELLSWORTH].

Mr. STAFFORD. Before the gentleman from Minnesota proceeds I will say that I understood from his preliminary remark that he was going to move to strike that out. I am asking for some justification for the retention of this proviso.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. It was represented to the committee, as I recall, that this language should be placed in the bill for the purpose of preventing the collection of these Indians' debts while the money was in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior. There was some considerable discussion about it before the committee. I am not quite clear myself that that will be a good thing to do. I think the Indian should certainly be permitted to pay his debts after the money gets into his hands, which perhaps this might seek to prevent.

Mr. STAFFORD. How can you attach any such condition to the funds, that will be distributed to these Indians, as to their use after they are in the hands of the Indians?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Undoubtedly you can not control that by such language as this, except that it might be used as a kind of persuasive force to influence the Indian.

Mr. STAFFORD. But I wish to direct attention to a change in the phraseology from that recommended by the department. In the phraseology as submitted to the committee by the department it might have had some force; but under the change made by the committee, in striking out some of the language, I question its operation at all. Last year and also this year, in the recommendation of the department, in the second line of the paragraph, it carried the language not only "to advance," but the Secretary was authorized "to use for or advance." You have seen fit to strike out the words "use for or." I assume that the idea of the Secretary was that he wanted to have control of these funds for certain indigent Indians and not allow the money to be spent pell-mell by them and be absorbed not for their use. If he had the control over this one-fourth of their quota, he would have some disposition as to the payment perhaps of some unwarranted debts which were not justified. So I ask the gentleman, Why did the committee change the language as carried last year and as recommended by the Secretary this year?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ELLSWORTH] for such statement as he desires to make. He has taken considerable interest in this item, and on account of it being in his State he is quite familiar with it.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that under the treaty of 1889 there is a certain specified time within which the Government is to pay back to the Chippewa Indians their fund, and the fund has been replenished from time to time by the sale of timber from their lands. The Chippewa Indians of the State of Minnesota have something over $6,000,000 in their fund in the United States Treasury, and it is the disposition of this fund which has been considered by the department and by the committee. In part 4 of the hearings you will see that Mr. Meritt and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs appeared before the committee. They showed that they were perfectly willing to have this one-fourth paid to the Chippewa Indians at this time, as a per capita distribution.

Mr. STAFFORD. What objection could there be to leaving it in the discretion of the Secretary, or of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, to determine whether the one-fourth should go as a right to some of the Indians or be held for their use?

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Do you mean "used for or paid to"?

Mr. STAFFORD. "Use for or advance to."

Mr. ELLSWORTH. The original thought of the department in reference to the distribution of this money was that the department be allowed to use for blind, decrepit, and indigent Indians a certain amount, and then that they were to pay to all the Indians one-fourth of the fund which they had on hand.

Mr. STAFFORD. Are all these Indians restricted Indians?

Mr. ELLSWORTH. They are not all restricted Indians.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why should not that condition attach to those who are restricted?

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin allow me to answer his question as to why a part was withheld? It was for this reason: It was thought that these old, blind, and decrepit Indians, who may need some help, ought not to have the money paid to them for various obvious reasons, but that it ought to be put into the hands of the department under such control that they could pay any amount which would be necessary, to help those Indians in case of temporary distress, and so there was a provision allowing a certain amount to be used for or paid to indigent, decrepit, or blind Indians who could not handle the whole sum themselves.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am still waiting for an explanation from the gentleman as to the reason why the committee did not retain the limitation as to unrestricted Indians and why they adopted language that would compel the Secretary to pay to the unrestricted Indians who are not blind, crippled, or decrepit the one-fourth part of the fund.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. I think the purpose is to pay absolutely to all the Chippewa Indians in Minnesota one-fourth of the amount, except as to those who are decrepit, and by this measure the department can use that amount for them.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman state that all the Indians who are not blind, crippled, or decrepit or helpless are capable of administering their own affairs, and so dispose of this fund?

Mr. ELLSWORTH. There are individual instances, as there are among the same number of whites. There are some 11,000 Chippewa Indians, and, with the exception of perhaps a slightly less degree of capacity, they are as capable as are the same number of whites.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the percentage of unrestricted and the percentage of restricted?

Mr. ELLSWORTH. I can not tell the gentleman that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] or any other gentleman give us some reason why we should take off the check on the Secretary of the Interior in paying this money to the Indians whom he believes have not sufficient competency to use the money for their own benefit?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. If the gentleman will permit me, I think unquestionably 75 per cent of the Indians in Minnesota are perfectly competent to manage their own affairs. The Indian Office fixes the number at 60 or 70 per cent.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why should we not, then, retain the restriction as to the other 40 per cent, so as to protect their interests, as the department has recommended? The language is not susceptible of a construction which would enable the Secretary to withhold from giving this one-quarter directly to those who are not competent.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. If the gentleman will read that carefully, I think he will see that it is not intended that the Secretary should pay to incompetents.

Mr. STAFFORD. The only restriction is as to those who are blind, crippled, decrepit, or helpless from old age, disease, or accident. As to all the others, he is obliged by the changed phraseology to pay the one-fourth, whether they are competent or incompetent.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I should like to invite the attention of the gentleman to this language:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, may use for or advance to any Chippewa Indian in the State of Minnesota entitled to share in said fund who is blind, crippled, decrepit, or helpless from old age, disease, or accident one-fourth of the amount which would now be coming to said Indian under a pro rata distribution of said permanent fund.

Mr. STAFFORD. The language is "may use for or advance to any Chippewa Indian." The word "any" will have a very broad construction.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. It gives him the legal authority to advance one-quarter to those Indians who are blind, crippled, decrepit, or helpless from old age, disease, or accident.

Mr. STAFFORD. The committee has for some reason changed the language, and I am trying to ascertain the reason.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask, Mr. Chairman, for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks for five minutes; is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. I want to say that my understanding of this language is that the words "under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe," the Secretary, having in his office the data, could determine what Indians are competent or incompetent, and fully provide for what the gentleman requires.

Mr. STAFFORD. But why should you strike out that saving and protecting language so that the Secretary of the Interior could have the power to protect the Indians that were not competent?

Mr. ELLSWORTH. The language used applies to those blind, decrepit, and sick Indians.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am seeking to apply the logic of the gentleman's argument to the 40 per cent incompetents to protect their own funds. Yet in this bill you take the authority away from the Secretary that he desires.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. As to all other Indians not sick, blind, and decrepit, under the rules of the department, such as they may make, they can separate the competent from the incompetent Indians and not pay the one-quarter to the incompetents.

Mr. STAFFORD. I question the construction of the gentleman merely as to the words "rules and regulations," when Congress directs without any further limit that he can not restrain the use of the money.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Otherwise it would be necessary for the bill to provide for a commission for the purpose of ascertaining the competents and the incompetents.

Mr. STAFFORD. No; not when you delegate the authority to the Secretary of the Interior to make rules and regulations in reference to the incompetents, but you go contrary to the request of the Secretary of the Interior, and no member of the committee has advanced any reason or justification, but have simply supplemented the argument that I am making why it should be retained.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I assume that the second and third provisos are the ones to which the gentleman from Wisconsin is directing his inquiry.

Mr. STAFFORD. No; I am directing my present inquiry to the reason the committee changed the language as recommended by the department, carried in the bill last year, and have stricken out the words in line 2, on page 25, "used for or." No member of the committee has given a reason why it was stricken out.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Certainly.

Mr. NORTON. I trust that the gentleman understands the purpose of this proviso, and that is that one-quarter of the amount now in the Treasury of the funds of the Chippewa Tribe be paid to them by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. STAFFORD. One-quarter of the amount coming due them under the treaty of 1889.

Mr. NORTON. That is one-quarter of the amount now in the Treasury.

Mr. STAFFORD. No; not one-quarter of the $6,000,000; it does not intend to give them a windfall like that.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. It will amount to about that—one-quarter belonging to each one and the total amount belonging to all.

Mr. NORTON. It amounts to a payment to the Chippewas of one-quarter of the funds now belonging to them in the Treasury less what is kept separate and apart for school purposes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman state what one-quarter will amount to paid to each one?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. About $150 apiece.

Mr. NORTON. It will amount to about one million and a half dollars, and, I think, about $150 to each Indian. Now, the proviso contained in the section gives the Secretary of the Interior the right to withhold the amount that is to be paid to any Indian who is blind, crippled, decrepit, or helpless from old age or disease or accident.

Mr. STAFFORD. But not to withhold any to be paid an incompetent.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has again expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendment thereto close in 25 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. That can not be done while a point of order is pending. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I will yield to the gentleman from Minnesota for a question.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. I want to say in answer to the gentleman that so far as there being anything in the law, as I understand it, which would enable the department to differentiate between competent and incompetent Indians, there is nothing except the language that it may be withheld by reason of blindness, decrepitude, and so forth. There is not any authority to restrict the payment to incompetent Indians except under the words "may make such rules and regulations as he may prescribe."

Mr. STAFFORD. Would the members of the committee have any objection to inserting before the word "blind" the word "incompetent," so as to throw the protecting arm of the Secretary over those who are incompetent? I understand the members of the committee on this side would be willing to accept it. Mr. Chairman, I reserved the point of order to the last proviso and the paragraph in general. I would like to ask the gentleman on the other side who has charge of the bill if he would have any objection to inserting the word "incompetent" in line 11 before the word "blind"?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. No; I have no objection; I think that is all right.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I renew and reserve the point of order. I would like to make an inquiry about the last proviso.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, is there any understanding as to the action of the committee respecting the last proviso? The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ELLSWORTH] is about to move to strike that out.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I have no objection to that.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I trust the gentleman will agree to that, because I think the language is very inadvisable, and for this reason: Under the large revolving fund which we have given to the disposal of the Secretary the Secretary has loaned to many individual Indians of that State money with which to buy horses and cattle and make improvements, only a part of which has been returned. They certainly ought to have the opportunity to pay that back out of this fund, if they desire to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer to amend, by inserting after the word "is," in line 11, page 25, the word "incompetent."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 25, line 11, by inserting after the word "is" the word "incompetent."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the section by striking out the last proviso, being all in the paragraph after the colon in line 11.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 25, line 18, after the word "entitled," strike out the word "Provided" and all of lines 19, 20, and 21, as follows: "Provided further, That no funds paid hereunder to Indians shall be available for paying the debts of said Indians incurred prior to the passage of this act."

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, it is doubtful if that amendment should be agreed to. The purpose of this proviso, in very large measure, is to protect the fund that may be paid to the Indians from liens that may have been heretofore created by the Indians on any funds that might be paid to them out of their funds in the Treasury. The probabilities are that many of these Indians have given contracts to attorneys for a certain percentage of any moneys that these attorneys may be instrumental in getting out of the Treasury for them, and it was the intention of members of the committee that the funds should be protected from any such use by the Secretary of the Interior or by anyone under him, and that any payments that should be made should be made wholly to the Indians.

Mr. MANN. May I ask whether this language was submitted by the department in the estimates?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Some language of that import was. I think there was a slight change made in it.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman happen to have handy a statement which any department official made in regard to the matter? The gentleman can examine and reply later if he desires.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I am not particular about this matter. I think the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ELLSWORTH] is more interested than any other member of this committee, and that what he desires ought to prevail. I am simply advising him and the members of the committee what the purpose of the committee was when the matter was put in the bill, when we were making up the bill originally, and when the matter was under consideration in the whole committee. It was to protect the funds from any liens or contracts that may be outstanding against the funds.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota to strike out the proviso.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 25, line 18, after the word "entitled," insert the following: "That the funds hereunder to be paid to Indians shall not be subject to any lien or claim by attorneys or third parties until after the same have been actually paid by the Government and received by said Indians."

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to amend that amendment by changing the word "by" to the word "of," making it read "claim of attorneys" instead of "claim by attorneys."

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, does not the gentleman think that the law now existing covers all possible cases that might arise?

Mr. NORTON. I will say to the gentleman that I am not certain that the law does cover that provision, but it was the intention and it is the desire of the Committee on Indian Affairs to have these funds paid out by the Government to these Indians without having the funds subject while in the hands of the Government to any claim or lien by attorneys or by others. The purpose of that amendment is to carry out that idea and the desire of the committee.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I do not see any objection to the gentleman's amendment unless it is a repetition of the general law already existing. It can do no harm to incorporate it.

Mr. NORTON. If there is a general law that would provide for what is intended to be provided for by this amendment, the amendment, of course, is surplusage. I understand that in some cases now funds to be paid out to Indians are being held up in the Treasury Department by attorneys who maintain that they have claims against these funds.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I notice the gentleman's amendment provides that these funds shall not be subject to any lien of attorneys or other parties until after the same have actually been paid by the Government and received by said Indians.

Mr. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Does he not think it would be a little better legislation for us to leave out the words "until after the same have been paid by the Government or received by said Indians," because in stating the proposition positively I believe we might have here a proposition that would perhaps approve of some attorneys or permit suit to be brought for attorney's fees after the funds have passed into the hands of these Indians.

Mr. NORTON. Well, that is not the intention. I doubt if it would work out as the gentleman suggests.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, while the gentleman from North Dakota is looking over his amendment with a view to perfecting it——

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. NORTON. I now desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows.

Page 25, line 8, amend by inserting after the word "entitled" the following: "That the funds hereunder to be paid to Indians shall not be subject to any lien or claim of attorneys or other third parties."

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is the fourth proviso, and the words "Provided further" should be inserted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That the funds hereunder to be paid, etc.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause an examination to be made by experts of the Geological Survey of the ceded lands, for which the United States has not conveyed title, in the State of Minnesota, embraced within the provisions of an act entitled, "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota," approved January 14, 1889 (25 Stat. L., p. 642), and if there be found any lands bearing valuable deposits of iron ore or other valuable minerals, the said Secretary is hereby authorized to reserve, for the use and benefit of the Chippewa Indians in Minnesota, the minerals and the mineral rights pertaining to any of the such lands; and the said Secretary is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the principal sum on deposit to the credit of the Chippewa Indians in Minnesota in order to make the geological examination herein provided for.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to make a point of order against the paragraph, but I would like to offer the following amendment. Strike out after the semicolon, in line 10, page 26, the remainder of the paragraph and insert, "and there is hereby appropriated out of the Treasury of the United States the sum of $10,000 for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this paragraph."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out after the semicolon, in line 10, page 26, the remainder of the paragraph and insert, "and there is hereby appropriated out of the Treasury of the United States the sum of $10,000 for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this paragraph."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment. It is clearly subject to the point of order.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I ask to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. What is the point of order?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The point of order is the original draft of the bill before the House. Lines 10 and 11 says:

And the said Secretary is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the principal sum on deposit to the credit of the Chippewa Indians in Minnesota.

Now, the gentleman takes it directly out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Certainly. The whole section is subject to the point of order; but if the point of order is not made, then any germane amendment to the paragraph is in order. This is certainly germane to the paragraph.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The objection I have to this amendment is that these Indians have $6,000,000 in the Treasury with which to pay for such a geological examination.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. That may prevail among the membership of the House as the reason why they should vote down my amendment, but it is not a reason why my amendment is not in order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the point of order, as I understand that would take the entire section out, and I do not desire to do that.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I only want to say a few words. I would like to be heard on the amendment for a moment. The chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS], has distinctly stated the purport of the amendment. The provision in the paragraph is that $10,000 of the Indians' money shall be expended for the purpose of exploring these lands by the Geological Survey. My amendment says that this $10,000 shall come out of the funds of the United States. Now, is there any reason why it should? I think there is, and I would like to give it to the committee. These lands are surplus lands governed by the terms of the treaty to be sold by the United States or homesteaded; rather, part homesteaded and part sold by the United States, the proceeds thereof to go to the benefit of the Indians. Now, I do not believe that there is an acre of this land that is worth less than $5 an acre. If the Indians should sell the land they could get $5 an acre. The United States Government, however, sells to its own white citizens for $1.25 an acre, and that is all the Indians get out of it. The purpose of this paragraph is to reserve to the benefit of the Indian owners the mineral rights in the lands, which, I think, is a very good provision; but it seems to me that inasmuch as the Federal Government is handling this acreage mostly for the benefit of its white citizens it should pay the sum of $10,000, if any sum is to be paid, out of its own pockets for the purpose of making these explorations by the Geological Survey. Now, Mr. Chairman, the fact is that this paragraph is inaptly drawn. It should be a straight reservation to the Indians of the mineral rights in the surplus lands and stop there. The only way you can find an iron mine is to drill for it. I think I know something about exploring for iron mines. All the experts in the world could go over that land and not tell whether it contained a mine or not. They can say whether from the formation and geological character there is indicated the presence of iron through the entire territory, but as far as telling whether they had merchantable iron ore there or not, they can not do it, so that the $10,000 will, in a way, be a sum wasted, and the Indians are entitled to a straight reservation, and that is what ought to have been done. It seems to me this is absolutely wasting $10,000 of the Indians' money, and that is the reason why I make this motion.

Mr. KONOP. Mr. Chairman, I think that this amendment ought not to be agreed to. These Indians have in the Treasury of the United States in the neighborhood of $6,220,000. They have these mineral rights there which will give them probably many million dollars' worth of property more, and if this investigation is to do any good it will be for the benefit of the Indians. I can not see why this money should not be taken out of the funds of the Indians now in the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The gentleman is living up pretty close to an iron-mining region, and does he think that the exploration provided for here by the geologists is worth $10, or 10 cents, to the Indians?

Mr. KONOP. I think it would be worth a good deal to the Indians to find out if there were any mineral deposits there.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. All this area has been gone over by geologists, and reports have been made absolutely covering this region.

Mr. KONOP. I was not informed of that fact, but when we considered this proposition we considered it very thoroughly in the committee, and we thought it best to ascertain by means of the Geological Survey what is there, or whether anything is there.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Does not the gentleman think that the only way to reach the situation is to make a general mineral reservation? That does not cost any money and it is effective.

Mr. KONOP. But I think Congress and the people ought to know whether there is anything there, and if there is, what is there, and I think the Geological Survey is the proper agency to determine that question.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman permit another inquiry?

Mr. KONOP. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. We had a very fine geologist in our State, a professor in the State university, and State geologist, and reputed to be one of the best in the country. He made an investigation of what is now the Mesabi iron-ore district and said it was commercially valueless; that while there was ore there it was soft, and, because mixed with other ingredients, could not be used in a furnace. And that statement went out in a report and was published. That is the richest single mining spot in the world to-day. For that reason I think that a geological opinion is valueless on the question of whether iron mines exist or not.

Mr. KONOP. I will say to the gentleman that there may have been mistakes made in many instances like that, where geologists have said that mining ore was commercially valueless. But I think this investigation will do a whole lot of good. Mistakes might be made like those that have been made by previous geologists, but I think this money ought to be taken out of the Indian money now in the Treasury of the United States instead of from the money of the people in the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. MANN. Would the gentleman yield?

Mr. KONOP. I will.

Mr. MANN. I understand from the gentleman and from the item in the bill that the committee thinks there may be very valuable iron ore or other mineral deposits there?

Mr. KONOP. That is true.

Mr. MANN. And desire to retain that land for the use of the Indians, if that be the case, rather than to give it away or sell it for a song?

Mr. KONOP. That is the opinion of the committee.

Mr. MANN. And that the only method you can pursue to ascertain that is to make some investigation, and that the only branch of the Government that can make that investigation is the Geological Survey?

Mr. KONOP. That was the contention of the committee.

Mr. MANN. If it should prove that there are valuable mineral deposits there, those will inure to the benefit of the Indians, will they?

Mr. KONOP. Yes.

Mr. MANN. They will get the benefit of them?

Mr. KONOP. Yes; it will be all for the benefit of the Indians.

Mr. MANN. Will the Government of the United States derive any financial benefit from it?

Mr. KONOP. None whatever. It is all for the benefit of the Indians.

Mr. MANN. It is a very liberal proposition, then, to offer to pay the expenses out of the General Treasury and give the benefit, if any, to the Indians. I mean, liberal with Government money.

Mr. KONOP. This is for the investigation of Indian property for the purpose of finding out for the Indians whether there are any mineral deposits that belong to the Indians, and I think the Indians' money ought to be used to pay for that.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, this money to be appropriated here is clearly for the benefit of the Indians, and it appears to me should be, without any question, paid out of the funds of the Indians. It is not maintained that the Geological Survey can determine definitely whether there is any mineral in a particular tract of land or not. All it is expected the Geological Survey will be able to determine is whether, from the examination made by geologists, the indications are that there are valuable mineral deposits in certain parts of this reservation that are of value. This examination that is proposed to be made by the Geological Survey may result in the disclosure of mineral deposits that will in the future bring to the Indians hundreds of thousands of dollars; yes, millions of dollars. It was thought by the committee that it would be better to have a geological survey made of this reservation than to indiscriminately reserve the mineral rights in all the Indian lands on the reservation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States $500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the principal sum on deposit to the credit of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, arising under section 7 of the act of January 14, 1889, entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota," and to use said withdrawn sum in the purchase and fencing of burial grounds for the Fond du Lac Band of Chippewa Indians of Minnesota.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. I would like to find out about this item. Five hundred dollars will not purchase a very large burial ground.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. In justification for this item I will say that it was the unanimous opinion that it should be paid. Mr. Meritt offered the following justification for the item:

The superintendent reports that a permanent cemetery for the Indians of the Fond du Lac Reservation is urgently required; that those living in the vicinity of Sawyer, Minn., have been burying their dead on the allotment of Kato Zoway, and that this site, comprising about 6 acres, should be purchased and retained as a tribal cemetery; that the Indians living near Cloquet have appropriated for burial purposes a part of the allotment of Z. Burton Coffey, and that 10 acres of this allotment should be likewise purchased, said area covering all the bodies already buried and furnishing room for further burials. This tract he reports can be purchased for $30 an acre, and the 6 acres on the other allotment for $20 an acre. He estimates the cost of fencing at $80.

For the reason that no appropriation is available for these purposes legislation has been prepared.

Mr. MANN. Have not the Indians any other land there that has not been allotted?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They have both been allotted according to the statement. The names of the Indians to whom allotments have been made are given.

Mr. MANN. Are there any other lands of the Chippewas that have not been allotted?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I suppose so, but it would cost more to remove the bodies elsewhere than this would amount to.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Is there any money provided in the bill to take care of the graves of the deceased members of the Fond du Lac Band over at Superior Point? That has been a subject of controversy for years. I thought this was the same thing.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say 6 acres, at $30 an acre. That would be $180. If you expended $320 for fencing it, that would take the entire amount.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman will observe that it is for the purchase and fencing of burial grounds.

Mr. KONOP. The fencing, it is estimated, will cost $80.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue to the Northern Minnesota Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church a patent in fee for 5 acres, to be legally described, in the southeast corner of lot 1, section 19, township 65 north, range 21 west of the fourth principal meridian, on the Nett Lake Indian Reservation, Minn., said action to be in lieu of that authorized and directed in the act of August 1, 1914 (38 Stat. L., 591).

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does the gentleman desire to make a point of order, or reserve it? I admit that it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I would like to reserve the point of order and make a little statement of about three minutes, but I will not do so if the gentleman wishes to proceed.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Let the gentleman proceed.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, this is proposed to change existing law, and therefore it is subject to a point of order.

The Nett Lake Indian Reservation in Minnesota is far in the interior, in the neighborhood of the lakes and woods. The only missionary in there permanently has been a Methodist missionary, and his work has been of the highest character. The Methodists have maintained a mission there for many years. They now have an additional missionary, making two, one of whom spends all his time there, and the other travels around and covers other reservations as well. They had a parsonage that was built out of logs, and they were about to build a church when the parsonage burned down. They found they could not build a church under the rules of the Methodist Home Mission Society, unless they had a title in fee to the land. The site selected was a very excellent one for that purpose, and certaintly not needed for any other purpose connected with the agency. There are about 480 acres of land reserved for agency purposes at this place. There are about 270 Indians who actually live in that vicinity, not on their allotments, because they are trespassers, but occupying the land in this region by the courtesy of the Government. This site was back of the lake, up the crest of the hill and beyond.

The agent who was there previous to the present agent recommended that the site be granted to the church at that place. The church wanted 40 acres. I think it has been customary in most of the reservations to give these church mission societies anywhere from 160 acres down to 40 acres. One hundred and sixty acres is not needed, and I hardly think that 40 acres is needed, but they thought they wanted it. A provision was put through some years ago, deeding this lot, a fraction under 40 acres, to the Methodist church. Funds were appropriated, and they accumulated materials with which to build the church and the parsonage, but the Secretary of the Interior refused to issue a patent.

Another agent arrived and took the place of the preceding agent, and for some reason that I can not possibly understand he seems to be entirely hostile to the presence of that church institution, and has made reports that to me seem so wild and far from the existing facts that it does not seem to be possible that he could have carefully investigated the facts before he made the report. Its substance is contained in the "justifications" here.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I would like to have five minutes more, Mr. Chairman, because this item will bob up again, and I think the committee ought to understand it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, can we get an agreement?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I do not think anybody else wants to say a word. I am going to make a point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Let the gentleman make the point of order.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I think the committee should investigate this matter. I have had personal knowledge of this for three years.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. At the bottom of page 234 of the hearings I find this statement:

Five acres should be amply sufficient for church, parsonage, and garden purposes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Of course that is perfectly ridiculous. That is the opinion of the agent who is there now. It was not the opinion of the agent who was there before.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is the opinion of the agent; yes. Would the gentleman be opposed to letting this church get any part of the land?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. They have 40 acres now.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That has been the custom for many years, has it not, that when a denomination of any kind or character has a tract of land for church purposes on an Indian reservation it is, before the land is allotted, given to that church?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Yes; the gentleman is entirely correct, and believes with me on that subject, I think. This agent reported adversely on the whole proposition, and suggested that the church be given 5 acres of land. The land that he has picked out is situated in a swamp.

Mr. MANN. He is a liberal.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Yes; he is the most enthusiastic liberal I ever saw in my life. The place he has picked out is away from the village and away from the meeting place. It is claimed by the agent—and the report is in the "justifications"—that the United States has built several cabins for indigent Indians on this tract. That is true. I investigated the matter myself during the past fall. About a dozen houses have been constructed on this tract; also there is an Indian burial ground on the tract. That statement in the report is true.

In order to meet this the Methodist conference, which was in session at the time in my State, at my request, authorized their representatives in a legal way to deed back to the United States Government the whole northerly 10 acres upon which are located all these buildings. We could not find another building located on any of this tract excepting that of one man named George Otter, who was a trespasser, and who, of course, is entitled to remain there if he wants to, so far as the church is concerned, as long as he wishes; but he is preparing to move to his allotment at the present time. These dead Indians' bodies have, nearly every one of them, been put into the ground with the prayers of the Indian missionary, for whom it is proposed a site shall be given upon which to build a church and a home that he may live in. This is in the woods. It will not be a beautiful frame house or a beautiful frame church. It will be a log house and a log church, on a spot that is not very near an Indian school or an Indian office or an Indian agency. It is some distance away from all. The council hall of the Indians is upward of half a mile away. It is the strategic place for a church or mission, and they ought to have a space big enough on which to build a church and to build a home for the missionary, and have a garden spot on which he can grow something upon which to live.

Mr. KONOP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Certainly.

Mr. KONOP. As I understand, this organization, the Missionary Society of the Minnesota Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, will have not only the 5 acres that will be given them by this provision, but——

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. What else would they have?

Mr. KONOP. It seems as though there was something inserted here in the language of the justification that the missionary authorities, on receipt of a patent for the whole 40 acres, should reconvey.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I have just made that statement. They have the title to it now. As a legal proposition, I would say that the Methodist Church now has the title to this land, and this will be purely negative. It was granted to them two years ago. They accepted it in good faith and went ahead and built the church; and they propose, in order to meet this objection by the department, which I think is a valid objection, that they will deed back to the Government 10 acres, leaving themselves but 30.

Mr. Chairman, I insist on the point of order.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Dakota desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. NORTON. Yes. In the committee I made the same argument that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] made, that this conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church now has title to this 40 acres of land. I do not see under what authority the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has refused to issue the patent to the church. It occurs to me that there has been no good showing as to why part of this land should be taken back. The church has been very reasonable——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman address himself particularly to the point of order?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman evidently desires to argue the facts before arguing the law.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The gentleman from North Dakota is addressing himself to the facts.

Mr. NORTON. I merely intend to preface my discussion of the point of order by stating first the facts as I have found them to be. The church has proposed to the Indian Bureau to redeed to the Interior Department 10 acres of this land. These 10 acres include the grounds on which is located the school buildings and the cemetery. It occurs to me that the church has been most liberal in its offer to redeed this 10 acres, and that a patent should issue at once for the entire 40 acres to the church, as already provided by law. I trust that if a vote is taken on this item it will be stricken out. As to the point of order, I do not think there is any question at all but that the paragraph is subject to the point of order made against it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For maintenance and operation, including repairs, of the irrigation systems on the Fort Belknap Reservation, in Montana, $20,000, reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of the act of April 4, 1910.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. How many irrigation systems are there now on the Fort Belknap Reservation? What irrigation system is there besides the Milk River system?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Page 239 of the hearings contains a statement with reference to that.

Mr. MANN. If I recall correctly, we used to appropriate this sum of money for the operation of the Milk River irrigation system. I notice this year you describe it as "systems," and I just wondered what other systems they had there and whether we were maintaining the other systems.

Mr. KONOP. On page 241 of the hearings the gentleman will find the information which he wants. It is there stated that the projects are the Milk River system, the White Bear system, the Three Mile Coulee system, the People's Creek system, and the Lodge Pole and Big Warm systems.

Mr. MANN. I think possibly they used all to be called the Milk River system.

Mr. KONOP. Now they are all included under the Fort Belknap Reservation project.

Mr. STOUT. There are three Indian reclamation projects in the State, if the gentleman desires that information.

Mr. MANN. No; I am inquiring about the Fort Belknap Reservation.

Mr. STOUT. The units which have been read by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KONOP] are the units under the Fort Belknap Reservation.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States not to exceed the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the principal sum on deposit to the credit of the Indians on the Blackfeet Reservation in Montana, for the purpose of purchasing and caring for cattle for the use of individual Indians, seeds, and necessary farming equipment, to enable them to become self-supporting: Provided, That said sum shall be expended under conditions to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for its repayment and placed into the Treasury to the credit of the said tribe on or before June 30, 1925: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior shall submit to Congress annually on the first Monday in December a detailed statement as to the expenditure of this fund.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of making an inquiry of some member of the committee, if he will state briefly what the department says about this experimental work of furnishing seeds, stock, farm implements, and so forth, to the Indians, to encourage them in habits of industry, in stock raising, and so forth. Of course I know the department must think it is successful, or they would not be asking for further appropriations; but if any member of the committee can state how successful they think it is, I wish he would tell us.

Mr. KONOP. On pages 246 and 247 there is this statement in reference to that item:

The amount of $100,000 requested to be set aside from the principal sum on deposit to the credit of the Indians of the Blackfeet Reservation is for the purpose of purchasing live stock to assist the Indian in embarking in the live-stock industry. There are at the present time about 2,500 Indians living on that reservation, a number of whom are already successful stockmen and have good herds, but there is also quite a number who have no stock at all. The land on the Blackfeet Reservation is especially adapted to the grazing of live stock, and, owing to the shortness of the summer season, is not especially suitable for agricultural purposes. The allotments of this reservation comprise 280 acres of grazing land and 40 acres of irrigable land each. Owing to the impracticability of conducting successful farming operations a large portion of these Indians seek employment elsewhere at day labor and their homes and allotments are therefore badly neglected.

If the reservation is properly stocked with cattle, beneficial use can be made of the grazing facilities available and the general condition of the Indians can be improved by harvesting hay and raising alfalfa and other forage which can be utilized in feeding the live stock and for which a ready market can be had at home on account of the need of providing winter feed for them.

Mr. MANN. I was not referring to this particular item so much as to the general subject. I think we have appropriated for these same people heretofore, however.

Mr. KONOP. In the hearing it is stated that the balance of this fund available July 1, 1915, including refunds, was $162,933.47.

Mr. MANN. I have all that information. I will not bother the gentleman further.

Mr. NORTON. In reply to the gentleman's question I will say that the department consider that they are doing a good work under these appropriations; that they are each year encouraging the Indians to cultivate more land; and that each year they are getting better results through the Indians from the cultivation of their farm lands. That is what the department says in substance about this.

Mr. MANN. Can the gentleman say how many acres of land are under actual cultivation by the Indians, outside of the irrigation systems, or including the irrigation systems, in the United States?

Mr. NORTON. I think I can give the gentleman that information.

Mr. MANN. I am afraid not.

Mr. NORTON. As reported by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. MANN. I do not think they report that information. I have been over that report. I may be mistaken, but I do not think they give that information. On the contrary, I think they carefully refrain from giving it.

Mr. NORTON. The report for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1915, of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, on page 119, gives the statement that the amount of the allotted lands cultivated by the Indians in 1915 was 532,000 acres, and the amount of unallotted lands cultivated by the Indians was 132,144 acres. That has reference only to agricultural land. The same table gives the amount of allotted lands cultivated by the Indians in 1911 as 265,000 acres. In 1915 there was almost twice as much allotted lands cultivated by the Indians as was cultivated in 1911.

There was in 1915, 20,000 acres more unallotted lands cultivated by the Indians than was cultivated by them in 1911. This shows what appears to me to be a splendid increase in the acreage being cultivated by the Indians of the country.

Mr. MANN. I may be mistaken, but I do not think that when they give the amount of land cultivated by Indians they mean the actual number of acres cultivated. I may be wrong about that.

Mr. NORTON. That is apparently what is intended by this report, because in another column is given the area of allotted agricultural land. This land does not include grazing land. In 1915 the report stated that there were over six millions of allotted land and 969,441 acres of unalloted land belonging to Indians.

Mr. MANN. I think, however, it does include land where the Indian is raising stock, notwithstanding it says that it does not include grazing land. If an Indian allottee has a stock farm where he cultivates very little, the whole farm is included as cultivated land. I do not say that is an improper inclusion. What I would like to know, if anybody can find out, is how much land they can get the Indians to turn over and plant in preference to raising stock.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have never seen an estimate of that kind. We know how much land is allotted, but whether they are farmers, and how many acres of each farm is cultivated, we can not tell.

Mr. NORTON. If table No. 11, page 119, of the commissioner's report does not give the actual acreage cultivated and actually used for farming it is a table that is misleading. Table No. 12 of that report, page 124, gives the acreage of grazing land used by the Indians. The report states that in 1915 there were 8,702,245 acres of allotted land grazed by Indian stock. In 1915 there were 21,894,890 acres of unallotted land grazed by Indian stock; in 1911 there were 4,696,446 acres of allotted land grazed by Indian stock, and 18,729,124 acres of unallotted land grazed by Indian stock.

I read these tables quite carefully some time ago, and was of the impression that table No. 11 gave the actual number of acres cultivated. If that is not the information contained in this statement, I quite agree with the gentleman from Illinois that it would be well to have such information furnished by the Indian Bureau.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, the wisdom of this item was questioned when the matter was presented to the committee, but upon investigation it was learned that the lands in this reservation or agency here were very rich grazing lands. Each Indian has as his share 40 acres for irrigation and 280 acres for grazing purposes. Cattle raising is a very successful industry by many of the Indians. Some of them are not provided with stock. It is proposed by this appropriation to enable those who do not now have stock to embark in a small way in the stock business. Last year some 1,800 heifers and 60 bulls were purchased for the Indians, and the venture has been a success as an industry in that immediate section.

There is a large range there now, used by cattle rangers, which belongs to the Indians. They are getting very little out of it. They are getting very little out of the real grazing value that is paid to them in money. If they can own the cattle and raise the cattle on their own land it will be of much more benefit to them than the small amount they get for the use of the land.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

That lands on the Flathead Indian Reservation in Montana valuable for agricultural or horticultural purposes, heretofore classified as timberlands, may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be appraised and opened to homestead entry under regulations prescribed by him, upon condition that homestead entrymen shall at the time of making their original homestead entries pay the full value of the timber found on the land at the time that the appraisement of the land itself is made, such payment to be in addition to the appraised price of the lands apart from the timber.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the last paragraph; I do not quite understand it. Have we bought the land?

Mr. KONOP. As I understand the provision, it provides that when the land is turned over to the person making the homestead entry the timber shall be valued and sold together with the land.

Mr. MANN. I know; but what is the authority for selling the land, or giving it away, as a homestead? It says "the land on the Flathead Indian Reservation heretofore classified as timber may be appraised and opened to homestead entry," and it makes no reference to any existing law on the subject.

Mr. KONOP. The present law requires that timber shall be cleared off before the lands are open to entry.

Mr. MANN. I understand that part of it; but what authority is there to open it for entry other than this provision here?

Mr. KONOP. There must be a law for opening it. Does the gentleman from Illinois make the point of order?

Mr. MANN. No; I reserved the point of order.

Mr. KONOP. The gentleman from Montana [Mr. STOUT] says there is law.

Mr. STOUT. I can not recall the section, because I am not a lawyer.

Mr. MANN. Oh, that is the very reason the gentleman ought to recall it. A lawyer would know how to find it, and hence would not carry it in his head.

Mr. STOUT. I do not carry it in my head or anywhere else, unlike a great many lawyers in that respect; but there is a law whereby part of the Flathead Indian Reservation has been opened up for homestead entry, and certain timber provisions whereby they should pay for the timber.

Mr. MANN. I may be in error, but I had the impression that the timberland, under the law authorizing entries to be made on this reservation, was reserved from homestead entry. There is no provision here in reference to that except this language. It may be sufficient, and I will not say that it is not.

Mr. STOUT. I think the law provides that the timber shall be appraised and sold to the homestead entrymen.

Mr. MANN. That is the purpose of this provision.

Mr. STOUT. It was my idea that that was always the provision.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. SHACKLEFORD having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 4155. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to supply tents for temporary use of destitute persons in flood-stricken districts, and for other purposes.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

NEBRASKA.

SEC. 11. For support and education of 400 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Genoa, Nebr., including pay of superintendent, $66,175; for general repairs and improvements, $5,000; for new boilers at power plant, extension of lighting system and of water and sewer main, and for construction of septic tank, $10,800; in all, $81,975.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEPHENS] has an amendment which we have agreed to.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 30, line 7, after the word "superintendent," strike out the figures "66,175" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "66,800"; and at the end of line 10 strike out "81,975" and insert "84,600."

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, this amendment was offered for the purpose of making a correction.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I understand that there was a mistake made by the Clerk in adding up the figures?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. That is correct. The correction was made last year in this item, but since the appropriation bill failed last year, it was not noticed this year in making up the new estimates, and this amendment simply provides for the $167 per capita, the same as at all of the other schools.

Mr. MANN. What did we carry in the bill last year?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. The amendment last year provided for $167 per capita, but the bill failed, and in figuring the estimate this year they took no note of the correction that was made last year and simply took the amount of the increased enrollment of 25 pupils, which accounts for the difference.

Mr. MANN. The bill last year in that place carried $64,500?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. That is correct.

Mr. MANN. For 375 pupils. They have added to that nearly $2,000.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Yes; they have added 25 pupils.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is to take care of the 25 additional pupils.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. The attendance in the school has increased so that the school is allowed 400 in the bill instead of 375.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase of land and water rights for the Washoe Tribe of Indians, the title to which is to be held in the United States for the benefit of said Indians, $10,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended; for the support and civilization of said Indians, $5,000; in all, $15,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order. Would it be entirely satisfactory to the gentleman to strike out the language "to be immediately available and to remain available until expended"?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have no objection to that.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the language in lines 6 and 7, "to be immediately available and to remain available until expended."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order against the language referred to.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, it is subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

NEW MEXICO.

SEC. 13. For support and education of 450 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Albuquerque, N. Mex., and for pay of superintendent, $77,400; for general repairs and improvements, $8,000; for the purchase of additional acreage adjoining the school farm, $12,000; in all, $97,400.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of obtaining information. What is purposed in increasing the acreage at the school at Albuquerque?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will state to the gentleman that that is quite a large school.

Mr. STAFFORD. I had the pleasure of visiting the institution, and I will state that it is an up-to-date school.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They have recently changed that school into an industrial school and they are teaching agriculture to the students to a very great extent. It is very beneficial to them. They only had a small plat of land, for the reason that the location of the school is near the town of Albuquerque, and they have not sufficient ground, as we are informed and as the committee thinks, to run this industrial correctly. We have a statement here in reference to the matter:

The amount of $12,000 is requested for the purchase of additional land adjacent to or in the vicinity of the school farm. With an attendance of 400 pupils the school has available for the purposes of agricultural and dairy instructions only 40 acres of land. It is desired to add to this tract so as to provide adequate instruction for the pupils.

Mr. STAFFORD. How many acres is it desired to add?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. HERNANDEZ] can give the gentleman more information about the value of the land.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] made a special trip there, and he ought to be able to give more information than anyone else. [Laughter.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Not as much as the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. We were there together.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. I will say to the gentleman that land around Albuquerque is very valuable, as perhaps the gentleman knows.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am quite well acquainted with the school. It is an up-to-date school, which is being attended by a large number of the youth of both sexes—more girls than boys or young men. I am inquiring as to the question of the acreage that is proposed to be purchased with this additional amount of $12,000.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. The amount of $12,000 is recommended for the purchase of additional land adjacent or in the vicinity of the school farm.

Mr. KONOP. It is to purchase 40 acres more.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is the information I desire. I hardly think the price is at all exorbitant, if it is approximate to the present school.

Mr. KONOP. On page 264 of the hearing Mr. Meritt makes the statement that they expect to purchase a tract of 40 acres of irrigated land.

Mr. STAFFORD. That explains it in an entirely satisfactory manner, Mr. Chairman, and I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the pay of one special attorney for the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico, to be designated by the Secretary of the Interior, and for necessary traveling expenses of said attorney, $2,000, or so much thereof as the Secretary of the Interior may deem necessary.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

"For construction work on the Indian highway extending from Mesa Verde National Park to Gallup, N. Mex., on the Navajo Reservation, $15,000, said sum to be reimbursed from any funds which are now or hereafter may be placed in the Treasury to the credit of said Indians: Provided, That such sum shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior in such manner and at such times and places as he may deem proper and in the employment of Indian labor as far as possible for the construction of said highway."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, on the opening day of this session I introduced H. R. 24, which reads as follows:

That the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the construction of a wagon road under the Navajo Agency on the Navajo Indian Reservation in the State of New Mexico.

The amendment that I have just offered is practically the same as H. R. 24. I have changed the language somewhat to conform to the phraseology of a similar item in this general Indian appropriation bill.

I may say, Mr. Chairman, that this is a matter I have been working on for over a year. The people of southwestern Colorado are very much interested in the construction of this Indian highway from Cortez, Montezuma County, Colo., through the Mesa Verde National Park and down to the Navajo Indian Reservation past Shiprock to the town of Gallup, on the Santa Fe Railroad, in New Mexico. The hope of the people of that section of the country is that this road may be made an auto-truck road and a good highway for automobiles and all kinds of travel. I know of no section of country where a good road would be of more service to the people or be of more importance toward the improvement and development of the country than the construction of this road. While it will be of great service to the farmers of Montezuma County, it will also furnish an outlet for the people of La Plata County and the city of Durango through Farmington, by way of Shiprock to Gallup, and make an outlet to that entire country down to the Santa Fe Railroad.

In pursuance of my efforts in behalf of this measure the Commissioner of Indian Affairs had an elaborate investigation made of this entire route last fall, and the superintendent of construction, Mr. E. D. Kinney, made a detailed report on September 22, 1915, to the Hon. H. F. Robinson, superintendent of irrigation, who in turn, on October 2, 1915, made a full report to the Commissioner of the Bureau of Indian Affairs upon the subject. Those reports are here before the committee for inspection. They are too long to insert in the RECORD.

I certainly hope the chairman of the committee [Mr. STEPHENS of Texas] will not insist upon his point of order and that there may be no other objections to the adoption of this amendment. I will include in my remarks some correspondence which I have had with the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. But I more particularly want to call your attention to the official report to the Indian Affairs Committee upon my bill, H. R. 24, prepared by the Secretary of the Interior, under date of January 28, 1916. Secretary Lane makes a very forcible argument in support of this bill and urges that this amount of $15,000 be appropriated for expenditure on this highway each year until the total amount of the estimated cost of $54,253.28 has been appropriated and the project completed.

The Secretary shows that this road will be of great benefit both to the Indians and white people. It will enhance the value of Indian lands and afford them much better facilities for their development, and owing to the excessive freight rates on the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad through Colorado and New Mexico it will afford a wonderfully beneficial outlet for the farmers of southwestern Colorado. It will benefit the Government of the United States also in making a convenient and readily accessible road for the tourists to visit the Mesa Verde National Park, the home of the ancient cliff dwellers, one of the most marvelous and interesting parks in the world, which has heretofore been difficult of access. I visited the ruins of the cliff dwellers last fall again, and I hope some day to take time to describe them to this House. In fact, there are a great many reasons why this road should be constructed. It will before many years be one of the great highways of this country, traveled by thousands of people every year.

I have a large number of letters and petitions and resolutions from the citizens and business men's organizations and city and county officials and others, urging Congress to pass this bill, and I am confident that there is no other item in this entire Indian appropriation bill that will, in proportion to the amount of money expended, be as beneficial to as many people as will the adoption of this amendment.

My colleague, the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. HERNANDEZ], I am confident will corroborate what I say, and he has personal knowledge of the Navajo Indians and of the reservation through which this highway runs that I know will be interesting to the committee, and I will leave it to him to make a statement, if he will, in support of my amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. May I ask the gentleman is this road to be built upon the Indian reservation entirely for the benefit of the Indians, or for the benefit of some white people?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. It will benefit both the white men and the Indians on the Navajo Indian Reservation. That reservation contains all told about 9,000,000 acres of land, and this road will be the main outlet for the Navajoes. I may say that the Navajo Indians are fairly good workers. They have done most of the work on this road thus far, and the Government ought to help them, and also help the white people, by building this highway across this reservation, which is now a great barrier between the people and a good railway outlet.

Mr. HICKS. Might I ask the gentleman how near does this road go to Pueblo Bonita?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I do not know exactly, but the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. HERNANDEZ] can tell you.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. It goes through it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to ask the gentleman if the Indians have recommended that the funds be used for this purpose? As it is made reimbursable it must come out of the Indians' funds.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. My understanding of these reports from the Indian agencies is to that effect. There are a number of reports upon this road from the Indian agents, as well as from Mr. Meritt, Mr. Sells, and the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. HERNANDEZ] give information as to whether the Indians favor an appropriation of their own money for this purpose?

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Yes; as far as I know.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I will insert some reports upon this subject as a part of my remarks, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, March 18, 1915.

MY DEAR MR. TAYLOR: The receipt is acknowledged of your letter dated March 9, 1915, submitting a resolution adopted at a meeting held by the farmers of Montezuma County, Colo., at which it was urged that action be taken to agitate the construction of roads across the Navajo and Ute Indian Reservations to Gallup, N. Mex.

Good roads are recognized to be an important factor in the industrial progress of the Indians, and the office has had under consideration the improvement of conditions on the Navajo Reservation and the construction of a road entirely across the reservation from Gallup to Farmington by way of Shiprock. The superintendents of the various agencies having jurisdiction over the reservation have filed reports and plans giving an estimate of the cost of the work and showing that the proposed improvements would result in materially benefiting the Indians.

Owing to the depleted condition of funds applicable for the work, it has been impossible to take any direct action, and it appears that unless a special appropriation is made for the purpose the office would be unable to undertake any extensive work at this time.

The resolution submitted by you has been placed on file and will be given consideration in connection with the other papers in the case at any time funds become available.

Very truly, yours,

E. B. MERITT,
Assistant Commissioner.

Hon. EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, September 11, 1915.

MY DEAR MR. TAYLOR: The receipt is acknowledged of your letter dated September 2, 1915, with further regard to the construction of roads across the Navajo and Ute Indian Reservations.

Since the reports were made by the superintendents of the various agencies having jurisdiction over the reservations, the superintendent of the San Juan Agency has been able to improve road conditions under his jurisdiction. Various road organizations and other bodies adjacent to the reservation have just recently presented resolutions regarding the improvement of the remainder of the route across the reservation toward Gallup. There are not yet funds available for extensive improvements, but with the view of doing everything possible to better the present conditions, an engineer has been detailed to make an investigation to ascertain the cost of necessary roads and bridges.

The investigation has not yet been completed. As soon as possible you will be advised of the information obtained and furnished with copies of the reports desired, as well as a draft of legislation in the event an appropriation seems advisable.

Very truly, yours,

E. B. MERITT,
Assistant Commissioner.

Hon. EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
Glenwood Springs, Colo.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, January 13, 1916.

MY DEAR MR. TAYLOR: I am returning herewith the copies of correspondence which were left in the office some time ago, with a copy of H. R. 24, providing for an appropriation of $15,000 for the construction of a wagon road on the Navajo Reservation in New Mexico.

This is only one of many proposed road and bridge projects in northwestern New Mexico for which appeals have been made for Government funds. There has been agitated the proposition of constructing a bridge across the San Juan River near Farmington, N. Mex., at a cost of approximately $20,000. Efforts have also been made to provide for the construction of a highway across the Jemez and Zia pueblos; also for the construction of a bridge across the Jemez River at a site within the Zia pueblo. I doubt the wisdom of pushing all these projects, and think it most advisable to decide which is the most urgent and then make concerted efforts to obtain an appropriation for the one.

The reports obtained on the San Juan River Bridge are somewhat conflicting in that there is a difference of opinion regarding the proper proportion of the cost which should be borne by the Indians. The data obtained regarding the Jemez River Bridge and the road across the Zia and Jemez pueblos is not definite enough to justify the making of a recommendation without further investigation.

As a survey has been made, data prepared, and all preliminary details arranged in the case of the Shiprock-Gallup Road, I feel that that project should receive preference.

Very truly, yours,

CATO SELLS, Commissioner.

Hon. E. T. TAYLOR,
House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, October 15, 1915.

MY DEAR MR. TAYLOR: Referring again to your letter regarding the improvement of a road across the Navajo Reservation on a line between Shiprock and Gallup, N. Mex., you are informed that the investigation referred to in office letter of September 11, 1915, has now been completed by an engineer of the Indian Irrigation Service. According to a survey made and an estimate prepared by him, it will require between $50,000 and $55,000 to construct a permanent highway over that part of the course that is yet unimproved. These figures far exceed superficial estimates of $20,000 or thereabouts heretofore made for the work. This may be accounted for by considering that all former estimates were not based on surveys but rather on observations taken while traveling over the country, which, though very smooth apparently, is in reality more or less broken by swales, to cross which it will be necessary to raise the roadbed for drainage.

The superintendent of the Navajo Agency suggests that a certain sum be set aside each year, in case the road is built, in order that the project may be completed within two or three years. Under this arrangement an appropriation of about $15,000 should be made annually.

The various organizations which took up the matter with this office have been advised that on account of the fact that the estimate for the Indian appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1917 has been completed all that can be done by this office is to keep the matter on file for consideration when preparing the estimate for the Indian bill for 1918. They have also been advised that if the commercial clubs and other organizations interested in the improvement of the road because of the benefit to be derived by tourists and white residents of the State shall see fit to urge legislation for this project this office will be glad to make such report thereon as conditions appear to justify and also furnish all the information and data at its command.

As suggested by you, there are inclosed copies of the reports made on this subject by the superintendents of the San Juan and Navajo Agencies, also a draft of legislation for your use in the event you see fit to introduce a bill providing for an appropriation.

Very truly, yours,

E. B. MERITT,
Assistant Commissioner.

Hon. E. T. TAYLOR,
House of Representatives.

JANUARY 28, 1916.

MY DEAR MR. STEPHENS: Referring to your letter of January 14, requesting a report on H. R. 24, appropriating $15,000 for the construction of a wagon road on the Navajo Reservation, in New Mexico, I wish to give you a statement of the facts which demand attention in considering this bill.

The valley drained by the San Juan River lies partly in New Mexico and partly in Colorado. It is a fertile valley, with an abundance of water, and several thousand acres of land are under irrigation. Excellent crops are produced, but there is only one railroad entering the valley, and this has to cross the high mountains north and east of Durango, Colo. Freight rates are unusually high, and the inhabitants of the valley suffer from the inaccessibility of good markets. The Navajo Reservation in New Mexico forms the southern part of the valley, and as there is a railroad running through the towns located just south of the reservation in New Mexico, this vast stretch of Indian country acts as a barrier between the rest of the valley and these railroad towns.

Gallup is the most accessible railroad station south of the reservation, being located on the main line of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad, while Farmington, near the center of the valley, is the terminal of the railroad entering the valley from Colorado. At the present time, to ship by rail from Farmington to Gallup, a distance of a little more than a hundred miles in an air line, the supplies must pass over a long circuitous route of some 600 miles via Albuquerque, N. Mex. It now requires about four days for mail to go from Shiprock, the agency for the San Juan jurisdiction, about 35 miles from Farmington, to Gallup by rail. From this it can be seen that the shipment of products from the valley by rail is made under most unsatisfactory conditions.

A large amount of traffic goes to Gallup at the present time from the valley by way of an overland route, running from Farmington to Shiprock and thence to Gallup. The route has been maintained for years by Indian labor, and it is in such shape that automobiles can make the trip during certain parts of the year. However, the summer rains in this region are torrential in character, and there are times when the arroyos run bank full, often carrying as high as 10 feet depth of water. After such rains large ditches are washed and travel is exceedingly difficult for any kind of vehicle. Water stands on the roads, and the surface is so rutted as to be impassable for long periods. When automobiles can travel on the road the trip from Shiprock to Gallup can be made in from 10 to 12 hours, while teams can make the trip in from 2 to 2½ days.

On the section of the road under the jurisdiction of the San Juan School, from Shiprock south to the Navajo jurisdiction, work has been done and the condition so improved that it is not believed advisable to make the large expenditure necessary to provide a permanent, first-class road. The route under the jurisdiction of the Navajo Agency, commencing at a point where the road enters the southern boundary of the reservation and running in a northerly direction to the San Juan jurisdiction, must be improved, however, before the route from Farmington to Gallup will be open at all times to all kinds of traffic.

There has been a great deal of agitation for good roads throughout this section. The people of San Juan County and southern Colorado are building good roads from Durango and farther north to the reservation line, while McKinley County is constructing a good road from the southern reservation line on to Gallup. The people of the valley are very desirous of having established a good, permanent highway which will permit the operation of automobile mail service between Farmington and Gallup by way of Shiprock, across the Navajo Reservation for a distance of about 100 miles, which will give an outlet for the sale of fruit and other products and connect the San Juan Valley with the main line of the Santa Fe system at Gallup. It is believed that the improvement of the stretch of road under the Navajo jurisdiction and the other improvements by the counties will permit the operation of seven-hour mail service between Gallup and Farmington. The Navajo population in the valley is considerable, which means that a large amount of Indian freight goes over the road annually, the Indians doing the freighting for the different traders on the reservation, and the Indians will share with the other inhabitants of the valley in the benefits to be derived from such an outlet.

The white people all request that the Government do its share by making the road passable across the reservation. No great amount of funds have been available, and maintenance work on the route now used is all that has been done. An engineer recently made a survey of the bad stretch of road, approximately 40 miles in length, and estimated that $54,253.25 would be needed to establish a first-class road. The Indians are unable to repair the road and there is no prospect of obtaining funds for the work unless an appropriation is made by Congress.

I believe that in a situation of this sort the Government should not let the Indian country prove a drawback to the other part of the San Juan Valley and a bar to the progress of the whole valley. I therefore recommend that the bill receive favorable consideration and that approximately $15,000 be appropriated for expenditure each year until the amount estimated has been appropriated and the project completed.

The report of the engineer is inclosed for the information of your committee, and return after its purpose has been served.

Cordially, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE,
Secretary.

Hon. JOHN H. STEPHENS.
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
House of Representatives.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not move to strike out the last word.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. I ask unanimous consent to speak for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Mexico asks unanimous consent to speak for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Mr. Chairman, I fully agree with what the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] has said about this proposed amendment. The Navajo Indian Tribe is one of the largest Indian tribes of the Southwest. They are self-supporting altogether. They are good stockmen and the best blanket weavers in the United States.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does the gentleman mean the female portion of the tribe?

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Yes; the female portion. Well, the females among all Indians are the best part of the Indian population. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. And so they are with the white folks.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Well, even among our people, the present company excepted, of course. We must do that. This will operate to induce the Indians to build the road so that they can do their trading at Gallup. The Navajo Indians have quite a number of sheep. If I am not mistaken, the number of sheep the Navajo Indians have to-day in New Mexico is close to 100,000. That is very valuable property and makes them self-supporting in a great measure. The $15,000, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, is a very small sum to go toward constructing a road about a hundred miles long, but I apprehend that this $15,000 will be used mainly to buy tools such as scrapers and road machines.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. For tools, powder, and so forth, for the Indians to work with.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. And it would encourage them in road building. These Indians, as I have said, are not only self-supporting, but they are trying to make good in earning their own living and advancing in education, and in all lines. They are within a very large reservation in Arizona and New Mexico, and the idea of making this item reimbursable is so that it will only be a short time until it will be reimbursed, because besides having good land that can be put under cultivation, they have a large area of coal land that will develop in time.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. They have a large amount of very valuable and rich land, have they not, with coal, and iron, and oil, and everything else?

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Particularly coal and oil land.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Something like 9,000,000 acres?

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Nine million acres is all they have. Perhaps one-tenth of that amount is classified coal land to-day. So I will say that the adoption of this amendment would be a very valuable thing for these Indians, and then it would help the whites in their trading with them also. We are not supposed to let the Indians build all the roads. The county of McKinley, of which Gallup is the county seat, has already raised a fund to assist in making the roadway across the Indian reservation, as provided for in this amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I withdraw the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas withdraws the point of order. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and education of 400 Indian pupils at Fort Totten Indian School, Fort Totten, N. Dak., and for pay of superintendent, $68,500; sinking wells and making improvements of the water system, $4,000; for horse barn, $5,000; for general repairs and improvements, $5,000; in all, $82,500.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that. I would like to inquire how many horses we educate at this school.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman from that State can give a better estimate of that matter than I can.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I am very much surprised that the gentleman from Illinois should make such an inquiry.

Mr. MANN. Such a request.

Mr. NORTON. Such an inquiry. The school at Fort Totten is one of the best Indian schools in the country. It is one that has turned out within the past 20 years more bright, intelligent, progressive Indian young men and women that have taken up life and work in different sections of the country, I believe, than any other Indian school in the West; and I make that statement from certain personal knowledge and after careful consideration and comparison. The need of a horse barn at that place at this time is, as stated by the superintendent, due to the fact that the horse barn they have had there was destroyed by fire and the building they are now using for a horse barn is an old one and wholly unfitted for its present use. A number of the buildings that are now being used by the Indian school at Fort Totten were formerly used by the troops that were stationed there. Government troops were removed from Fort Totten about 1892, and many of the buildings there are frame buildings of long standing. It is proposed now to construct a new, modern horse barn with this appropriation of $5,000.

Mr. MANN. What is the necessity? The gentleman has not yet answered my question as to how many horses they educate at this institution of learning. How many do they educate?

Mr. NORTON. Well, I think the inquiry is rather a facetious one.

Mr. MANN. Perhaps the gentleman has not worked on the same kind of a farm as the one on which I work. They educate horses. I think farmers usually educate their horses; but perhaps they do not endeavor to have horses on this farm that know anything. But how many do they have of any kind, educated or uneducated?

Mr. NORTON. I can not tell the gentleman the number of horses that are at the agency there.

Mr. MANN. It is not at the agency. This is at the Fort Totten Indian School. This has nothing to do with the agency.

Mr. NORTON. The agency and the school are located in the same place, and I take it that this barn will be used for both the school and the agency.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman be satisfied with this matter if we strike out the word "horse"?

Mr. MANN. I think it ought to go out.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. So it will read "for barn."

Mr. MANN. "For barn." What is the object in saying it is for a horse barn? They may need a barn there. I should think they would have much more use for some other animals than horses at the school.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I ask unanimous consent to strike from the paragraph the word "horse."

Mr. NORTON. That will be entirely satisfactory to me.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks that the word "horse" be stricken out from line 9, page 33. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and education of 200 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Wahpeton, N. Dak., and pay of superintendent, $35,200; for general repairs and improvements, $5,000; in all, $40,200.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the chairman of the committee or some member of the committee a question. Are these schools in these various States open to the Indians from all over the United States, as, for instance, the Indians in New York State?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is in the discretion, as I understand it, of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. BENNET. I would like to ask the gentleman another question. Is the General Government doing anything for the education of the Indian children in the State of New York?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I understand so.

Mr. BENNET. Does that appear anywhere in this bill?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. A great many of the New York Indians go to the Carlisle School, one of the best and largest Indian schools in the United States.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have been there a great many times and find a great number of them from New York.

Mr. BENNET. So the welfare of the Indian children in New York State is being cared for in adjacent States rather than in the State of New York?

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman from New York that we carry an item of $1,500,000 in this bill for the education of Indians not especially provided for. Where it goes I have never been able to discover, but doubtless the gentleman will find it in the report. Perhaps if the usual "live wire from New York" were here on that job, as on all others that I know of, the New York Indians would get their share.

Mr. BENNET. I accept the compliment of the gentleman from Illinois on the part of Representatives from New York.

Mr. KONOP. We also provide for their transportation to and from the schools.

Mr. BENNET. And that applies, of course, to the Indians residing in New York State as well as those residing in other States?

Mr. KONOP. Yes.

Mr. BENNET. Can the gentleman answer the inquiry of the gentleman from Illinois as to what becomes of this million and a half dollars every year that is not specifically appropriated?

Mr. KONOP. The department furnishes an itemized statement of those expenditures, and I think the gentleman can get it upon request.

Mr. BENNET. I have no doubt of that. I thought perhaps the gentleman carried the figures in his head.

Mr. KONOP. No; I do not carry them in my head.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York withdraws his amendment.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the chairman of the committee how many Indian schools we have in the United States?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The school at Carlisle, Pa., is a large school; so is the Sherman Institute in California, and the Haskell School in Kansas, and the Chilocco School in Oklahoma. Those are the four main Indian schools.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to redeem a mortgage on the allotment selection of Starr McGillis, a Turtle Mountain Chippewa Indian, described as the northwest quarter of section 34, township 164 north, range 70 west, of the fifth principal meridian, North Dakota, $1,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, the said sum to be reimbursed from the rentals of said allotment not to exceed 50 per cent of the amount of rentals received annually: Provided, That in the event a patent in fee shall be issued for this land before the United States shall be wholly reimbursed as herein provided, the amount remaining unpaid shall become a first lien on such allotment, and the fact of such lien shall be recited on the face of the patent in fee and the amount of the lien set forth thereon, and the receipt of the Secretary of the Interior, or of the officer, agent, or employee duly authorized by him for that purpose, for the payment of the amount of the mortgage, when duly recorded by the recorder of deeds in the county wherein the land is located shall operate as a satisfaction of such lien.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. MANN. I would like to inquire whether, if this should be done, the same will be reimbursed, with or without interest to the Government?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What was the gentleman's question?

Mr. MANN. As I understand this item, it is proposed to have the Government inaugurate the policy of paying off a mortgage which some one has been bright enough or foolish enough to take, and that the Government in the course of time is possibly to be reimbursed the principal of the mortgage, but not the interest.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The language here is:

The said sum to be reimbursed from the rentals of said allotments, not to exceed 50 per cent of the amount of rentals received yearly.

Mr. MANN. I have read that language. That only indicates the reimbursement of the principal. The principal amount is to be reimbursed in 20 or 25 years.

Mr. KONOP. I think the committee would be satisfied to have the legal rate of interest. It did not occur to the committee at the time they were considering this. I do not think there would be any objection to the suggestion made by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Has the committee really considered the proposition as to whether we ought to inaugurate the policy of paying off mortgages which men who have become unfortunate had previously made? What is the necessity of paying this mortgage off?

Mr. KONOP. I think the "justifications" fully justify this particular case, but I would not agree to a general policy of that kind, as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois, and the committee did not consider it; they thought it was a very small matter. In this particular case they thought it was a just case, and simply left it in as recommended by the department; but I would not agree to such a policy.

Mr. MANN. I think as a rule a mortgagee owning a piece of farm land, if he is willing to do any work at all—in this case he is apparently not willing to work—has no trouble in renewing the mortgage. Why should we pay off the mortgage?

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to explain to the committee the situation here. In 1881 this Indian, McGillis, settled upon the land in question. Later, in 1898, one Hooker was allowed to make entry on the land. Hooker was not only allowed to make entry on the land, but allowed to make proof on the land, and a patent to the land was issued to Hooker in 1907. McGillis contested the right of Hooker to this land, and the matter was taken into the Federal court, and a final decree was rendered in May, 1913, in favor of McGillis.

The court held that McGillis's prior settlement and his residence on this land entitled him to a patent, and the claims of Hooker to the land were set aside. But by a strange part of this decision, it was held that the mortgage given by Hooker to one Steele was a valid lien against the land. The purpose of this item of appropriation is to pay that mortgage with accrued interest, which was made by Hooker to Steele. McGillis never received the benefits of this mortgage. It was through an error on the part of the Department of the Interior that Hooker was permitted to make entry and make proof upon the land. It seems to me that if an appropriation is to be made, it should be made outright and not reimbursable.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON] proves either too little or too much as to this item in the bill.

Mr. NORTON. I can not see why McGillis, under the facts in the case, should be required to pay the amount of this mortgage, $1,500.

Mr. MANN. As long as it is purely a claim against the Government, I can not see what jurisdiction the Committee on Indian Affairs has over the matter at all.

Mr. NORTON. Well, the committee has taken jurisdiction of it.

Mr. MANN. Well, temporarily. It will not last long.

Mr. KONOP. It was clearly a mistake on the part of the Secretary of the Interior in granting the patent.

Mr. MANN. If we should pay off the mortgage because a mistake was made in granting the patent, that is one thing; but it is not proposed to do that. But if McGillis is charged with the mortgage at all, he is quite competent to take care of it when it becomes due. Therefore I make a point of order against the item.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MANN. I reserve it for a moment, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I have just looked at this report, and this seems to be the situation: It seems to have been the fault of the Government that this situation exists. The patent was issued through mistake of the Government, and while the patent was in force a bona fide mortgagee, relying on the patent, loaned $1,100, which became $1,500 by the accrual of interest.

Now, the Government is really chargeable with the entire amount, and the question is to find some way of relieving this Indian. The Indian should not suffer, and it seems to me the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON] is right in his contention that the Government having ignorantly issued a patent, and an innocent mortgagee having advanced the money, the Government itself should make that amount good, and not charge it to this Indian at all.

Mr. MANN. There are two sides to that question, but that could come up when a bill came before the House properly. It is one of those peculiar things that men who give away property are often charged with having given it away erroneously, and it is said that they ought not only to give away their property, but ought to be held in damages for not giving it away correctly. That is the theory. We have these claims constantly before the House, and very seldom allow any of them. But that is a matter for the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The conclusion of the justification is a letter from the attorney representing the Department of Justice who had charge of this claim.

Mr. MANN. If he was so woefully negligent about it, he ought to pay the money. Let the fellows up there who made the mistake pay it out of their salaries.

Mr. DEMPSEY. He did not make the mistake. The Land Office made the mistake; and he, as the attorney for the Department of Justice, recovered the land for the Indian. Now, reporting on the case he says this:

I now have the honor to advise you that on March 21, 1914, the land was sold under the mortgage held by Rachel Stockdale, an innocent assignee thereof. The period of redemption expires one year from that date.

It is apparent that nothing further can be done by this department for the relief of Starr McGillis. The case, however, has impressed me as one of extreme hardship and injustice to this Indian, and I would be glad to know that there is some means by which your department can aid him in the redeeming of the land from the mortgage sale. If some action by Congress is necessary to that end, this department will be glad to join you in recommending appropriate legislation.

As I understand it, the man who makes that report is simply the man who prosecuted the action to redeem from a mortgage sale. He had nothing to do with the erroneous issue of the patent at all, but represented the Indian in the annullment proceeding as a Government attorney.

Mr. MANN. After all, you know, it is not hard ever to be sympathetic at the expense of somebody else; and even the attorneys of the Government frequently think something ought to be done by somebody else, to be paid for from the General Treasury.

Mr. DEMPSEY. But the court says that this patent was improperly and erroneously issued, and the Government is the one that was improvident and made the error. Now, if the Government improperly and erroneously issued this patent, then the Government should make good its mistake.

Mr. MANN. Not at all. The Government is not a guarantor.

Mr. DEMPSEY. No; but if it makes a mistake at the expense of one of its citizens, and, much more, if it makes a mistake at the expense of one of its wards, it ought to make good to that ward for the mistake it has made.

Mr. MANN. Not at all. If we should pay out of the Treasury for any part of the mistakes made by this body, individually and collectively, we would have to start printing presses to print greenbacks much more rapidly than has ever yet been devised. We do not do that.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The Government ought to correct its mistakes.

Mr. MANN. We will correct one mistake this fall. [Applause on the Republican side.] I make the point of order against the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and civilization of the Cheyennes and Arapahoes who have been collected on the reservations set apart for their use and occupation in Oklahoma, including pay of employees, $35,000.

For support and civilization of the Kansas Indians, Oklahoma, including pay of employees, $1,500.

For support and civilization of the Kickapoo Indians in Oklahoma, including pay of employees, $2,000.

For support and civilization of the Ponca Indians in Oklahoma and Nebraska, including pay of employees, $8,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Were these items for the Cheyennes and Arapahoes in Oklahoma, the Kansas Indians in Oklahoma, and the Ponca Indians in Oklahoma and Nebraska, in the bill last year?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They have been carried in the bill for a number of years, as I remember.

Mr. MANN. They were not in the bill last year.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. A point of order was made against the language for their support and civilization, and the point of order was sustained; but the language was put back in the bill before it was finally approved. We reported it just as it is now, and just as it has been in the law before.

Mr. MANN. Are not these Indians ever going to get civilized? What is the trouble with them? Is it the whites who surround them?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We are bringing them around to that point as fast as possible, and making some progress.

Mr. MANN. You do not seem to make any rapid progress, because we appropriate the same amount of money every year, and do not seem to make any headway at all.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. A good many of the Indians are self-supporting, and have had lands allotted to them like white men. Some of them make an excellent living at farming, and some do not work, and hence they have but little to subsist upon.

Mr. MANN. I dare say if we would advertise in advance that we would take care of any number of white persons in the United States—and I would not exclude those in this Chamber—that we would take care of them forever at Government expense, you would not get any of them to work.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman is to a great extent correct about that, because if a man can make a living without work, he is usually inclined to get along without working.

Mr. MANN. We advertise to these Indians that we will continue to make appropriations year after year. It says, "For support and civilization." I do not know whether it is really for the support and civilization of the Indians, or for the support of the Indian agent, though I suspect that the support of the Indian agent has a good deal to do with it. But is there to be no end to taking care of the Indians down there and elsewhere, by supporting and civilizing them, educating them at great public expense? Then, when they own land, we divide it up among them and let them sell it; and then we will start in again supporting, educating, and civilizing those Indians, if we continue the policy which we are now pursuing.

Mr. KONOP. I will state to the gentleman that most of these appropriations that he has mentioned are eaten up by the agencies. That is, the agents are the people who really get the civilization and support. They get the actual cash. The committee spent quite a lot of time on this subject, and wondered whether some of these agencies could not be discontinued, and let the Indians take care of themselves, instead of having some superintendent there, paid by the Government, looking after them to see whether they are working right or wrong.

Mr. MANN. Here is that item right above there:

For support and civilization of the Kansas Indians, Oklahoma, including pay of employees, $1,500.

To begin with, you would suppose that an Indian that reveled in the name of a Kansas Indian would realize that he was civilized. [Laughter.]

Mr. KONOP. Let me say that there was appropriated last year $1,500, and of that amount salary and wages was $1,008.50.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman from Wisconsin sure that as much as $9 was expended for the Indian?

Mr. KONOP. The traveling expenses were $19.16; telephone service, $24.15; printing, binding, and advertising, $24.70; forage, $35.80; fuel, $58.50; station and office supplies, $3.42; equipment material, $78.75; miscellaneous, $6.85; making in all, $1,259.83.

Mr. MANN. That was all for the agency.

Mr. KONOP. All for the agency. I do not think any Indian got a cent.

Mr. MANN. I do not think they got as much as $9. It seems to me it is high time, while we are willing to appropriate for the Indians, for their so-called civilization and support when necessary, that we ought to be willing to stop the appropriation when the benefit to the Indian ceases.

Mr. KONOP. That is my contention.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is what we are trying to do. We have provided for a competency commission, and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in his report says:

The competency commission appointed by you has entered on its duties. The personnel of the commission, consisting of Maj. James McLaughlin, an inspector of the department, and Mr. F. A. Thackery, superintendent of the Pima School, each of whom has had large and varied intimacy with the Indians, is a guaranty that its purpose will be carried out with a sincere determination to make its findings dependable. In connection with the superintendent of the reservation on which its sittings are being held, it will carefully consider the qualifications of each Indian who may apply for a severance of tribal relations, or who, in its judgment, has arrived at the degree of business competency that he should assume the duties of citizenship. I am hopeful, from the wide experience of the members of the commission, that permanent good not only to the individual but to the tribe as well will result from its labors.

Mr. MANN. The personnel of that commission are now on the Government pay roll.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes; they are inspectors, and of course on the pay roll; but they have been appointed to this particular duty, and they are doing it as fast as they can.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For support of Quapaws, Oklahoma: For education (art. 3, treaty of May 13, 1833), $1,000; for blacksmith and assistants, and tools, iron, and steel for blacksmith shop (same article and treaty), $500; in all, $1,500: Provided, That the President of the United States shall certify the same to be for the best interests of the Indians.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. What does this language mean, that "the President of the United States shall certify the same to be for the best interests of the Indians"?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is the language of the treaty, as I understand it.

Mr. MANN. It is very certain that the President of the United States is not going to certify that it is for the best interests of the Indians to have a blacksmith.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They do not have any blacksmith at the present time, and under the rules and regulations it is required that it shall be certified that this amount of money is necessary to carry on the blacksmith shop.

Mr. MANN. I understand. Treaties provide, and I presume this does, for certain specific employees—blacksmiths, and so forth; and then it contains a provision that the money for that purpose may be used for other purposes, providing the President of the United States shall certify that the change to be made is for the benefit of the Indians. That is not this provision. This is that you will make an appropriation for a blacksmith providing the President of the United States certifies that it shall be for the best interests of the Indians.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is the language of the treaty.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon; it is not the language of the treaty.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What is it?

Mr. MANN. I do not know; I have not the treaty before me.

Mr. MURRAY. It is the purpose that the treaty specifies; it is the language specified in the treaty.

Mr. KONOP. I have the language of the treaty, which I will read:

Article 3 of the treaty of May 13, 1833 (7 Stat. L., 424), with the Quapaw reads, in part, as follows:

"The United States agree to provide a farmer to reside with them and to aid and instruct them in their agricultural pursuits, and a blacksmith to do their necessary work, with a shop and tools and iron and steel, not exceeding 1 ton per year. The United States also agree to appropriate $1,000 per year for educational purposes, to be expended under the direction of the President of the United States; the farmer and blacksmith and the above appropriation for educational purposes to be continued only as long as the President of the United States deems necessary for the best interests of the Indians."

Mr. MANN. We have not carried this item heretofore and they have got the money just the same. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois that probably the reason the language was put in this year was because of the additional interest there is in preparedness, that they may have a blacksmith's shop out there to make rifles and such things. I am surprised, in view of the gentleman's remarks the other day, that he should detain the House for three minutes on anything that might be so important. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to resist the withdrawal of the pro forma amendment, which the gentleman can not do without unanimous consent. I am endeavoring to protect the Treasury of the United States, a thing which my friend from New York is never engaged in, hoping that we may have some money left to prepare for an emergency which may arise and which may be a matter of almost life and death to this country.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that that is the reason for the attitude of the gentleman from Illinois, I will ask unanimous consent that my amendment be withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay the Women's Board of Domestic Missions, Reformed Church in America, $10,000 to reimburse said board for buildings on the Fort Sill Military Reserve in the State of Oklahoma, constructed by said board with the consent of the Government and utilized for the education and civilization of the Fort Sill Apache prisoners of war until the removal of said Indians from said Fort Sill Military Reserve.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, to that paragraph I reserve a point of order.

When are we going to get through with these appropriations on account of Apache Indians? We have been appropriating for them and apologizing to them and doing everything else since their outbreak years ago. Why should we have to reimburse for this item? Certainly no one constructed buildings on this military reservation for the benefit of the Indians and then had the Indians leave earlier than was expected. They stayed there until most of them died off.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, of course the gentleman is very familiar with the Apache Indian matter, and so is the rest of the House. About 25 years ago a band of Apaches headed by old Geronimo, one of the most famous outlaw Indians in the country, committed all sorts of depredations along the Indian Territory line and in Texas and in New Mexico. They were later captured as prisoners of war and first sent over to Florida, where a great many of them were inflicted with tuberculosis. They were later brought back and placed on the Fort Sill Military Reservation immediately adjoining my home town. They were kept there on the reservation for about 25 years. A good many of the old ones died, including old Geronimo himself. A good many of the young ones were born in captivity. Several years ago this Woman's Domestic Board, Mrs. Rowe, of Colony, Okla., being one of the active members, constructed $13,500 worth of school houses, dormitories, and churches for the purpose of educating these so-called prisoners of war who had been held there for a great many years. About two years ago the people of my district and all up through New England, every one who could not write a magazine article upon anything else proceeded to write one about the atrocity of keeping the Apache Indians longer in captivity on the Fort Sill Military Reservation. I brought the matter to the attention of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and the Congress did then what I think they ought to have done, released the Indians and allotted them land, part of them going back to New Mexico as they chose to do, retaining part of them in Oklahoma, allotting them lands.

Mr. MANN. Buying land for them?

Mr. FERRIS. That is true. That was certainly full-handed justice to the Indians, and the Government has been very generous with them.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not mean full-handed justice; he means full-handed generosity.

Mr. FERRIS. I guess I will join the gentleman in that. That brings us up to this matter: These women went among the Indians and they did a great deal of good. They educated them. They gave them training. They helped civilize them. They did a good work. They expended $13,500 in building dormitories, schoolhouses, church houses, and homes for the teachers who were to train them. They were really trying to do something for these 200 or 300 Indians.

Mr. MANN. Did they do that intending to get the money back?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Was the fund made up of public donations, or did they take their own money?

Mr. FERRIS. Their own money.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; public donations; secured for this purpose.

Mr. SLAYDEN. We might give them their buildings back.

Mr. FERRIS. This is the situation as I see it: Congress properly let the Indians loose, and did full-handed generosity with the Indians, as the gentleman says. Here are these buildings. I have seen them. There are five or six of them in number—a dormitory for the boys, a dormitory for the girls, a schoolhouse and a church house, and some other little buildings there on the Fort Sill Military Reservation. The Indians are off the Fort Sill Military Reservation, and the buildings, of course, are no longer of any value to the women.

Mr. MANN. As I understand the gentleman, if the Indians had remained as prisoners on this reservation, the ladies would not have asked to have this money reimbursed?

Mr. FERRIS. That is true. They would still be helping to educate them and make good citizens of them.

Mr. MANN. But as long as we have done better by the Indians, and bought farms for them and located them on the land and let them out of prison, therefore we ought to pay the ladies for that privilege which we have given to the Indians.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman's philosophy may be right, although I confess I can not follow it. This is not for the Indians, but for the ladies who have done so much for the Indians. He always knows what is going on, and it is right that the House should know. In any event, here are the buildings on the middle of the Fort Sill Military Reservation, 4 or 5 miles from any privately owned land, that are a dead loss to the women. It is not a large sum. I feel they are entitled to it. I do not think it is more than Congress should do.

Mr. MANN. But of no value to the Government.

Mr. FERRIS. Not quite so. They are a little too far removed to be of full value to the Government, although every one of them is now occupied by certain of the military officers. There is a letter in the Committee on Indian Affairs, in the possession of the chairman, that I turned over to him from Col, Adams, Gen. Mann approving this matter. Last Congress Gen. Leonard Wood also approved. It is also approved by Gen. Scott, the present Chief of Staff.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to continue for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FERRIS. The name of Gen. Mann, in command down at Fort Sill. A very good name, as the gentleman from Illinois will appreciate.

Mr. MANN. I hope the name is not the best part of him.

Mr. FERRIS. He is a very good man. He has a very delightful name, so far as that is concerned. I do not desire to go outside of the question, although they do recommend that these very estimable ladies, engaged in a noble work, be paid for their buildings, and state that every one of the buildings is now occupied by the overflow from the force of Army officers. The letter referred to gave their names. I am sorry I do not have the letter here; but the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs will bear me out that every one of these buildings is occupied by Army officers. Of course the buildings are not perhaps really worth the full $10,000 to the Government. It is in a measure partly, at least, a donation—not quite so—but I believe it is not too much for the Congress to do to pay these old ladies this money for their buildings. The Clerk has now handed me the letter, and the names of the soldiers occupying the buildings are Sergt. Horne, Hospital Corps; Sergt. Herman, School of Musketry; First Sergt. Little, Fifth Field Artillery; and Cook Sparlin, Fifth Field Artillery. I think Congress would not go very far amiss if they let these old ladies be paid for their buildings. The item is, of course, subject to the point of order. Anyone can strike it out if they care to do so; any one of the members of the committee could have stricken it out if he wanted to do so; but I believe it is the proper thing to do. I hope no one will pursue that course.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Chairman, it really offends my sensibilities to have the gentleman constantly refer to these estimable women as "old ladies."

Mr. FERRIS. I will change it to "dear ladies."

Mr. MANN. Surely they can not be very old. These beautiful women never grow old.

Mr. FERRIS. I agree with the gentleman about that.

Mr. MANN. But it does seem to me that where good people as these were and are go on Government land to help educate or take care of Indian prisoners or other Indians that they ought not to expect when they do it voluntarily to come in afterwards and stultify their very action by asking Congress to pay them for it. However, if these buildings are of value to the Government on the Fort Sill Military Reservation, that is a matter that ought to come before the House on a report from the Committee on Military Affairs. The Committee on Indian Affairs has absolutely nothing to do with this question.

Mr. FERRIS. Let me ask the gentleman the question——

Mr. MANN. These people are on a military reservation that belongs to the Government of the United States.

Mr. FERRIS. Let me make a suggestion right there.

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. FERRIS. I think there is much truth in what the gentleman says, but the Committee on Indian Affairs has dealt with the Apache situation from the start to the finish.

Mr. MANN. And I understand that is the very reason why some other committee ought to take up the matter from a disinterested standpoint and——

Mr. FERRIS. I can not go that far with the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. The Committee on Indian Affairs is one of the best committees in the House and one of the ablest Committees on Indian Affairs that has been here since I have been here. My friend from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] succeeded in getting the committee to think that the Apache prisoners were almost godlike.

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, I did not say that.

Mr. MANN. I do not say that the gentleman himself thought so. Oh, no; he did not; but we proceeded to do for these prisoners, who had engaged in one of the most outrageous outbreaks ever known in this country——

Mr. FERRIS. That part of the statement about the outbreak is true.

Mr. MANN. What we have never done for anybody else, and having kept them in fine condition for years when we got ready to kick them out, at the instance of good people, we bought farms in the best State in the Union—I am sure the gentleman will agree with me in that statement—in Oklahoma——

Mr. FERRIS. I can agree by uannimous consent with the gentleman on that point. We have no difficulty on a meeting of minds on that subject, but what I want is you to let these ladies be paid.

Mr. MANN. This proposition ought to come from the proper committee, either the Committee on Military Affairs or the Committee on Claims. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order in order for me to make this statement?

Mr. MANN. I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We are informed that these ladies owned this property and they desired to get the money out of their property so as to follow these Indians into New Mexico and rebuild their school and take care of the Indians just as they have been doing heretofore. They can not move the buildings, but the Government can pay for these buildings and let them erect buildings in New Mexico.

Mr. MANN. Are we not educating these Indians in New Mexico?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Not to the full extent.

Mr. MANN. Are we not building irrigation plants for them?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They have the same right for their money now as they had when those ladies had charge of them.

Mr. MANN. But we put them on a place—part of them in New Mexico—where we have an irrigation plant, where we are doing everything that can be done for the Indians. We have given them a large amount of land. They are in affluence there. Those that did not wish to go there we bought farms for in Oklahoma.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There are 200 of them there, and those particular farms in Oklahoma are a great many miles away from the buildings, and they are no use whatever to the Apache Indians.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will not contend that these Indians who have farms in Oklahoma and receive all the civilizing influences of Oklahoma require the special attention of these ladies?

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve the point for two or three minutes?

Mr. MANN. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not insist on this point of order. I happen to know something about the Reformed Church in America, which in the days of my boyhood, and long before that, was more commonly known as the Dutch Reformed Church. They have been engaged at the expense of the good people of that rather small denomination in attempts, and successful ones, to educate the Indians in all parts of the country, at first in the East, where their record in the district of my colleague, Mr. HICKS, the first district, is most admirable, and then going west and along the line of travel out into Allegheny County, and then into Michigan, and now into Oklahoma. And these good and sincere people, believing it to be a practical application of the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew, with which my friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is familiar, have been year after year collecting this money and using it for this purpose.

And I want to thank my friend from Illinois for one thing right now, and that is for objecting, as I would have objected if he had not, to the characterization of the women who make up this board as "old ladies." They are not. They are fine, excellent, and, a good many of them, good-looking women. They are not old. No lady ever becomes old. And I do most sincerely hope that this small item, the first item of reimbursement of which I am aware, that this good old Dutch Reformed Church, with its fine old motto of "Eendracht maakt macht," of which any man from Michigan knows the meaning, has ever asked for from the Government after 300 years of excellent work among the Indians and the oldest church on this continent to do good, effective work among the Indians, will not be killed upon this floor by a point of order.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman from New York permit a question?

Mr. BENNET. Certainly.

Mr. SLAYDEN. As I understand the proposition set forward by these gentlemen, it is the purpose of these ladies, if the Government no longer needs the building in Oklahoma, to take the proceeds and go to New Mexico and construct new ones and train the Indians there?

Mr. BENNET. I have not the slightest doubt of it.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Suppose the Indians move again, will we have to keep following them?

Mr. BENNET. Before that comes the gentleman will be in the Senate and I will be back in private life. I do not worry about that. [Laughter.]

Mr. SLAYDEN. I thought your conscience would prick you now in your present duty.

Mr. BENNET. My conscience has a good many worse things on it than that. When a denomination has been working for 300 years amongst the Indians at its own expense, I do think that an item, which, of course, would be large for me, but which is a mere incident for the Government of the United States, ought to be killed by a point of order, however good it is.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BENNET. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think that the record of this church for 300 years is one of the most noble examples of philanthropy in the world?

Mr. BENNET. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. And does not he think that we ought not to mar the record now?

Mr. BENNET. I think if there is any question as to that, it ought to come from the other side and not from ours. We have a high duty and a high privilege of showing some appreciation of all the work these people have done in three centuries. I hope a point of order will not be made.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I want to supplement what has been said by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] in regard to the splendid work done by these women. No work was done amongst these Indians by the United States. We furnished them no chaplain. We furnish a chaplain in the penitentiary at Leavenworth and in the penitentiary at Atlanta and here. [Laughter.] There was absolutely no sort of religious training furnished for these criminal Indians. These women, following their good instincts and carrying out the purposes of their good church, went into Oklahoma many, many years ago, when it was out beyond the borders of civilization, when it was in the very wildest part of the Indian country, and constructed these buildings and established a mission among these Indians. It was on a military reservation, to be sure, but they constructed the buildings with the consent of the United States. We came along about two years ago and took the Indians away. The Indians were attached to this mission and to the work it was doing. They have been moved, some of them, to New Mexico, and there is no further use for these buildings as a mission school in Oklahoma. The Government of the United States is now using these buildings. Army officers are occupying them.

It is said that that fact gives jurisdiction to the Committee on Military Affairs. On a matter of this kind a mere question of committee jurisdiction ought not to delay the time when these women shall get the money that they have expended for these buildings, and they should have the opportunity, without delay, of utilizing that money further in mission work among the Indians. This money will not be spent foolishly or for any other purpose than for use in mission work among Indians.

A friend has asked me what was the original cost of these buildings. I understand it was $13,500. The buildings are substantially worth to-day the amount of this appropriation. I sincerely hope the gentleman from Illinois will not make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist on the point of order?

Mr. MANN. Oh, certainly, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Co. be, and is hereby, authorized to reconstruct its line of railroad through the Chilocco Indian School Reservation in the State of Oklahoma to eliminate, where necessary, existing heavy grades and curves, and for such purpose to acquire the necessary right of way, not exceeding 200 feet in width, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior and to the payment for the land so taken and occupied by such new right of way of such an amount as may be determined by the Secretary of the Interior to be fair and adequate compensation therefor, including all damage which may be caused by the reconstruction of said line of railroad to adjoining lands, crops, and other improvements, said amount to be paid to the Secretary of the Interior for the use and benefit of the Chilocco Indian School.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] is more familiar with this matter than any other Member on the floor.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I notice from the hearings that the gentleman at that time regarded this amendment as a proper one for the omnibus bill, rather than the Indian appropriation bill, and the committee dismissed for the time being the consideration of the merits of the proposition. Will the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] or some other member of the committee advise us what change of heart came over the committee so as to have this item made a portion of this bill?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] can answer the gentleman.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I did not catch the first part of the gentleman's question.

Mr. STAFFORD. I said that the chairman of the committee at the hearing suggested that this was a proper item for the omnibus bill rather than this bill, and dismissed all further consideration of the proposition. Now, I ask what change of attitude has come over the committee to warrant their incorporating it in the bill?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, at the time the chairman of the committee made that statement I think I was temporarily absent from the committee room.

Mr. STAFFORD. That was a rare occasion.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Very rare. But as soon as the matter was discussed in the committee it was agreed unanimously in the committee that the item should remain in the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. May I ask the gentleman if this item has ever received consideration in the House before? I recall that last session there was some proposal of a change of route.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It passed the House unanimously last session and was put in the appropriation bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will say to the gentleman that this provision was written into the bill by the department, and that when it was discussed before the committee every man was in favor of it.

Mr. STAFFORD. The printed hearings disclose that the gentleman took an entirely different position then than he is taking now.

Mr. MANN. Well, even the President changes his mind.

Mr. STAFFORD. I assume that the printed hearings are correct; and it there appears that when this item was reached the gentleman stated that he thought it was more proper for some other bill than for the appropriation bill. I have been seeking information why it should be incorporated, and having been furnished that informatien by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We had two committees, first a subcommittee that passed upon the bill, and then the full committee, who considered the bill after it was reported from the subcommittee. I am speaking of the full committee and the gentleman is speaking of the subcommittee.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am speaking of what is reported in the hearings.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman is correct about that, but the full committee took up the matter and considered it, and of that action by the committee there is no printed record. The action of the full committee was subsequent to the hearing before the subcommittee.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] has informed me as to the reason why this was incorporated in the bill, and in view of it having been considered last year I have no objection, and I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is for the benefit of the Indians instead of the railroad, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have just stated that I would withdraw the point of order. If the gentleman continues, he may cause me to change my mind and insist on the point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It puts the railroad half a mile nearer the school.

Mr. STAFFORD. Do I understand the gentleman that the railroad is going to be brought nearer to the school by this change of line?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Somewhere about half a mile nearer.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will that interfere with the use of the school building?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Not at all. There are 8,000 acres that belong to the school, and I think it is a very excellent piece of land.

Mr. STAFFORD. On hearing the additional information which the gentleman has furnished me, I think there is some reason for insisting on the point of order, but the gentleman from Kansas had satisfied me that there was no reason for insisting on it, and I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, we have now reached the Five Civilized Tribes, and it is evident that we will need an agreement as to time on the next item, because there will be quite a controversy over it. Therefore I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FOSTER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the Indian appropriation bill (H. R. 10385) and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examnied and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 5, 1916.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer.

O Thou who art never far from any of us, we would draw near to Thee in faith and confidence, that we may be inspired by the contact to fulfill the duties devolving upon us this day faithfully, conscientiously, that Thy purposes may be fulfilled in us and redound therefore to the good of mankind. For Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of preparedness.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE GOULDEN.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD, in connection with the Goulden memorial exercises, a very brief letter from Mr. Goulden's predecessor, ex-Congressman Ayres.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a letter from Mr. Goulden's predecessor, ex-Congressman Ayres. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The following is the letter referred to:

DEAR MR. BENNET: It is a privilege to be allowed to add a few words which can only too feebly express the regret we all have felt at the untimely removal from earthly scenes of activity of Hon. Joseph A. Goulden. His sudden death was a shock to the district, to the city, and to the State of New York.

He was indeed a most useful Representative, and in his death the twenty-third congressional district of New York City sustained an irreparable loss. He was enthusiastically faithful to his duties as a Representative in Congress. No project for the benefit of the Borough of The Bronx failed to receive his prompt sanction and his unwavering support.

His wide acquaintance, his unvarying cheerfulness, and his great ability made him not only personally popular but exceedingly useful to every project to which his attention was turned.

STEVEN B. AYRES.

To Hon. WILLIAM S. BENNET,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10385, the Indian appropriation bill. And pending that, I desire to ask the gentleman from Mississippi and the gentleman from Oklahoma whether we can agree upon a time for debate on the Mississippi Choctaw item.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, I am of the opinion that the whole thing will be stricken out, and that we will not need any time for argument beyond the point of order. I think at this time it would be premature to fix the time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not think it would be premature. I desire to limit the debate to 1 hour, 30 minutes on a side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that debate on the Mississippi Choctaw item be limited to one hour, one-half to the controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRISON. I shall have no objection to that if we need the time.

The SPEAKER. If the committee does not need the time, it need not consume it. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The motion of Mr. STEPHENS of Texas was then agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. FOSTER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10385, the Indian appropriation bill, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For carrying out the provisions of the Atoka agreement, adopted by Congress June 28, 1898 (30 Stat. L., p. 495), and the supplemental agreement adopted by Congress July 1, 1902 (32 Stat. L., p. 716), the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to pay to the enrolled members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians of Oklahoma entitled under existing law to share in the funds of said tribes, or to their lawful heirs, out of any moneys belonging to said tribes in the United States Treasury or deposited in any bank or held by any official under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, not to exceed $300 per capita in the case of the Choctaws and $200 per capita in the case of the Chickasaws, said payment to be made under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided, That in cases where such enrolled members, or their heirs, are Indians who by reason of their degree of Indian blood belong to the restricted class, the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, withhold such payments and use the same for the benefit of such restricted Indians: Provided further, That the money paid to the enrolled members as provided herein shall be exempt from any lien for attorneys' fees or other debt contracted prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. HARRISON. I make the point of order.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I reserved it because I thought that perhaps the gentleman from Mississippi would make it. I want to reserve it in order that my friend from North Dakota may make a statement.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I trust that the point of order will not be made on the paragraph or any part of it. The provision in the last part of the paragraph which reads as follows—is probably subject to a point of order. That matter was brought up in the committee, and I suggested that this provision be added to the paragraph. It is a provision to safeguard the funds of the Indians which are to be paid to them. It was maintained in the committee that the present provisions of law would provide a sufficient safeguard, and if that be so this, of course, would be surplusage and unnecessary. I think it should be the object of the House to safeguard in every way possible and make certain that these funds will not be liable to attorneys' fees or paid out for fictitious claims made against them.

Provided further, That the money paid to the enrolled members as provided herein shall be exempt from any lien for attorneys' fees or other debt contracted prior to the passage of this act—

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will allow me, I do not object to that provision in itself, and while it would make it clearly subject to a point of order, I think there are other provisions here to which the point of order ought to be sustained. I would say to the gentleman that in the event that this paragraph should be ruled out on a point of order and that the paragraph should then be perfected or cured, this latter provision should be inserted, and I would have no objection to it.

Mr. NORTON. I am pleased the gentleman takes that attitude, for I strongly feel that the provision should be left in the paragraph. The substance of the paragraph is the per capita payment to be made of the funds of the Choctaws and Chickasaws. It seems to me that every safeguard should be placed around it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think that this is a necessary provision in the event that this money is paid out, because it ought not to be subjected to the enormous attorney fees that the Indians have contracted for.

Mr. NORTON. I do not know but that it is provided for by existing law, but I think it should be specifically safeguarded.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Since talking with the gentleman from North Dakota this morning, I have drawn a paragraph which I think comes within the rules of the House. I have changed the latter proviso to read:

Provided further, That no part of the sum appropriated by this paragraph shall be paid to attorneys.

I think that will protect the Indians and come within the rules of the House, because it is strictly a limitation.

Mr. NORTON. I would say to the gentleman that I think the provision as it stands now in the paragraph is better than that provision.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I agree with the gentleman that it is better, but I drafted this paragraph to get by the point of order.

Mr. NORTON. I do not think the point of order will be made to the provision I have proposed, as the gentleman from Mississippi says that he will make no objection to it.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentleman may not make the point of order against the proviso, but the gentleman from Mississippi makes a point of order against the entire paragraph on account of the proviso, and the point of order must be conceded if the proviso is not changed.

Mr. HARRISON. I want it understood that I do not object to that particular provision. There are matters in the paragraph that I think are subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

Insert immediately after line 19, page 37:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to the enrolled members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians of Oklahoma entitled under existing law to share in the funds of said tribes, or to their lawful heirs, out of any moneys belonging to said tribes in the United States Treasury, or deposited in any bank, or held by any official under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, not to exceed $300 per capita in the case of the Choctaws and $200 per capita in the case of the Chickasaws, said payment to be made under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided, That in cases where such enrolled members or their heirs are Indians who by reason of their degree of Indian blood belong to the restricted class, the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, withhold such payments and use the same for the benefit of such restricted Indians: Provided further, That no part of the sum appropriated by this paragraph shall be paid to attorneys."

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma whether the amendment he offers is the same in language as the provision of the bill which went out down to the words "Provided further"? I understood from the reading that it is the same. Is the language the same down to the end of line 16, page 38?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. It is just the same, with the provision for attorneys' fees stricken out, and the words "Provided further, That no part of the sum appropriated by this paragraph shall be paid to attorneys" added. It is the same as was carried in the bill last year and the year before.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have no objection to it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi make the point of order?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment as now perfected changes very materially the provisions carried in the present bill. While I did not agree with the ruling of the Chair last year and the year before that it is in order, yet I feel that I must bow to the ruling of the Chair, and I withdraw the point of order and offer an amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, there is one amendment pending now.

Mr. HARRISON. I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment after the word "attorneys" by inserting the following:

"Provided, however, That the provisions of this paragraph with respect to the Choctaw Tribe shall not be operative until the Court of Claims shall determine the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws who have been identified as Mississippi Choctaws by the Dawes Commission in its report of March 10, 1899, and commonly known as the McKinnon roll, and also all Mississippi Choctaws who have been identified as Mississippi Choctaws by the Dawes Commission from March 10, 1899, to March 4, 1907, whose names do not appear upon the final rolls of the Choctaw Tribe in Oklahoma."

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the point of order be made.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes. Mr. Chairman, this amendment that I have offered is merely a limitation upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER]. Last year the chairman of the Committee of the Whole, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] passed on practically this amendment, and held it in order. The only difference between the amendment that was at that time offered and which was held, under a ruling of the Chair, to be in order, and the amendment now offered is that the amendment at that time read as follows:

Provided, however, That the provisions of this paragraph in respect to the Choctaw Tribe shall not be operative until the Congress shall determine the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws whose names do not appear upon the final rolls of the Choctaws in Oklahoma.

And the amendment now only withholds the payments until the Court of Claims shall do what was proposed in that amendment Congress should do, namely, determine the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws.

The Chair at that time, after listening to a long discussion of the question, ruled that the provision was simply a limitation upon the paragraph in the bill, and the Chair at that time based his reasoning largely on a decision that had been cited to the Chair of February 23, 1907. That decision is based on the following facts:

On February 23, 1907, the sundry civil appropriation bill was under consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, when the following amendment was offered to the paragraph providing appropriation for the National Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers:

"Add the following:

"'And provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be apportioned to any National Home for Disabled Volunteers that contains a bar or canteen where intoxicating liquors are sold.'"

Mr. Richard Barthold, of Missouri, made the point of order that the amendment proposed legislation.

In the course of the debate Mr. JAMES R. MANN, of Illinois, argued:

"Here is a situation now proposed where Congress by law is creating soldiers' homes. It has by law provided for the government of soldiers' homes. At soldiers' homes it has vested the government in a board of managers in accordance with the provisions of the statute. It is true that Congress can refuse to appropriate, but, Mr. Chairman, it is also true that the Chair has frequently ruled that Congress can not, against a point of order, by a limitation change the organic law. Here is a provision—"

Argued Mr. MANN—

"that although Congress has created these soldiers' homes by an organic law, although it has provided for the government of the soldiers' homes by a board of managers, a proposition through the form of a limitation to take away the control of the board of managers and by affirmative legislation in the guise of a limitation to change the statute upon that subject. While limitations are usually favored by the Chair, properly, still it is true that the Chair might well rule, it seems to me, that a limitation in this guise, changing the law, giving the board of managers the discretion over the management of the homes, is positive affirmative legislation, as it undoubtedly would be construed by the Comptroller of the Treasury, and therefore subject to a point of order. It is perfectly manifest that an item of this kind in the bill is construed by the Comptroller of the Treasury as positive legislation, although it be in the form of a limitation."

After further debate the Chairman ruled:

"The language used in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas is as follows:

"'And provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be apportioned to any National Home for Disabled Volunteers that contains a bar or canteen wherein intoxicating liquors are sold.'"

The Chairman said:

"This very proposition was presented in regard to the State Soldiers' Homes in 1904, and the Chair at that time overruled the point of order and held it in order as a limitation. If the Chair were only following the precedent, he would be constrained to overrule the point of order in this case. One year ago this whole question, as most of the Members will remember, was taken up and discussed thoroughly and elaborately, and at that time the gentleman from Kansas offered this proviso:

"'That this appropriation shall be available only under the condition that no bar or canteen shall be maintained at said homes for the sale of beer, wine, or other intoxicating liquors.'

"In legislation we look to the substance, and not to the form; and unless there is an affirmative attempt to restrict the administrative power or departmental function, it has always been held that a limitation in negative language is in order.

"The present occupant of the chair went fully into the authorities and quoted a large number of decisions by Mr. Hemenway, of Indiana; Mr. Burton, of Ohio; Mr. Payne, of New York; and other eminent parliamentarians who had occupied this chair when questions of similar import had been raised, all sustaining the theory that limitations of this character are clearly in order.

"The Chair does not care to go fully into this line of decisions again, because the Chair believes that the ruling at that time was acquiesced in and believed to be the proper ruling under the circumstances. Therefore the Chair overrules the point of order."

The Chairman at that time, Mr. BYRNS, held, as will be seen in the RECORD of that date, that an amendment that is practically the same as this amendment was in order. The only difference between the amendment that is now proposed and the one that Chairman BYRNS held to be in order at that time is that this one provides that the per capita payments to the Oklahoma Choctaws shall not be made until the matter is determined by the Court of Claims. The other amendment imposed the limitation that the per capita payments should not be made until Congress determined the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws, and the only difference, therefore, in the limitation is, one provides that the Court of Claims shall determine it and the other that Congress shall determine it. In each instance there is no affirmative matter; in each instance there is merely a limitation on this distribution of the per capita payments; and I submit that under the ruling of the Chair last year in holding the other amendment to be a limitation when it gave full power to Congress to determine when the money was to be expended, clearly the Chair ought to rule that this amendment is in order.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, the principle on which the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] claims that this is in order is that it is a "limitation upon expenditures." If it were merely a limitation, he would be correct, but there is quite a distinction between a limitation on expenditure and negativing any expenditure at all. This provides that when the Court of Claims passes upon the question it shall be paid. There is no provision of law by which the Court of Claims can pass upon the question. It has no jurisdiction to do so, and this amendment does not give that jurisdiction. If it were not given jurisdiction directly, the time would pass in which this payment could be made. I apprehend the Chair would not rule that a negative amendment would be in order; in other words, if the provision provides for a payment, it would not be in order to provide that the payment should "not" be made, because that would be the reverse. That is clear in general principles of parliamentary law and, as I understand, the practice of the House.

Now, there might be one formal amendment on the assumption that there shall not be any payment until the House provides for it, if the House would do so; but it is quite distinct to say until the Court of Claims, because the Court of Claims can not pass upon it, and, therefore, there could be no payment. For that reason I do not see how the Chair can hold this provision in order, even basing it upon a former decision.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, if this were a mere limitation upon the payment of money there is no question that it would be subject to the point of order, but it is not a limitation. This is an act of affirmative legislation that changes existing law. This amendment would change the law which fixes the rolls of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians under which annuities and per capita payments have been made and under which they took their allotments in the Indian country. The Thirty-fourth Statutes, page 137, provides:

That after the approval of this act no person shall be enrolled as a citizen or a freedman of the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Creek, Cherokee, or Seminole Tribes of Indians in the Indian Territory, except as herein otherwise provided unless application for enrollment was made prior to December 1, 1905, and the records in charge of the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes shall be conclusive evidence as to the fact of such application.

This law is changed by the proposed amendment when it proposes that the Court of Claims shall add to the rolls aside from the conditions which I have just read, authorizing the Court of Claims to ignore the provisions of the law that fixes the rolls in the possession of the Dawes Commission on the 1st day of December, 1905, as the rolls of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians. That law has been standing now for years as the law that has governed all payments and all allotments made to the Choctaws and Chickasaws. The amendment proposes a further violation of law. A proviso in the same act I have just read reads:

That the rolls of the tribes affected by this act shall be fully completed on or before the 4th day of March, 1907, and the Secretary of the Interior shall have no jurisdiction to approve the enrollment of any person after that date.

The rolls were closed on the 4th day of March by acts of Congress. This is a proposition that will open the rolls and is clearly a change of existing law. I do not think there can be any sort of question as to the amendment being subject to the point of order.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I want to submit one or two suggestions only to the Chair. The Curtis Act creating the Dawes Commission created a board to determine this enrollment matter. On April 26, 1906, Congress passed an act formally and forever closing these rolls on March 4, 1907. That act has never been repealed; it is still the law. No one has sought to repeal it until this time. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], traveling in the guise of a limitation, is in truth, in effect and reality, a repeal of that act. Why? Because it proposes a new trial and change of the law for all of these cases that have heretofore been adjudicated, fairly bringing it within the rule of changing existing law by an amendment on an appropriation bill. To call a thing by the name of a limitation, when in truth and in fact it is another thing, does not bring it within the rule of a limitation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I will.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that if this amendment passes it would reopen the rolls, subject to the jurisdiction of this court?

Mr. FERRIS. Precisely; and, if the Chair will bear with me further, in addition to that, in addition in effect to repealing a solemn act of Congress of April 26, 1906, it does more than that. It prescribes a new tribunal, that never had anything to do with these rolls. In addition to repealing that it creates a new tribunal to try these cases, which is clearly legislation. It is a repeal of the law, in the first instance; it is new legislation, in the second instance; and in neither instance is it is truth and in fact a limitation. I think the Chair would be entirely right, would be entirely authorized, and entirely justified to hold it to be the thing which it actually is, and I hope the Chair can agree with us on the proposition. It certainly does two things—repeals a solemn act of Congress that is still in full force and effect and establishes a new tribunal—either of which clearly subjects it to the point of order, and it ought to go out.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, in addition to what has been already said, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to section 21 of the act of June 28, 1899, which provides as follows:

The rolls so made, when approved by the Secretary of the Interior, shall be final, and the persons whose names are found thereon, with their descendants hereafter born to them, with such persons as may intermarry according to tribal laws, shall alone constitute the parties which they represent.

Now, there is a provision also in the Indian appropriation bill approved March 3, 1901, which provides:

The rolls made by the Commission for the Five Civilized Tribes, when approved by the Secretary of the Interior, shall be final, and persons whose names are found thereon shall alone constitute the rolls which they represent.

In addition I desire to again invite the attention of the Chair to this provision of section 2 of the act of April 26, 1906, which closed the rolls on March 4, 1907, and clearly this amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi changes existing law. Let me repeat, Mr. Chairman, that if that sort of amendment could go on here and was not subject to the point of order and was in order the same sort of amendment could be placed after each clause in this appropriation bill.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, the gentlemen who have just preceded me have not discussed the point of order, but have argued, or attempted to argue, the merits of this controversy.

Now, the gentleman called the attention of the Chair to the act of 1898, known as the Curtis Act. I want to read to the Chair one provision of the act of 1898 that the gentleman overlooked, and that was:

Provided, however, That nothing contained in this act shall be so construed as to militate against any of the rights or privileges which the Mississippi Choctaws may have under the laws or treaties of the United States

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. HARRISON. No; the gentleman has already spoken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Mississippi a question.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. If this amendment should be placed in this bill, and become a law, is it the gentleman's idea that then the Mississippi Choctaws have the right to go to the Court of Claims and argue their right to be enrolled and secure a part of this?

Mr. HARRISON. I do not think so, and that is the point I want to present. During the consideration of this paragraph the last time there was an amendment offered, and held in order, that provided this money should be withheld—this money that is proposed to be distributed among these Indians—until Congress should determine whether or not they are entitled to enrollment. That amendment did not give any affirmative action. That amendment only put a limitation on that distribution. It said this payment is withheld from being distributed until Congress shall determine whether or not the Mississippi Choctaws are entitled to enrollment. By the terms of that provision it did not set up affirmatively that Congress had to do anything for the Mississippi Choctaws. It did not say in that provision that there should be a law passed to open the rolls of the tribe and take care of the Mississippi Choctaws, but it only said this, that here you are proposing to distribute the funds of the Choctaw Nation among the Indians who are now in Oklahoma on the rolls of the tribe, and we want that withheld, not to do it now, because there is a controversy between the Indians of Mississippi and the Indians of Oklahoma, and to withhold this distribution until Congress shall determine whether or not the Mississippi Choctaws will have a right to enrollment. It was merely a limitation, and whenever Congress determines whether or not the Mississippi Choctaws were entitled to enrollment, then the per capita payments should be made under the provisions of the bill.

Now, here you have the same proposition, and there can not be any question as to that, because here the same argument is advanced against the amendment that was advanced last time to the other amendment. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] and all of these gentlemen argued then that the amendment included affirmative matter—the reopening of the roll—just as they now argue, but the Chair did not accept that contention. We argued that the amendment was merely a limitation. It did not state any affirmative matter, but was merely negative—a limitation pure and simple.

May I read to the Chair what the Chairman then said in ruling on that amendment?

There is nothing in the amendment seeking to force the Congress or compel the Congress to determine the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws. It simply provides that a per capita tax shall not be paid until the Congress shall have determined such rights.

The CHAIRMAN. Does this amendment of the gentleman now seek to change the status of the Mississippi Choctaws, or has their claim been adjudicated?

Mr. HARRISON. This amendment does not give the Court of Claims jurisdiction to try these cases, but it presents an opening so that Congress can during this session or next session pass a law that would send this whole question to the Court of Claims for adjudication.

And so, Mr. Chairman, I submit, as the provision last time, which was held in order, only limited this distribution until Congress should have determined these claims, that now they should be withheld until the Court of Claims shall determine these claims. And, I say, there is nothing in this provision that gives the Court of Claims authority to go ahead and try them. We have got to give that authority later. We have got to pass another bill on that that will be affirmative matter, and this amendment only seeks to withhold these funds until the Court of Claims does determine the rights in the premises. And I submit the Chair must overrule Chairman BYRNS, if he does not overrule the point of order here presented.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. What the gentleman has said to-day might apply to the amendment he offered one or two years ago, but it certainly can not be said to apply to this amendment, for the very language of this amendment itself attempts to change existing law by referring these matters to the Court of Claims. What does it say?—

It shall not be operative until the Court of Claims shall determine the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws—

And so forth.

If it is not a clear attempt to reopen a matter which is now res adjudicata and send this adjudicated claim to the Court of Claims, a new tribunal never before dealing with the case, then what is its purpose?

The gentleman's amendment not only seeks to change existing law but it seeks to overturn the decisions of our courts, the decisions of specially authorized commissions, and the decisions of Congress itself.

If adopted it would overturn the decision of Federal Judge Clayton in the Jack Amos case, in which it was held that the Mississippi Choctaws must make bona fide settlement in the Choctaw Nation before they could participate in the estate of the Indian Territory Choctaws, a case never reversed by any competent tribunal to this good day. It would overturn the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the Cherokee Nation against Stephens, which decided a similar contention. It would overturn the decision of Federal Judge Townsend in the case of Ikard against Minter, in which it was held in effect that before a right could establish they must move on the land.

This amendment undertakes the repeal of the act of July 1, 1902, a solemn treaty between this Government and the Choctaws, which provides that the Oklahoma estate shall be divided between the members of the tribe enrolled under its provisions and no others. It undertakes the repeal of the act of April 26, 1906, which declared the Choctaw rolls should be closed on March 4, 1907, and no name should be added thereto after that date. It would overthrow 11 years of careful, painstaking work employed by the Dawes Commission in making the Choctaw rolls, reverse the decisions of no less than five Cabinet officers, and nullify the judgment of the House in the Sixty-third Congress as expressed by overwhelming majorities on three or four different occasions. This latter might not, of course, affect the parliamentary status, but the reversal of court decisions, decisions of the Dawes Commission, and repeal of the acts above referred to certainly would render this amendment obnoxious to the rules of the House.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the Chair allow me a moment to present a proposition of law?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] a moment ago called your attention to the provision in the act of 1898 which seemed to preserve the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws. If the Chair will hear me just one moment, I desire to submit that the act of April 26, 1906, says this:

Provided, That the rolls of the tribe affected by this act shall be fully completed on or before the 4th day of March, 1907, and the Secretary of the Interior shall have no jurisdiction to approve the enrollment of any person after said date.

That is the act of 1906. The gentleman read the act of 1898. The later act, of course, supplants the act referred to by the gentleman from Mississippi. In addition to that, Mr. Chairman, the concluding paragraph of the act of April 26, 1906, was this, in section 29:

That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

I make these two points, Mr. Chairman: The provision referred to by the gentleman from Mississippi is, first, repealed by the act of 1906 in specific language, and, second, it is done in so many words—the words just presented. It specifically provides that the rolls are closed on March 4, 1907, and that thereafter no names shall be added. So that both by specific repeal and by actual language of part of section 2 of the act of April 26, 1906, it overrides and overturns the authority presented by the gentleman. So it is clearly a change of the existing law, and is not a limitation, and consequently not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers an amendment, to which the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] proposes an amendment, which has been read at the Clerk's desk. The original amendment provides for the payment of so much per capita of the Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes, the Choctaws and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma. The gentleman from Mississippi offers an amendment to this amendment, as follows:

Provided, however, That the provisions of this paragraph with respect to the Choctaw Tribe shall not be operative until the Court of Claims shall determine the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws, who have been identified as Mississippi Choctaws by the Dawes Commission in its report of March 10, 1899 and commonly know as the McKinnon roll, and also all Mississippi Choctaws who have been identified as Mississippi Choctaws by the Dawes Commission from March 10, 1899, to March 4, 1907, whose names do not appear upon the final rolls of the Choctaw Tribe in Oklahoma.

In last year's Indian appropriation bill there was a provision to the effect that—

The provisions of this paragraph, with respect to the Choctaw Tribe, shall not be operative until Congress shall determine the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws whose names do not appear on the official rolls of the Choctaws in Oklahoma.

As the Chair understands, these funds are held as trust funds by the Government, not paid out annually but only at such times as Congress shall determine to do so. The Chair is not here to pass upon the motives of the gentleman from Mississippi or what he may have in his mind when he offers this amendment. He only judges of the amendment itself as it appears.

This question was argued very fully, as the Chair remembers, in 1915, when the Indian appropriation bill of that year was under consideration. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] then occupied the chair—a very able man and a man who had served on the Indian Affairs Committee—and he decided that, in his judgment, this did not change existing law.

This does not at this time refer this matter to the Court of Claims. If it did, the Chair would sustain the point of order without any question. The Congress has the right, of course, to make an appropriation according to law, but before that appropriation shall be paid, Congress has the right to put any limitation that it may see fit on it. For instance, it could be provided that it should not be made until it was determined that the moon was made of green cheese; so that the Chair thinks that under these circumstances—and he quotes here from the Chairman of last year—the amendment is not open to the objection that it is new legislation or that it changes existing law.

The ruling of the Chair last year was as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] offers an amendment to add the following language to the paragraph:

"Provided, however, That the provisions of this paragraph in respect to the Choctaw Tribe shall not be operative until Congress shall determine the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws whose names do not appear upon the final rolls of the Choctaws in Oklahoma."

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] made the point of order that this amendment is not germane and is new legislation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And will repeal existing laws, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. And that it repeals existing laws. The purpose of the paragraph under consideration is to direct a per capita payment of a given sum to certain tribes of Indians, the payment to be made out of trust funds belonging to the Indians and within the control of the United States Government. It provides for an unconditional per capita payment. The fact that under existing law Congress has the right in an appropriation bill to make a per capita payment to the Indians does not, of course, carry with it the absolute requirement on the part of the Congress to make the appropriation.

In other words, it is entirely within the discretion of the Congress whether or not it will make the appropriation. It may make all or a part of the appropriation, or it may adopt a provision making the appropriation entirely nugatory, provided such provision is germane and does not change existing law. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi seeks to delay the payment of any per capita payment until Congress shall have determined the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws whose names do not now appear upon the final rolls of the Choctaws in Oklahoma. There is nothing in the amendment seeking to force the Congress or to compel the Congress to determine the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws. It simply provides that a per capita tax shall not be paid until the Congress shall have determined such rights. Now, it seems to the Chair that Congress, having the right to make the appropriation in any amount it deems proper, may also adopt a provision rendering the entire appropriation nugatory. The wisdom of such a course is for the committee and not the Chair to determine. The Chair does not think the amendment open to the objection of being new legislation or that it changes existing law. The Chair has not been furnished with any treaty or statute providing specifically for an annual per capita payment. If there was any such statute, the Chair apprehends that it would not be necessary to have the provision which has been reported as a part of the pending bill. The Chair is of opinion, however, that there is ample authority for Congress to make such annual payment in an appropriation bill if it sees fit to do so. On the other hand, Congress may withhold it, as has been done in the past. The Chair therefore does not think that the amendment changes existing law, nor does it propose new legislation. It is, in the opinion of the Chair, only a condition or limitation on the appropriation, the effect of which and the advisability of which the committee and not the Chair must determine.

The Chair thinks the amendment in order, and therefore overrules the point of order.

There is in volume 4 of Hinds' Precedents, page 636, paragraph 3942, this elucidation:

3942. While it is not in order to legislate as to qualifications of the recipients of an appropriation, the House may specify that no part of the appropriation shall go to recipients lacking certain qualifications. On January 30, 1901, the Agricultural appropriation bill was under consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the Clerk had read the paragraph relating to agricultural colleges, when Mr. Charles B. Landis, of Indiana, proposed this amendment:

"Provided, That no part of the appropriation shall be available for the agricultural college of Utah until the Secretary of Agriculture shall be satisfied, and shall so certify to the Secretary of the Treasury, that no trustee, officer, instructor, or employee of said college is engaged in the practice of polygamy or polygamous relations."

Some debate having taken place, and Mr. William H. King, of Utah, having suggested a point of order, the Chairman said:

"There are two reasons why the Chair would be inclined to overrule the point. In the first place, it comes rather late, and in the second place the amendment seems to be a limitation upon this appropriation."

The amendment having been agreed to, Mr. King offered the following amendment:

"And that no person shall be appointed a teacher or trustee in any of said colleges who has been engaged in any lynching, and until proof shall have been furnished, to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Agriculture, that such teacher or trustee has not been guilty of adultery or fornication."

Mr. Charles H. Grosvenor, of Ohio, made the point of order that the amendment was not in order.

The Chairman said:

"Let the Chair state to the gentleman that the ruling on the other amendment was that that was a limitation upon the appropriation—providing that no part of this appropriation shall be paid to the agricultural college, in general terms, until it was ascertained that no teacher or trustee was a polygamist. That is a general statement of that amendment. That was a limitation upon the appropriation. Then comes this independent proposition, involving legislation. * * * The Chair sustains the point of order."

Thereupon Mr. King offered the following:

"Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for the agricultural college of Indiana or any other State or Territory until the Secretary of Agriculture shall be satisfied, and shall so certify to the Secretary of the Treasury, that no trustee, officer, instructor, or employee of said college is engaged in the practice of polygamy or polygamous relations or is guilty of adultery or fornication."

Mr. Grosvenor made the point of order against the amendment.

The Chairman overruled the point of order and held that the amendment was in order.

The Chair thinks that this does not change existing law, but provides that these provisions of this appropriation, which clearly is an appropriation, shall not be carried out until this matter shall be referred to the Court of Claims, and thinks it is in order, and therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] whether we can agree beforehand on the time this matter shall be discussed. I fear there will be unnecessary discussion unless we limit the debate. Will 30 minutes on a side satisfy the gentleman?

Mr. HARRISON. I do not know who wants to speak on the proposition, but I should think 30 minutes on a side would do.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. What does the gentleman from Kansas desire with reference to this?

Mr. CAMPBELL. What was the proposition?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The proposition was that we have 30 minutes in favor of the payment and 30 minutes against it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Do I understand that the proposition is to debate the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] and the item in the appropriation bill all as one item?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. All as one item.

Mr. CAMPBELL. And the time for debate is to be 30 minutes on a side?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Thirty minutes on a side.

Mr. CAMPBELL. And that covers the entire proposition?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is correct.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma and the amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. HARRISON. Unless someone else has some amendment to offer that I know nothing about.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Let us close the debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The probabilities are that we shall desire 40 or 45 minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then I will change the request—that each side have 45 minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. On this paragraph and all amendments thereto?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. On this paragraph and all amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed in 1 hour and 30 minutes—half the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] and one half by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL].

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] to control half the time and the gentleman from Kansas half the time.

Mr. NORTON. May I inquire of the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Mississippi if I will have the opportunity of offering an amendment at the end of the paragraph to perfect that part of the paragraph?

Mr. HARRISON. That will be entirely satisfactory to me.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What does the gentleman from Oklahoma say about that?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The agreement as to time does not cut off any amendment that may be proposed. It simply stops the debate.

Mr. NORTON. May I have five minutes to discuss that amendment?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Five minutes additional?

Mr. NORTON. That will be all right, if I may offer the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] and the gentleman from Mississippi to have control of the time.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I suggest that the hour and a half be divided, 45 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HAR-RISON] and 45 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER].

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is what I desire.

The CHAIRMAN. The request for unanimous consent, then, is that the debate be limited to 1 hour and 30 minutes, one half the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] and the other half by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. Is there objection?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. On the paragraph and all amendments thereto?

The CHAIRMAN. On the paragraph and all amendments thereto. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The amendment that I have proposed being pending, has the proponent of the amendment the right to close the debate?

The CHAIRMAN. The first amendment is offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. HARRISON. And mine is an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentleman in charge of the bill ought to have the right to close the debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi will recall that his amendment is an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER], who will have the right to close the debate.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, there has been and is now a great deal of confusion over the question that is now before the House, and we who come from Mississippi realize full well the solicitation that has been indulged in upon the part of the delegation from Oklahoma to the membership here to vote with them on this question. We do not in the least minimize the importance of this matter to the Oklahoma Representatives, because we realize full well that the Indians of Oklahoma vote and that this is a question of political as well as material significance. It is very important to them. But there is much confusion over the question.

It will be argued in the course of this discussion that courts, that commissions, that Congresses, that Secretaries of the Interior have passed upon this question and that the matter has been thrashed out and is settled. I say to you that the facts do not bear out that contention. I say to you that there has never been a court of respectable jurisdiction that has passed upon this question. The only court of any authority that has passed primarily upon the question of whether or not the Indians of Mississippi should remove to Oklahoma in order to be enrolled was a Territorial court in the Indian Territory of no higher authority than that which Federal district judges usually have. The Court of Claims, the Circuit Court of Appeals, and the Supreme Court of the United States have never passed upon the question at all, and so when gentlemen argue to you that the question has been determined judicially, I say to you that the record does not bear out the statement at all. It is true that the Dawes Commission at one time, in 1896, passed upon this proposition to the extent that they said that in order for a Mississippi Indian to be enrolled he must move to the Indian Territory; and after that, mind you, the same commission in a report to Congress said that they thought the question was so complicated, so intricate, so important that it ought to go to the Court of Claims to be thrashed out and there determined.

Now, all that we ask you to do in this matter—because it is a question that has been up here for four years—is to withhold the payment until the question has been passed upon by the Court of Claims. Every year this per capita payment comes up. You can understand why it comes. The gentlemen from Oklahoma know that when they make these per capita payments among the Indians of Oklahoma that it will be only a little while when the fund will be gone and there will be nothing left, and then if the Mississippi Choctaw is ever permitted to be enrolled he will and can obtain nothing. So this provision that is offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] proposes to pay out $300 to each Indian now upon the rolls. All we are asking you to do is not to reopen the rolls, but to withhold that payment, withhold these payments until this matter can go to the Court of Claims and there be thrashed out and all the questions of law and equity decided.

Is that asking too much? Do not you think it is time for a court of respectable authority to pass upon it? That is all in the world we are asking you to do now. Withhold the payments, not make them now, so that this Congress can pass a bill sending the whole matter to the Court of Claims for adjudication.

In the Fifty-sixth Congress the Senate of the United States passed a bill sending it to the Court of Claims. It was reported out of the House Committee on Indian Affairs, but that bill did not come upon the floor of the House. I say to you gentlemen with all candor, with all sincerity, the best way to settle this question—because it is intricate; it is complicated—is to send it to the Court of Claims and let them pass finally upon it.

Now, they will say, in the course of argument, that this is in the interest of attorneys and grafters; that it will help a lot of people who ought not to be placed upon the rolls. I want to say to you that there are a lot of people who would like to be benefited by it but will not be. There are about 1,200 full-blood Indians left in Mississippi. They are poor, they are needy, they have as much right to share in the funds in Oklahoma as have the Oklahoma Indians. These are the people that we want to take care of.

So in the argument used by the gentleman from Oklahoma do not be swept off your feet by the assertion that attorneys are going to reap the benefit of it. We can write a provision in the law that will safeguard it, just as the provision that the gentleman from North Dakota proposed a few moments ago to write into it. I ask you, I appeal to you, not to vote against us in this matter but to give it the most serious and careful consideration. Do not vote against it simply because some man from Oklahoma has asked you to, simply because you have received a letter from some one in Oklahoma. My God! Do not let us decide matters here by such methods, let us deal justly and fairly with the question. We are not asking you to do an unjust thing by withholding the funds until the Court of Claims can pass upon it, and I submit the amendment I have offered should be adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. KONOP. Mr. Chairman, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS].

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, I had an opportunity to become familiar with this question during my four years of service on the Committee on Indian Affairs. I think I am reasonably informed as to the law and the facts of this case.

It is necessary to go a long way back to find the origin of this controversy. Some time in the year 1830, the Choctaw Indians then living in Mississippi entered into an agreement with the United States to move to the Indian Territory, and there take up their residence under the conditions provided by the treaty. In the course of time, as we all know, the United States determined to break up the tribal governments. They approached the tribes with that end in view, and by a variety of arguments finally induced them to agree to the proposed plan. One inducement that was offered to the Choctaws in the Indian Territory to become consenting parties to the arrangement to abrogate the tribal government, was that a portion of the lands then held in common should be allotted in severalty to the members of the tribe as ascertained by properly authenticated rolls. In addition it was provided that any fund that should belong to the tribes, or should arise from the sale of the unallotted lands of the Choctaw Indians, should be divided per capita among the Choctaws entitled thereto.

The Mississippi Choctaws never moved to the Indian Territory, but claim the right to participate in this division by virtue of the concluding sentence of what is known as the Dancing Rabbit treaty. This treaty was made in 1830. Permit me to call the attention of the committee to this sentence, because it presents a question of law which you are competent to pass on, and one which has been passed on a number of times. Its meaning seems to me to be clear beyond peradventure. This sentence is as follows:

> Persons who claim under this article shall not lose the privilege of a Choctaw citizen, and if they have removed, are not to be entitled to any portion of the Choctaw annuity.

When the Choctaws moved to the Indian Territory, there was a considerable portion of the tribe refused to go. Provision was made that these Choctaws desired to become citizens of the State of Mississippi, after giving certain notices within a prescribed period of six months, they could do so, and would be allotted 640 acres of land in that State. A portion of the Choctaws remaining in Mississippi something like 300, received this allotment, while the remainder received scrip under circumstances that I will recite a little later.

Now what was the main intent and purpose of this agreement between the Choctaw Nation and the United States? It was in order for the white man's civilization to develop in Mississippi without the embarrassment and retarding influences of a large Indian settlement in that State. The inducements offered to the Choctaws to go to the Indian Territory, were intended to make the change of location attractive to the members of the entire tribe. The United States was interested in effecting a wholesale removal. It will be noted that every Indian who refused to take advantage of the Government proposition was, to that extent, opposing and thwarting the policy of the United States.

The Indians who went to the Indian Territory underwent all the troubles and vexations of a pioneer life in that country and lived there for a long time under conditions that history tells us, were in many instances, far from agreeable. These were the Indians who carried out and conformed to the policy of the United States, and in the result when the time arrived for the breaking up of the tribal arrangement, it would seem to be a remarkable contention that the people who remained and continued to live in Mississippi, and who either received 640 acres of land or scrip in that State, should have the same right to participation in the property of the tribe in the Indian Territory, as the Indians who went to that distant locality, established their government, and maintained their tribal rolls.

The Mississippi Choctaws could not be put on the tribal rolls of the Indians in Indian Territory, unless they removed to that country, took up their residence and conformed to the tribal requirements. However all the Mississippi Choctaws who went to the Indian Territory prior to the closing of the rolls, took up their residence with the tribe, and established their blood kinship were duly admitted into the tribe and enrolled. I wish to call the attention of the committee to one compelling fact, and that is that the Choctaw Indians in the Indian Territory, as the record shows, made every possible effort to induce their brethren in Mississsippi to come across the Mississippi and live with them. They passed resolution after resolution to that effect. They invited them to come, they wanted them to come, and as I have stated all who did come, take up their residence with their blood brethren, were put upon the tribal rolls, and admitted to the same benefits in the division of the tribal property, as the descendants of those Indians who went out in 1830. There was a great deal of trouble, as I happen to know, and as every member of the Committee on Indian Affairs knows, with respect to the final make-up of the tribal rolls. There were many scandals in connection with the task, and difficulties that at times seemed to be almost insuperable. However after an infinity of trouble and controversy, the rolls were completed. About this time some of the Mississippi Choctaws who had never moved to the Indian Territory claimed that they had the right to participate in the allotment of the tribal property, and in the per capita distribution precisely upon the footing of the descendants of those who had gone to the Indian Territory and settled, and remained there. What is the foundation of this claim? They rest their claim on the concluding sentence of the section which I read, and which I will read again, because this is the very crux, the very storm center of this controversy. In this connection I desire to call attention to the fact that various tribunals have passed upo. this contention. I read again the concluding sentence of the section:

Persons who claim under this article shall not lose the privilege of a Choctaw citizen, but if they ever remove are not to be entitled to any portion of the Choctaw annuity.

The Mississippi Choctaws claim that under this provision they could stay at home in Mississsippi, and still have the same rights as the people who moved to the Indian Territory. In other words, to use a homely old illustration, they contend that they could run with the hare, and hold with the hounds. A Mississippi Choctaw presented this contention to the Dawes Commission which rejected it. An appeal was then taken to the district court of the United States. That court dismissed the appeal.

This is Jack Amos case. In that case the court held that a Choctaw who had remained in Mississippi, who had done homage to the Government of that State, and was a citizen of that State, was not entitled to participate in the per capita distribution of the proceeds of the sale of the unallotted lands or to have an allotment made to him. That decision stands unreversed to the present time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Does the gentleman desire to have two minutes more?

Mr. SAUNDERS. There are other matters in this connection that I could not hope to present in a couple of minutes. If there is no more time available than two minutes I might as well stop at this point. There are quite a number of points that as yet, I have been unable to present.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I can yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Very well.

In addition to the adverse ruling of the Dawes Commission, and of the district court, in the Jack Amos case, rejecting the contention that a Mississippi Choctaw was entitled to participate in the distribution of the tribal property, while remaining a citizen of Mississippi, there was another case, known as the Ikard case. This was a decision by Judge Townsend who held to the same effect as Judge Clayton. Then the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Lane, was called upon to determine from the law and the records in the Department of the Interior whether there was any merit in the contention that the nonresident Mississippi Choctaws could participate in the distribution of the property of the Choctaw Tribe in the Indian Territory.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Certainly.

Mr. HASTINGS. With reference to the Ikard case, I desire to suggest that that went up to the court of appeals of the Indian Territory and was affirmed by the full bench in a decision written by Judge Guild.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I thank the gentleman for the interruption. On January 8, 1915, the Secretary of the Interior, in response to an inquiry from the chairman of the Indian Committee, made a written response which I shall now read in part to the members of the committee. Mr. Lane said:

In view of the facts as presented by me, I am of opinion that no legislation should be enacted for the reopening of the rolls of the Choctaw Nation for the benefit of the Mississippi Choctaws.

Now if the concluding sentence of the section to which I have referred, gives a clear right of participation to the Mississippi Choctaws then we ought to reopen the rolls and admit them, because they have been denied solely and exclusively upon the ground that the section cited gave them no right to live in Mississippi, and participate in the distribution of the tribal funds. That section is before you to-day, and will be fully discussed by other speakers. It is perfectly competent for any Member to determine, for me to determine, for this committee to determine the meaning of this section and ascertain whether it bears out the contention of the Mississippi Choctaws. All the judicial and other rulings have been against this contention. I desire to call the attention of this committee to one other fact. The Mississippi Choctaws were parties to the Dancing Rabbit treaty, but they were not parties to the treaty made by their brethren in the Indian Territory known as the Atoka agreement. Under the Dancing Rabbit treaty they were entitled to take, if they felt so disposed, 640 acres of land in Mississippi. The reason that most of them did not get their 640 acres was that they were misled by a drunken official of the United States Government. Only a comparatively small proportion of the Mississippi Choctaws received land. To show you that the Federal Government recognized that the failure of these people to get the land to which they were entitled, was due to the misconduct of a representative of the Federal Government they took this matter up later, and issued scrip to a large proportion of the Mississippi Choctaws, to compensate them for the lands which they had lost. Permit me to call attention to this, because I have the list here, showing the amount of scrip that was issued. This communication from the Secretary of the Interior gives the names, and the number of the Mississippi Choctaws to whom lands were allotted, and of the others who received scrip. I have made a rapid calculation of the names and I think there are something like 3,700 of these scrippers. These Indians were badly treated, but the authors of their wrongs are not their brethren in Oklahoma. It would be grossly unjust to compensate them out of the property of the Oklahoma tribe. If there is an obligation for compensation here, and I do not deny that one may exist, that obligation rests upon the Federal Government. It was their agent, not an agent of the Choctaws who is the fons et origo, of all this trouble.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri). The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. SAUNDERS. There is a great deal more that might be said in this connection, but time forbids.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman from Mississippi use some of his time now?

Mr. HARRISON. I will yield three minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN].

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] admits that the United States Government recognized the fact that the Mississippi Choctaws have been unfairly dealt with. He admits that only a few of those Choctaws received what was coming to them under the Dancing Rabbit treaty. He further admits that a disreputable agent, an officer of the Federal Government, was the cause of these Mississippi Choctaw Indians not receiving what was due them. Then, if the Federal Government itself had an irresponsible agent who caused the ignorant and credulous Choctaw Indians of Mississippi to be imposed on in 1830, why is it not honest and right for the American Congress in 1916 to adopt this amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], which allows it to go to the Court of Claims and be adjudicated by a reputable court of this Nation? Why can not this money be withheld from the Indians of Oklahoma from distribution until this Court of Claims shall pass on this fact and say whether or not the rolls should be reopened and the Choctaw Indians and their descendants of the State of Mississippi come into their rights? I want to say to this House that these Indians were poor and ignorant. They did not understand the treaty. They did not understand what the gentleman from Virginia calls "scrip." A lot of land sharks in Oklahoma and elsewhere defrauded the Choctaw Indians out of everything that was intended to go to them. Only 143 Choctaw Indians received what was coming to them under the Dancing Rabbit treaty. Should this Congress now say that thousands of these Indians and their descendants should be barred from receiving what is due them when the American Government made a solemn treaty promising 640 acres of land to Indians who have not received a single dime? And yet the gentleman from Oklahoma, who represents the Indians of that section, seeks to deprive our citizenry of the State of Mississippi of what belongs to them under a solemn pledge of this great Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HARRISON. I will yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. QUIN. I thank the gentleman for giving me more time. In reference to the great case known as the Jack Amos case the gentleman from Oklahoma knows it is not a parallel case. He knows that it does not cover the provisions announced in the amendment offered here to-day, and in the name of honor how could any agent or Representative of the Government oppose a rehearing and fair adjudication of the real issue?

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman from Mississippi yield?

Mr. QUIN. I have not time to yield. I take all the little time I have to give to the poor Choctaws of Mississippi who have been robbed all these years. Now, the gentleman from Virginia states a wrong was committed by the American Government through its agent, and that great error and wrong and injustice is what this amendment proposes to correct. Was there ever a chancery court that would not let a palpable error, a great injustice, an irreparable wrong be corrected? Is it possible that this great Congress of America can not permit this to be corrected, will not permit its representatives to correct that which is admitted was a wrong to the great tribe of Indians in the State of Mississippi? Is it possible that this body will allow precedent and technicality to give more money to the rich Indians of Oklahoma by taking it out of the pockets of the poor Indians in Mississippi, who have not yet received one dime of what this Government owes to them? Mr. Chairman, the Choctaw Indians always stood with the white men of the South. They went out with old Andrew Jackson and waded through mud and blood up to their navels and fought for the American flag, and yet this Congress can not give them justice. [Applause.]

All of these millions of dollars in the Treasury awaiting for distribution among the Choctaw Indians of Oklahoma belongs to the Choctaws and their descendants in Mississippi just as much as to the Indians of Oklahoma. We know if you distribute this money per capita to the Oklahoma Choctaws the time will come when all of the money will be gone, and even if the Mississippi people are enrolled they could get nothing, on the plea that the money has all been distributed. Now is the time to protect us by adopting this amendment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. How does the time stand, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma has 32 minutes and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] has 34 minutes remaining.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON].

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] referred to the fact that the Indians in Oklahoma vote, and that this question was of considerable importance to the delegation from Oklahoma. Now, I can say in all candor that so far as I know, the Indians of Oklahoma do not vote in the State which I have the honor in part to represent, nor do the Indians from Mississippi vote there. I have made some careful study of this subject during the past few months—in fact, during the past two years. In my study of the question involved I approached the subject with a free and open mind. I have talked with the Members from Mississippi and with the Members from Oklahoma. I know the members of the delegation from Oklahoma and I also know the members of the delegation from Mississippi. I must admit, to be further candid, that my prejudice toward this question, if I have any at all, would be in favor of the contentions made for the Mississippi Choctaws. That prejudice, if any such existed, would arise out of my very high regard, respect, and personal friendly feeling for the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. I have hoped in the beginning of the study of this question that I might discover some sound law and facts that would warrant me in arraigning myself upon the same side of the question as that taken by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

A few days ago I asked the gentleman from Mississippi in the committee on what he based his claim. It is well understood that attorneys in making arguments for or against a proposition usually, when they have a poor case, keep as far away as possible from the law and the facts really governing the case. They make glittering general statements of facts and law so that it becomes necessary in order to get down to the real gist of the subject, to gradually cut away and illuminate the irrelevant facts and the unapplicable law. Then by this process of elimination there is usually found to stand out clear and distinct the one principal fact or condition on which the case hangs. I desired to get the ideas of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] as to what he really based his case on, and to accomplish this I asked him when he appeared a few days ago before the Committee on Indian Affairs this question:

"May I ask one question here? If your contention that the Mississippi Choctaws—the Choctaws of Mississippi who remained in Mississippi—have a right to the tribal property in Oklahoma is not sustained by the court, does your case fall?"

The gentleman answered the question squarely in these words: "Absolutely. I think it ought to be decided in some way." And my further question to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] was, "Your case entirely falls then?" And Mr. HARRISON's reply was, "That is my idea about it. There has never been a court, in my opinion, of competent authority which has passed upon this question. The highest authority which has passed upon it was Judge Clayton in the Territorial district court, a judge whose duties are about the same as those of a Federal judge."

And that is my idea from the study I have given the case; that the only claim the Mississippi Choctaws can have to this fund is the claim under the treaty of 1830. Section 3 of that treaty provides for the removal of the Mississippi Choctaws as a condition precedent to their obtaining the land in Oklahoma. Section 14 of the treaty provides certain grants and payments to the Choctaws who remained in Mississippi.

When the deed to the Oklahoma land was given to the Choctaw Nation by the Federal Government on March 3, 1842, it provided that if the Indians removed from the land the property would revert to the United States.

This deed, in part, ran in the following terms:

> That the United States of America, in consideration of the premises, and in execution of the agreement and stipulation in the aforesaid treaty, have given and granted, and by these presents do give and grant, unto the said Choctaw Nation the aforesaid "tract of country west of the Mississippi"; to have and to hold the same, with all the rights, privileges, immunities, and appurtenances of whatsoever nature thereunto belonging, as intended "to be conveyed" by the aforesaid article, "in fee simple to them and their descendants, to inure to them, while they shall exist as a nation and live on it" liable to no transfer or alienations except to the United States or with their consent.

In all the treaties from the Dancing Rabbit treaty of 1830, in all early legislation bearing on the question, it was strongly emphasized that a Mississippi Choctaw must remove to and reside in the Oklahoma country in order to be entitled to have a share in the lands and other property of the Choctaw Nation there.

From 1830 to 1892 the free, open, and unrestricted privilege was allowed any Mississippi Choctaw to remove to Oklahoma and to take up his residence there and to then have a full and equal share in the lands and other property of the Choctaw Nation in Oklahoma. Every court that has passed directly upon this matter, four different Secretaries of the Interior, several Commissioners of Indian Affairs, the majority membership of several different Committees on Indian Affairs, in fact, as far as I have read or have heard, every judicial authority, every departmental authority, and every committee that has considered the question has found and has held that under the treaty of 1830 it is made a condition precedent for any Mississippi Choctaw to have any right or claim to a share in the tribal property of the Choctaw Nation in Oklahoma he must first remove to and reside in Oklahoma.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. NORTON. I realize that I probably shall not be able to secure any more time, although I should like to continue for a little longer as I have in mind a few particular thoughts on this subject which I should like to state to the committee.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I would like to have the gentleman have more time, but we are limited to time, as you know.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VENABLE].

Mr. VENABLE. Mr. Chairman, I have recently come from a campaign in the fifth district of Mississippi, where a very large number of these Mississippi Choctaws live, and so I am thoroughly cognizant of their pitiable condition, the absolute want and privation in which they live and move and have their being.

Now, as I understand the proposition, it is to hold up the distribution of the tribal funds until such time as the Court of Claims shall adjudicate upon the question as to whether or not the Mississippi Choctaws in Mississippi are entitled to share in the distribution. It is rather a novel proposton to me that where there is any serious dispute as to a legal right and a vested legal right under a treaty, that gentlemen should refuse to have this legal right adjudicated upon.

I have heard the argument advanced that the reasons why they want it done, or one reason, was because that this matter has been in abeyance for a number of years and that the adjudication of the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws would take some further time. In other words, the argument when reduced to its last analysis is this, that possibly it may be thought an injustice will be done to the Mississippi Choctaws and a liability fixed upon the National Government by the distribution of these funds at this time; yet, since it will take some time for the adjudication, it is better to work an injustice and fix a liability upon the National Government than to take the time necessary for the adjudication of the rights of these people. As I understand it, under the Dancing Rabbit treaty a provision was inserted, the Indians refusing to remove until that was inserted, providing that they could stay in Mississippi under certain conditions, and providing that they should be given an allotment to certain lands in the State, and that was followed by this proviso:

Persons who come under this article shall not lose the privileges of a Choctaw citizen. But if they ever remove they are not entitled to any portion of the Choctaw annuity.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. VENABLE. If I understand it, a rule of construction that is well settled is that the mention of one thing is the exclusion of others. This article specifically provides that the persons who claim under this article shall not lose the privileges of a Choctaw citizen. Now, what would be the necessity and what would be the use of that provision, if, as a matter of fact, they did not remove they would lose the privileges of a Choctaw citizen?

Is not this a fair construction of that language that it means exactly what it says; that they retained, though they stayed in Mississippi, all the privileges of a Choctaw citizen, one of which was a right to share in the tribal funds?

Now, is that construction changed by the last sentence, "But if they ever remove, they are not entitled to any portion of the Choctaw annuity"? The Choctaw annuity is a separate and distinct fund, as I understand it, from these tribal funds that are sought to be distributed at this time. If they intended under this treaty to provide that the Choctaw Indian, if he did not remove, could not share in the distribution of the tribal funds and had no part or parcel or interest in those funds, why should the United States Government in this treaty specifically specify annuities?

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri). Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. VENABLE. I have but a very few minutes, and I regret I can not.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. VENABLE. In other words, if there was an evident intention—the mention of one thing being an exclusion of the other—if it was intended that they should forfeit all their rights, why mention specifically the annuity? Is it not a fair inference and a just inference and a righteous construction that when you say that if they ever afterwards removed they should not share in the annuity, you meant that they had an interest in the tribal funds which would not be lost even if they did not remove? In other words, a failure to remove then would only forfeit their interest in the annuity, and not in the special funds.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN] is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I can not, of course, in this brief allotment of time enter into any argument upon this proposition. There are no Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians within my congressional district, so that from a personal or political viewpoint I am not so deeply interested as are my colleagues from Oklahoma on the other side. I have, however, during the last Congress and during this Congress heard the discussions upon this subject. I must say that, so far as the distribution of these funds are concerned, the Mississippi Choctaws do not present either a legal claim or a claim founded upon right and justice.

I am interested in the State of Oklahoma and her people, and I feel that the time has come when the Congress of the United States should distribute these funds in accordance with the laws and treaties made with the Indians. The Republican Party is largely responsible for these treaties and for this work that has been going on in changing the Indian form of government to statehood. It has been largely our legislation. We have appointed these commissions; we have treated with these Indians; and while I believe that this great Government in these difficult and dangerous times ought to stand by our treaties with the nations of the world, I also believe that we should hold sacred the treaties that we have made with the Indians of the United States. To delay this matter, to postpone it, or to tie it up for further court decisions means only that we are not doing justice to these Indians, not doing justice to the State of Oklahoma, and not keeping the sacred treaties that we have made with the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians of Oklahoma. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMPSON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMPSON] is recognized.

CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW PAYMENT.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, accepting the remarks of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VENABLE] at their full value, I would answer by saying that, according to the report of the Indian Commissioner, there is $31,503,954.95 in money and property of the Choctaws and Chickasaws to be divided among those people, or $9,354,463.72 in money and $22,549,491.23 in property. So after making this payment you see there will be $24,503,553.94 in money and property left with which to pay these Mississippi Choctaws, if they are entitled to anything.

Mr. Chairman, the provision of the Indian appropriation bill reported by the committee having been stricken from the bill, the provision offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] to be inserted immediately after line 19, page 37, is as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to the enrolled members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians of Oklahoma entitled under existing law to share in the funds of said tribes, or to their lawful heirs, out of any moneys belonging to said tribes in the United States Treasury, or deposited in any bank or held by any official under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, not to exceed $300 per capita in the case of the Choctaws and $200 per capita in case of the Chickasaws, said payment to be made under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided, That in cases where such enrolled members or their heirs are Indians who, by reason of their degree of Indian blood belonging to the restricted class, the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, withhold such payments and use the same for the benefit of such restricted Indians: Provided further, That no part of the sum appropriated by this paragrah shall be paid to attorneys: Provided further, That the money paid to the enrolled members as provided herein shall be exempt from any lien for attorneys' fees or other debt contracted prior to the passage of this act: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to use not to exceed $8,000 out of the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribal funds for the expenses and the compensation of all necessary employees for the distribution of the said per capita payment.

This is the provision that the members of the Oklahoma delegation desire incorporated in this bill. The amendment to this provision offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] reads as follows:

Amend, after the word "attorneys" by inserting the following:

"Provided, however, That the provisions of this paragraph with respect to the Choctaw Tribe shall not be operative until the Court of Claims shall determine the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws who have been identified as Mississippi Choctaws by the Dawes Commission in its report of March 10, 1899, commonly known as the McKennan rolls, and also the Mississippi Choctaws who have been identified as Mississippi Choctaws by the Dawes Commission from March 10, 1899, to March 4, 1907, whose names do not appear on the final rolls of the Choctaw Tribe in Oklahoma."

This is no new contest. Ever since the fund accumulated in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior from the sale of Choctaw and Chickasaw lands and other tribal property has grown into a sufficient sum so that large lawyer fees could be paid out of it, a lot of unscrupulous lawyers have been busy trying to get a part of it for the Choctaws who remained in Mississippi and refused to move with the tribe in 1830 to the Indian Territory. These lawyers inaugurated the fight and carried on the fight until about 1911, at which time it had become agitated to such an extent in Mississippi, and the chance for securing a large fund to be distributed among the Mississippi Choctaws had become so bright, that public sentiment brought pressure to bear on the Mississippi Members in Congress, and since that time the fight has been continued by the Mississippi delegation. This is not intended as a reflection on the Mississippi delegation in Congress. They are perhaps doing no more than the delegation from any other State would do if there were a chance of securing the distribution of two and one-half million dollars to a part of the citizenship of their State. This is not a contest to enroll the Choctaws in Mississippi. The whole purpose of this fight is to take out of funds in the hands of the United States belonging to the Choctaws and Chickasaws in Oklahoma about two and one-half million dollars and pay it in money to the Choctaws in Mississippi. It is not an effort to open the rolls and permit the claimants who live in Oklahoma to come in and try their cases. This fight is not intended for their benefit.

Now, let us see if in law or good conscience the Choctaws in Mississippi, who voluntarily separated themselves from the Choctaw Tribe and have lived separate from that tribe for nearly 100 years, are entitled to participate with the membership of that tribe who left Mississippi, braved all the perils of an unknown wilderness, endured all the hardships of frontier settlers, and built up the civilization of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations to where it was prepared to become, and did become, a part of the splendid citizenship of Oklahoma.

REVIEW OF TREATIES.

In this connection a brief review of the treaties entered into between the Choctaws and the United States would not be out of place. The Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians have always been the friends of the white man. From the time Columbus discovered America until they were removed to the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations in Oklahoma, beginning in 1831, the membership of these two tribes acted as the advance guard of white civilization, interposing itself between the white frontier settlements and the warlike tribes that lived farther West. In 1820 the Choctaws owned and lived on about 15,000,000 acres of land in Mississippi. The white man wanted these lands. The United States, under pressure from the white man, prevailed upon the Choctaws to enter into a treaty whereby they conveyed to the United States about 4,000,000 acres of their land in Mississippi for 22,000,000 acres, which constitutes at the present time a large portion of the State of Oklahoma, but which was at that time a wild, unsettled land, except that it was occasionally occupied and hunted over by the fierce and warlike tribes that made their homes in this far western country. The 22,000,000 acres comprised not only the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations as known to Oklahomans, but it also comprised all that part of the present State of Oklahoma west of the counties of Grady, Stephens, and Jefferson and south of the Canadian River.

Under the provisions of this treaty the Choctaws retained 11,000,000 acres in Mississippi, and it was also provided that the heads of families residing on the 4,000,000 acres ceded to the United States should have the right to select 1 square mile of land, including their then residence. In 1825 the United States prevailed upon the Choctaws to enter into another treaty, by the provisions of which the United States acquired the additional 11,000,000 acres of land belonging to the Choctaws in Mississippi. It does not appear that the United States gave the Choctaws any consideration for this additional land, but the Choctaws did not remove to their reservation in Oklahoma. They continued to reside in Mississippi. In 1830 the United States prevailed upon the Choctaws to enter into still another agreement—commonly known as the Dancing Rabbit treaty. It was provided in this treaty that the Choctaws should be removed from their homes in Mississippi to the reservation in Oklahoma, but all those who did not choose to move were permitted to remain, and by informing the Indian agent of their intention, each head of a family was to receive 640 acres of land, each child residing with the family over 10 years of age was to receive 320 acres of land, and each child under 10 years of age was to receive 160 acres of land. There were about 19,000 members of the Choctaw Tribe at that time. Approximately 15,000 of them moved to their new homes in the West and 4,000 remained in Mississippi.

It seems that the United States had an agent in Mississippi at that time by the name of Ward, a drunken and irresponsible party, and though these 4,000 Choctaws who remained notified him of their intentions, he failed to keep a record of the number so notifying him with the exception of 143. It seems that the record of these 143 was kept by cutting notches in a stick and other equally crude methods. So the final result was that only 143 heads of families out of the 4,000 Indians who remained in Mississippi secured the land provided for them in the treaty. Every fair-thinking man will agree that a great outrage was perpetrated on those Choctaws who remained in Mississippi and were not permitted to receive a patent to their land as provided in the treaty of 1830. But who is to blame for that? Certainly not the Choctaws who went West. The United States was to blame because it had as its agent an incompetent and drunken man. The outrage was so apparent that Congress passed an act immediately—I believe it was in 1842—giving those Choctaws in Mississippi, who did not get their land, scrip which authorized them to take land in three or four adjoining States. One of the conditions of the grant of scrip was that before it could be used the Indians must move to the Choctaw Nation in the West. Three thousand eight hundred and eighty-five Indians received scrip under this act. The weak point in connection with this act was that it did not make the scrip nontransferable, and a lot of enterprising grafters, as usual, got hold of the Indians, took them to the Choctaw Nation West where they received their scrip and immediately took back to Mississippi such as wanted to return and purchased practically all of the scrip. So the Indians were cheated again. Certainly, the Oklahoma Choctaws ought not to have their moneys taken from them because the Mississippi Choctaws did not get their land and were chiseled out of their scrip.

In 1855 the United States leased from the Choctaws 11,000,000 acres of land lying south of the Canadian River and west of the ninety-eighth meridian—the western boundary of the old Chickasaw Nation—for the purpose of locating thereon the Kiowas and affiliated bands; $80,000 was paid for this lease. In 1866 the United States entered into another treaty with the Choctaws and Chickasaws, agreeing to pay them $300,000 additional for an absolute title to this leased district, but reserved the $300,000 and agreed to use it to remove the Choctaw and Chickasaw freedmen. As usual, the United States failed to comply with the provisions of this treaty, left the freedmen in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, and finally compelled the tribes to allot each of them 40 acres of land.

The United States, in all of the treaties with the Choctaws and Chickasaws, agreed to protect them from the encroachment of noncitizens, but this provision also it failed to keep and white noncitizens continued to move into the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations until 1896, when there were, perhaps, 10 noncitizens to 1 Indian living in the two nations. These noncitizens were without any kind of government, had no schools except such as they maintained by voluntary contributions. This condition brought about such agitation that in 1893 the United States created what is known as the Dawes Commission for the purposes expressed in the act, which provides:

> But said commissioners shall, however, have power to negotiate any and all such agreements as, in view of all the circumstances affecting the subject, shall be found requisite and suitable to such an arrangement of the rights and interest and affairs of such nations, tribes, bands, or Indians, or any of them, to enable the ultimate creation of a territory of the United States with a view to the admission of the same as a State in the Union.

The commission went to the Indian Territory and began its negotiations. A controversy arose as to who were members of the tribes. Some persons residing in and others outside of the Territory claimed to be citizens and their claim was denied by the tribes, so in 1896 Congress provided:

> That said commission is further authorized and directed to proceed at once to hear and determine the application of all persons who may apply to them for citizenship in any of said nations, and after such hearing they shall determine the right of such applicant to be so admitted and enrolled: Provided, however, That such application shall be made to such commissioners within three months after the passage of this act. The said commission shall decide all such applications within 90 days after the same shall be made.

The United States thereby took from the tribes the right to make their own rolls of citizenship and assumed the right to make the rolls for them. The roll was made, first, by the Dawes Commission and subsequently, on appeals from the commission, by the United States courts located in the Indian Territory. By act of May 31, 1900, specific provision was made for the enrollment of the Mississippi Choctaws. It was there enacted:

> Provided, That any Mississippi Choctaw duly identified as such by the United States Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes shall have the right, at any time prior to the approval of the final rolls of the Choctaws and Chickasaws by the Secretary of the Interior, to make settlement within the Choctaw-Chickasaw country, and on proof of the fact of bona fide settlement may be enrolled by the said United States commission and by the Secretary of the Interior as Choctaws entitled to allotment.

Congress again, by the act of July 1, 1902, section 41, provided for the enrollment of the Mississippi Choctaws. From 1830 to 1896—a period of 66 years—the Mississippi Choctaws had a right, under article 14 of the treaty of 1830, to remove from Mississippi to the Choctaw Nation, and something like 3,400 did remove and take up their residence in the Choctaw Nation. All who removed were allotted land in the Choctaw Nation. The Choctaw Tribe in Oklahoma did not in any way attempt to prevent their removal. On the contrary it did everything it could to get them to come West and reunite with the tribe. It admitted everyone who did move West and appropriated money out of the tribal treasury to assist some in moving West.

CARE EXERCISED TO PROTECT MISSISSIPPI CHOCTAWS.

From 1896, when the Government of the United States took away from the Choctaw Nation the right to make its own roll of citizens and assumed that duty, until March 4, 1907, when the rolls were finally closed, two acts were passed, as I have shown, providing for the identification and enrollment of the Mississippi Choctaws and their removal to the Choctaw Nation, and the United States appropriated many thousands of dollars and sent many agents to Mississippi to hunt up, identify, and remove the Choctaws still there to the Choctaw Nation. During this period 1,660 moved West, 420 of them at the expense of the United States, and every one of them received an allotment the same as native Choctaws and Chickasaws. Now, after all these opportunities extended them to voluntarily remove West, and all these efforts on the part of the Choctaw Nation and the United States to induce them to remove West, 1,252 yet remain in Mississippi.

THIS NOT AN EFFORT TO SECURE LAND FOR MISSISSIPPI CHOCTAWS.

If the lands of the Choctaws were not all allotted and if it were possible to remove these Mississippi Choctaws to the Choctaw Nation and allot them land, we would not be bothered with this contest. It is not an effort to secure land for them; it is an effort to take money that belongs to the Choctaws in Oklahoma and pay it to the Choctaws in Mississippi; an effort to turn them over a large sum of money in order that they may be grafted out of it again.

PROMISE BY UNITED STATES TO PAY TRIBAL FUNDS TO INDIANS.

In order to induce the Choctaws to abolish their governments, which were established immediately on their removal from Mississippi in 1830, to surrender their system of holding land in common and each individual Indian to take a certain amount in severalty, the United States, in various acts of Congress relating to these tribes and treaties made with them, promised and agreed that all funds and royalties arising by reason of the sale of unallotted lands and from timber and mineral rights should be paid out and distributed among the members of the tribe. It was provided in the act of June 28, 1898—

That whenever the members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes shall be required to pay taxes for the support of schools, then the fund arising from such royalties shall be disposed of for the equal benefit of their members (freedmen excepted) in such manner as the tribes may direct.

And, again, in the same act—

It is further agreed that all of the funds invested in lieu of investment, treaty funds, or otherwise, now held by the United States in trust for the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes, shall be capitalized within one year after the tribal governments shall cease, so far as the same may legally be done and be appropriated and paid, by some officer of the United States appointed for the purpose to the Choctaws and Chickasaws (freedmen excepted), per capita, to aid and assist them in improving their homes and lands.

And a like provision was carried in section 17 of the act of April 26, 1906.

FINAL CLOSING OF THE ROLLS.

Congress also provided in these various acts and treaties for the final closing of the rolls of these tribes. In the act of March 3, 1901, it was provided:

The rolls made by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, when approved by the Secretary of the Interior, shall be final, and the persons whose names are found thereon shall alone constitute the several tribes which they represent; and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to fix a time by agreement with said tribes or either of them for closing said rolls, but upon failure or refusal of said tribes or any of them to agree thereto, then the Secretary of the Interior shall fix a time for closing said rolls, after which no name shall be added thereto.

And, again, in the act of July 1, 1902, it was provided:

SEC. 28. The names of all persons living on the date of the final ratification of this agreement entitled to be enrolled as provided in section 27 hereof shall be placed upon the rolls made by said commission, and no child born thereafter to a citizen or freedman and no person intermarried thereafter to a citizen shall be entitled to enrollment or to participate in the distribution of the tribal property of the Choctaws and Chickasaws.

And, finally, Congress enacted that the rolls should be closed on March 4, 1907, and required the Secretary of the Interior to print the roll in a permanent record book and deposit one copy in the office of the recorder in each of the recording districts of the Indian Territory for inspection, and constituted the same evidence of citizenship in the tribes.

THE RIGHTS OF THE MISSISSIPPI CHOCTAWS.

I have called attention to these various treaty stipulations and acts to disclose the care and patience with which these rolls have been made and the efforts, both on the part of the Choctaw Nation and the United States, to have the Mississippi Choctaws reunite with their tribe and participate in the distribution of tribal property. Article 14 of the treaty of 1830, by virtue of which whatever right, legal, equitable, or otherwise, the Mississippi Choctaw claim is urged, reads as follows:

Each Choctaw head of a family being desirous to remain and become a citizen of the States shall be permitted to do so by signifying his intention to the agent within six months from the ratification of this treaty, and he or she shall thereupon be entitled to a reservation of one section of 640 acres of land, to be bounded by sectional lines of survey; in like manner shall be entitled to one-half that quantity for each unmarried child which is living with him over 10 years of age; and a quarter section to such child as may be under 10 years of age, to adjoin the location of the parent. If they reside upon said land intending to become citizens of the State for five years after the ratification of this treaty, in that case a grant in fee simple shall issue; said reservation shall include the present improvement of the head of the family or a portion of it. Persons who claim under this article shall not lose the privilege of a Choctaw citizen, but if they ever remove are not to be entitled to any portion of the Choctaw annuity.

It is under the last clause of this article of the treaty that their rights are urged. The clause reads:

Persons who claim under this article shall not lose the privilege of a Choctaw citizen, but if they ever remove are not to be entitled to any portion of the Choctaw annuity.

It is perfectly apparent that in order to participate in the distribution of the Choctaw tribal property under the provisions of this article of the treaty, the Mississippi Choctaws would have to remove to the Choctaw Nation and take up their residence with the tribe. Any other construction would be an outrage on common sense. To permit those Choctaws who remained in Mississippi and separated themselves from their tribal brethren to share equally with those Choctaws who left their homes, the graves of their ancestors, and civilization itself and moved west, surrounded by tribes of hostile Indians, and there built up a new civilization, would be nothing less than an outrage. It might as well be contended that if all the Choctaws had remained in Mississippi they would have been entitled to lands in the West. Such a construction would be in direct conflict with the provisions of article 2 of that treaty, which provides:

The United States, under a grant specially to be made by the President of the United States, shall cause to be conveyed to the Choctaw Nation a tract of country west of the Mississippi River in fee simple to them and their descendants, to inure to them while they shall exist as a nation and live on it.

And this same provision was carried into the patent executed by the President to the Choctaw people. They were required to live on the land. It can not be contended—and I do not understand that it is contended—that the Choctaws in Mississippi, under the provisions of that treaty and of the patent, have a right to participate in the allotment of the Choctaw lands. But the claim is made that they are Choctaw Indians. This is not denied; that they have been euchred out of their property back in Mississippi, and this is not denied; that they are poverty stricken, and this again is not denied. But these contentions do not constitute a just claim for a part of the proceeds of the Choctaw tribal property in the West which they had no part in acquiring and which would have been forfeited had all the Choctaws acted as they did.

CONDITIONS ON WHICH CHOCTAW INDIANS COULD PARTICIPATE IN DISTRIBUTION OF TRIBAL FUNDS.

In order to participate in the distribution of tribal property two conditions must be found to exist; First, the person so entitled must be a member of the tribe by blood, marriage, or adoption, and his name must appear on the tribal roll; second, he must reside with the tribe on its reservation.

It has always been agreed that an Indian, like a citizen of any other country or nation, could expatriate himself and lose his tribal status by abandoning the tribe, removing from the reservation, taking up his residence and becoming a citizen of some other State or country. If the facts in any case ever disclosed that such a situation existed, it certainly is disclosed in the case of the Mississippi Choctaws.

FUNDS SUFFICIENT LEFT TO PROTECT MISSISSIPPI CHOCTAWS AFTER MAKING THIS PAYMENT.

There are approximately 20,000 Choctaws and 7,000 Chickasaws who will receive a per capita payment under the provisions of this bill, and it will require about $6,000,000 to pay the Choctaws and $1,400,000 to pay the Chickasaws, approximately $7,500,000 to make the payment provided for. There were a few more than 300 Indians—Choctaws and Chickasaws—enrolled by the Sixty-third Congress, after all of the lands of the two tribes had been allotted. In lieu of the allotments that the acknowledged members received and which were estimated to be of the average value of $1,041 each, provision was made that those so enrolled should receive, in lieu of the allotment, money in double this amount, or $2,082 each. If it should be finally decided that $2,082 each should be paid to the 1,252 Choctaws in Mississippi, the amount required to make the payment would be $2,606,564.

In order to present this matter to the Committee on Indian Affairs, when this provision was under consideration by that committee, I called personally on the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and asked him to give me a detailed and itemized statement of the funds held by the United States to the credit of these two tribes jointly and severally, together with the estimated value of such property held by them, not yet disposed of. Under date of January 19, 1916, the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Mr. Meritt, submitted a letter, accompanied by a detailed statement giving the moneys on hand and the estimated value of the property yet to be disposed of. His letter to me and the statement accompanying the letter are as follows:

MY DEAR MR. THOMPSON: In compliance with your informal request concerning the tribal lands and funds of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, there are transmitted herewith a statement showing the tribal funds in the United States Treasury and in banks in Oklahoma to the credit of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, and a statement showing the estimated value of the unsold Choctaw and Chickasaw tribal land and other tribal properties.

It appears from said statements that the total funds to the credit of the Chickasaw Nation is $1,922,110.48 and that the total funds to the credit of the Choctaw Nation is $7,432,353.24, making the aggregate fund of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations $9,354,463.72.

It appears from the report of the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes that the deferred payments on the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribal lands heretofore sold approximate $6,000,000.

The total estimated value of the unsold land and other property of said nation approximates $16,149,491.23. Thus the total funds and other property of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations approximate $31,503,954.95.

Very truly, yours, E. B. MERITT,
Assistant Commissioner.

After deducting the $7,500,000 necessary to make the per capita payment provided for in this bill there will yet remain in the hands of the United States moneys and property to the amount of $24,003,954.95 out of which the $2,606,564 gratuity could be paid to the Choctaws in Mississippi if this or any subsequent Congress ever sees fit to perpetrate on the Choctaws and Chickasaws of Oklahoma such an outrage.

Mr. Chairman, while it is admitted that Congress has the power to take this amount of money from the Oklahoma Choctaws and give it to the Choctaws in Mississippi, it is submitted that it has no right to do so, and if it is done it will be another blot on the treatment of a helpless and dependent people by the Government such as it has not been guilty of toward any other race or people. Might never makes right, and I have an abiding faith that in the end justice will triumph.

Mr. Chairman, I submit in conclusion that a great injustice is being done the Choctaws and Chickasaws by withholding this payment. Oklahoma is a new State. Its people are made up largely of the pioneer class—poor, but brave and honest. For this reason money is scarce and the bank deposits are small. Being a new State, and just beginning its marvelous development, and the demand for money being keen, interest rates are high; so high, in fact, that if they were mentioned, the Members of this House from the North and East would be startled. It is not fair; it is not just; it is not right to hold $7,500,000 of Choctaw money and $2,000,000 of Chickasaw money in the Treasury of the United States and pay the Indians from 2 to 4 per cent interest on it, while these same Indians are compelled to borrow money at a rate of interest from five to ten times those rates. Congress can not perform a greater act to a needy, helpless, and dependent people than by providing for this per capita payment.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] how many speeches remain to be made on his side?

Mr. HARRISON. Three speeches on our side. One of our speakers, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER], has gone out, but will return soon.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I would like the gentleman to dispose of one of his speeches, since we have the close anyway.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, if there is no further debate, let us have a vote.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Does the gentleman from Mississippi not desire to debate it any further?

Mr. HARRISON. No; I ask the gentleman to use some of his time.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no further discussion, the question will be put.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. How does the time stand, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma has 25 minutes, and the gentleman from Mississippi has 29 minutes.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I think the gentleman from Mississippi, in view of the fact that he is going to have three more speeches, should use some of his time now. He has more time than we have, and we have the closing.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN] makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will withdraw that point.

The CHAIRMAN (after counting). One hundred and seven Members are present—a quorum. If there is no further discussion upon this amendment——

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. In that case, Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote on the question.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] a few moments ago, in presenting this matter, said that the Indians in Mississippi had received each 640 acres of land and that they had received scrip.

Mr. SAUNDERS. No; will the gentleman pardon me? I said some of them had received land, and those that had not received land had received scrip.

Mr. HARRISON. That statement very clearly illustrates the misinformation that gentlemen who oppose my amendment have on this question. The facts about that matter are these: When the treaty of 1830 was signed, containing the fourteenth article, giving the Mississippi Indians the right to remain in Mississippi and take up these allotments, the Government sent a man by the name of Ward down there supposedly for the purpose of allowing those who desired to avail themselves of the fourteenth article to do so; but, mind you, only 143 of them received patents to this land, whereas the facts show, and all the gentlemen who have investigated this matter will concede it to be true, because the facts are uncontradicted on the proposition, that there were hundreds of them who went to Ward and tried to make application for allotment under article 14 of the treaty who failed to do so. Why, sirs, the facts show that Ward would get drunk, would keep no records, was a disreputable individual, destroyed what applications he did take, and at times even made shaving paper out of the applications. His actions were inexcusable and cost hundreds of Mississippi Choctaws their allotments under this article. No; the gentleman is wrong; only 143 actually received their patents.

Mr. NORTON rose.

Mr. HARRISON. I can not yield to the gentleman. I am sorry I have not the time. Talking about the scrip, that scrip was issued on this condition, that one half of it was to be given to the Mississippi Indian in Mississippi before he left for the Indian Territory and the other half to be delivered to him when he got to the Territory. Therefore the Indians who did receive any scrip went to Oklahoma and are now a part of the tribe there. Consequently none of the Indians in Mississippi have received the scrip, unless it were some wandering fellow who came back because the attorneys of the tribe drove him back; and later on I will show this committee where and how they did drive them back.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman used 2 minutes of his 29.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. How does the time stand now, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi has 27 minutes and the gentleman from Oklahoma 25 minutes.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentleman from Mississippi still has more time than we have. Will the gentleman use some more of his time?

Mr. HARRISON. There is no one in the Hall at this moment to whom I can yield.

The CHAIRMAN. If no further debate is desired, the question is on the amendment.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, of course if the gentleman from Mississippi does not care to proceed any further at this time I am ready to take a vote.

Mr. HARRISON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER], who I see has just come into the Hall.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, unfortunately I have been temporarily absent from the Chamber during the discussion which has just occurred, and therefore am not advised as to what has already been stated. Therefore I am somewhat in danger of making a possible repetition of arguments that have been presented already.

The subject of the Mississippi Choctaws is one to which, as the Members of the House know, I have given a good deal of study and personal attention during a period of three or four years. It is one of the largest and most important Indian questions that exists in the country. To my mind it is one that should no longer be postponed to some future day, or put off to some indefinite time, but should be seized hold of by Congress and disposed of for all time.

After the discussions and debates that have occurred in this Chamber during the last three consecutive years, I think there can exist in no man's mind the slightest doubt but that the Indians known and described as the Mississippi Choctaws suffered a very serious and great injustice at the hands of the United States Government on account of the action of the duly accredited agent of the United States Government. The wrongs that were then committed have never yet been repaired.

I do not share the feeling expressed by some who discussed this matter before the committee when I was a member of it, that great blame rests upon the Choctaws now resident in Oklahoma. They have some obligations in connection with this matter, which obligations they have always hitherto recognized, even to the extent of inviting their brethren remaining in Mississippi and unprovided for to journey to the Eden-like land of what is now Oklahoma, and share with them the property in that region which became theirs. Many of them did not go because they could not go. Some of the provisions in bills that I have no doubt have been cited here already contemplate that the Indians in Mississippi shall journey over to Oklahoma, become members of the tribe in Oklahoma and share in the property of the whole tribe there; but no provision was made for their migration over, excepting on one occasion, when the sum of $20,000 was appropriated, which was totally insignificant for the purpose. That, however, was not the fault of the Choctaws in Oklahoma. I do not think that I have ever yet formulated into words the exact conclusion which I myself have reached on this question. I have hesitated about expressing it, because of the natural feeling that I am far from certain and convinced that I am right, although I feel in my own mind that I am right.

The main wrong was committed by the United States Government. The wrong when committed should be righted by the wrongdoer. After going over the records of all the years I can not in my own mind find where the Choctaws in Oklahoma have been responsible for the wrong excepting in one instance, and that instance was when an action was brought in the name of the Choctaws resident in Oklahoma against the Government of the United States, and a recovery had for the wrongs that were admittedly done to the Choctaws in Mississippi, and the money that was recovered was paid, not to the Choctaws in Mississippi but to the Choctaws in Oklahoma. It is not, perhaps, quite fair to say that it was paid and went to the tribe of Choctaws in Oklahoma. As a matter of fact, a court was established, which court picked out the beneficiaries to receive the amount appropriated to pay the judgment, and as anybody can ascertain who looks at the record, there probably was a miscarriage of a large part of the fund.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I have only a moment.

Mr. NORTON. Was any of that money paid to the Mississippi Choctaws?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Some of it was paid to Mississippi Choctaws then in Oklahoma, but, as far as I could get information from the Indian Office, or from any other source, none of it was paid to an Indian resident in Mississippi.

I am not in favor of opening up the rolls of the Five Civilized Tribes. Some people have thought that I have been in favor of that because of the report which I wrote and which was adopted by the subcommittee. I do not think any member of that subcommittee that joined me in the report was in favor of opening up the rolls of the Five Civilized Tribes. We simply recognized that a wrong had been done these Indians, and that it ought to be righted. The main wrongdoer is the United States Government. As partial wrongdoers, the Choctaws of Oklahoma ought to assume their part of the burden and make it good.

Not all those who claim to be Mississippi Choctaws are such, and those who are not Mississippi Choctaws should not enjoy any of the benefits of any remedial legislation. There are something like 22,000 to 28,000 who claim that they have a right to share in any beneficial legislation that may be enacted. I do not believe there are any such number as that. In fact, I doubt if there is a number greater than 2,000. It may be less than that. I know there is a roll in the Indian Office to-day, that was prepared under the direction of the Dawes Commission, to ascertain who were the full-blood Mississippi Choctaws entitled to share as such in any distribution of property or wealth that may be made, and the number on that roll is about 1,900.

So I have believed, and I firmly now believe, that this Congress at this session or some other session should make up its mind to dispose of the Mississippi Choctaw matter once and for all. They thought they had disposed of it in 1858 when they authorized the suit to which I have already called attention, but by reason of the lack of familiarity, I am willing to say on the part of Congress, with conditions in the Southwest—because at that time conditions were little known in the Indian country—there was a substantial miscarriage of justice. Therefore it seems to me that we should ascertain who are full-blood Mississippi Choctaws who were defrauded out of their rights guaranteed to them under the treaty of 1830.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I will.

Mr. NORTON. Does the gentleman take this position—that the full-blood Choctaws who resided in Mississippi who have failed to remove to Oklahoma are, under the treaties, entitled to a share equal with the Choctaws in Oklahoma in the property and funds of the Oklahoma Choctaws?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I do not believe any such thing. There are some who maintain that, but I do not. I do not think the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] for a moment suggests that the Choctaw Indians in Mississippi are entitled to all the rights that have been given to the Choctaws in Oklahoma to share equally in their property. If he did, he would have to have them all allotted, and some other things.

Mr. NORTON. That is the position I think the gentleman from Mississippi takes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I did not know that he took that position, but I would not join him in that. There are Indians in Mississippi, some in Louisiana, some in Texas belonging to the original parent band of Choctaws who elected under the treaty of 1830 to remain where their ancestors had always lived, an election which was given to them by the terms of the treaty; and without that election the treaty never would have been made. They elected to remain, but by the treatment they received at the hands of the Government agents they were prevented from securing lands guaranteed by the treaty. Therefore, that being the basis of wrong, I think Congress should take proper steps to right it, and I do not think it would run into any large sum of money.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, we will use the balance of the time on this side in one speech.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] such time as he may want.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I shall vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], although I do not think that it offers an ideal solution of the problem. He can not offer an ideal solution of the problem under the rules of the House at this time, but has offered an amendment which is a limitation on the appropriation made, because that is the only amendment he can offer.

What is the situation? We have a large fund in the Treasury belonging to these Choctaw Indians. They have considerable property in addition, which sooner or later will be sold. The Oklahoma Indians claim all of the money and the property, and the Choctaw Indians of Mississippi claim that they are entitled to participate in the funds. There are a great many old claims floating around this House based upon old Indian treaties, and every little while we pay out a large sum of money upon one of these old claims. Usually we pay it out of the General Treasury because there are no funds left over which the dispute arises.

What will we do here? What we ought to do, as it seems to me, is to pay the Oklahoma Choctaws the amount of money they are now asking for, and at the same time refer the claims of the Mississippi Choctaws to the Court of Claims. Then if the Court of Claims should find that the Mississippi Choctaws were entitled to a portion of the fund which the Oklahoma Choctaws claim, which still remains, or a part of it in the Treasury, together with other property, the Mississippi Choctaws in the end would receive their share out of the funds of the Indians. But if we refuse to refer these claims to the Court of Claims, in the end this is what will happen: It is perfectly plain to an old legislator. As soon as the Oklahoma Choctaws have received all the funds which the Government has belonging to the Indians, both sides will then join in a demand to right the wrong which my friend from Minnesota just referred to and to pay the claims to the Mississippi Choctaws out of the General Treasury, because there will be no Indian money left out of which it could be paid.

If it were a private individual in a case like this he would file a bill of interpleader, saying he had the money claimed by two sets of people, and he would let them settle up in the court to which it belonged. But the gentleman from Oklahoma now refuses at this time to agree to the proposition to let the claim of the Mississippi Choctaws be passed upon by the courts. Personally, with what little information I have absorbed upon this subject through a series of years that it has been up, I do not think the claims of the Mississippi Choctaws are good. [Applause.] I think the Court of Claims will find against them, but I am quite certain that after the money is all gone it never will be referred to the Court of Claims, but we will then be told how dreadfully these Indians have been treated by the General Government and how we should recompense them out of the General Treasury.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. Does the gentleman know of any bill that has been introduced by any of the delegation from Mississippi to submit this matter to the Court of Claims?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I can not see that that is a pertinent question, with all due respect to the gentleman from North Dakota. I can not see what difference that makes. We are acting upon this subject now. The gentleman has not introduced a bill, although he is on the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I do not criticize him for that; but the only way we will ever get a solution of this proposition in the interest of the people of the United States, as distinguished from the Indians who are in dispute, is to force this into the Court of Claims, and the only thing we can do now which tends to bring that about is to agree to the Harrison amendment.

If this committee or this House will agree to the Harrison amendment, you can be sure that when this bill becomes a law it will provide two things: First, for the payment of the money they are now asking for to the Oklahoma Choctaws; and, second, a reference of the Mississippi Choctaw's claim to the Court of Claims, where it can easily be determined before they expect to get the balance of the money. That is the sensible thing to do. I do not know whether Congress or the House, in view of the frailty of us all, and the very active lobbying that has been going on on this claim both inside and outside of the halls of this House, can be influenced by anything that can be said here, or that anything that can be said will have any very great weight, but it seems to me that we ought to guard to some extent the Treasury of the United States, and before we have paid out all of the money determine whether the Mississippi Choctaws have a just claim. In my judgment the court will find that they have no claim, and if we can get a decision of the Court of Claims to that effect we will never have to pay their claim. If we do not get such a decision, in the end we will pay it out of the money belonging to our own constituents. [Applause.]

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] desire to use some time?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I understand the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] to state that there would be only one speech more and that that would be made by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I did say that there would be only one, but the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] suggested that I get the gentleman from Kansas to use five minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. If it is agreeable to the gentleman from Mississippi——

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I do not want to do that, because I expect it would not be quite agreeable to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection, although I do not like to have gentlemen say that there will be but one speech, with no intention of keeping the agreement.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, there will be only one speech, so far as I am concerned. I have spoken upon this subject so many times for so many years that I can easily refrain from discussing the matter at this time in violation of any agreement made on the floor.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the suggestion was made by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], and that was why I made it. There will be only one speech upon our side, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for nine minutes.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I did not expect to say anything more on this question, as I thought the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] might utilize the balance of the time. I agree with him thoroughly that if this money is now distributed among the Indians of Oklahoma, in the course of time the Government of the United States will have to respond to the Indians of Mississippi. In the closing argument that will be delivered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] in this discussion—and I have heard the speech so often that I know practically what he is going to say—I hope gentlemen of the committee will not be influenced by any picture which he may draw, to the prejudice of the Mississippi Choctaws, of some six negro convicts in Oklahoma who were used as witnesses in order to get some claimant upon the rolls of the tribe. I heard him make that argument before the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I think it is the argument of an amateurish lawyer before an ignorant jury. I know that you gentlemen of good judgment and sound reason will not allow such an argument as that to influence you if he should so far forget himself as to make it. If he does make it, remember that they live in Oklahoma, they are used by Oklahoma attorneys, and in behalf of Oklahoma claimants. It is not all of the claimants who are claiming rights for enrollment in the Choctaw Nation whom we desire to see enrolled. There are thousands of them who have no right to enrollment, but there are hundreds of full-blooded Choctaw Indians, of the same blood and kith and kin as the Choctaw Indians of Oklahoma, who to-day roam the wilds of Mississippi, fishing in the waters of the Tallahalla or hunting in the forests of the Okahay, who ought to be taken care of by this Congress.

In 1898, after the decision in the Jack Amos case, which was rendered by Judge Clayton, a little territorial judge in Indian Territory, and after the decision of the Dawes Commission that gentlemen have talked about had been rendered—both of them in 1896 and 1897—the Congress of the United States passed a law requesting the Dawes Commission to look into the status of these Mississippi Choctaw claimants and report back to Congress immediately. The Dawes Commission, notwithstanding the decision they had formally rendered, as well as the Clayton decision, among other things, said in their report:

It seems to the commission that the importance of a correct decision of this question both as to the Mississippi Choctaws and the Choctaw Nation justifies a provision for a judicial decision in a case provided for that purpose. They therefore suggest that in proper form jurisdiction may be given the Court of Claims to pass judicially upon this question in a suit brought for that purpose by either of the interested parties.

And acting on this report in part, Congress passed the Curtis Act of June 28, 1898, directing the Dawes Commission to go to Mississippi and identify the Mississippi Choctaws. There was another provision incorporated in this act, saying that no provisions of this act shall in any way affect the rights of the Mississippi Choctaw. Acting under the provisions of this law, Mr. McKinnon, one of the commissioners, went to Mississippi and identified about 2,500 Mississippi Choctaws. This roll excluded about 1,100 Mississippi Choctaws whose names are not now on the final rolls of the tribe.

They thought that they were there. They had as much right to be there as any Oklahoma Choctaw Indian. But they are not there. There has been no reason advanced why they should not be there. They are of the same kith and kin as these Indians in the district of my friend. They can not show any reason why they should not be enrolled. "Ah, but," they say, "they ought to have moved to Oklahoma and they have failed to do it." Let me tell you what the facts are in this matter. It is borne out in the brief that was presented by Senator OWEN when he was attorney for these Indians. He said that these full-blooded Choctaws of Mississippi went to Oklahoma; that in many instances the attorneys representing the tribe procured injunctions against them and prevented them from taking up their allotments. They could not stay out there under the circumstances and had to return to Mississippi, where they had friends, and for doing that my friend there, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN], knows that these attorneys, McMurray, Mansfield, and Cornish, under the contract they had with the Choctaw Nation, received a fee of $750,000, which was a fee based upon contingencies and the condition that the more they kept off the rolls the higher the fee was to be. That is the way they treated these poor Choctaws from Mississippi.

These gentlemen say that under the treaty they had to go West, but when they did go West they were met by some sharp attorney of the nation, who used all the weapons of the law to prevent them from being enrolled. And again, sirs, in 1903, after the McMurray Act of Congress was passed that restricted the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws, that limited their rights, while ostensibly being passed for their benefit, Congress said, "Well, we are going to try to get these Indians over to Oklahoma," and a provision was written into the law appropriating $20,000 to take these Mississippi Choctaws that had been identified over to Oklahoma. Do you know how much that $20,000 would do? Why, we appropriate hundreds of thousands of dollars in this very bill for carrying Indian children to the schools and back. That $20,000 only carried 263 of them from Mississippi to Oklahoma, and in doing it there was a deficit created of $1,000. That was the only money that Congress appropriated to carry these poor Indians over into Oklahoma. And, mind you, under the restricted law passed in 1902 that my friend will talk about, that restricts their rights, there were only 17 days' notice given to these Indians. Why, Mr. Chairman, they live in five counties, miles and miles apart; they live in huts and in valleys and in woodlands; they are far separated from one another; they can not read nor write; they are ignorant, and notices to them meant nothing. But it was impossible within the time of the notices—from July 27, the day they were posted, to August 14, when they were to be in Oklahoma—to get ready and depart. Then, too, the $20,000 could not have carried any more than did go, as $1,000 deficit was created in carrying the 263. Gentlemen, I submit to you that the Congress of the United States has never been fair with these Indians. The laws which have been passed by Congress have restricted their rights.

If under the treaties and laws they should have moved to Oklahoma, I submit to you that the Government of the United States has not appropriated the money to pay their transportation expenses, and I submit to you that the Choctaw Nation, through its attorneys, has neither dealt fairly, justly, or honestly with them. They got them there and then kept them, by injunctions and otherwise, from the rolls. These Mississippi Choctaws are good people. They are Indians. Do not be misled by men saying that they are half-breeds and negroes and all that. Why, I presume that upon the rolls of the Choctaw Tribe to-day they have men without a drop of Indian blood who will get their per capita payment if this provision should become a law. The people you ought to take care of, whom we ought to legislate in behalf of, are these full-blood Choctaw Indians, who have just as much right to enrollment as the Choctaws who left Mississippi and went to Oklahoma. And, mind you, too—I have only a minute of time remaining; I must be brief—in 1881 the Choctaws in Oklahoma sued the Government of the United States for wrongs committed against the Mississippi Choctaws back in Mississippi; and do you know that the Indians in the State of my friend [Mr. FERRIS] got a judgment of $8,000,000 against the Government of the United States for wrongs committed not against them but against the Indians of Mississippi, and there were $3,000,000, after all expenses were paid, which was distributed among the members of the Choctaw Tribe in Oklahoma? None of it went to the Indians in Mississippi, and I submit to you that they have never received anything from the Government, and it is time that something should be done for them. I appeal to you to help them. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma has 25 minutes remaining.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I apologize to you gentlemen to-day because Oklahoma has consumed so much of the time of House this year, last year, and the year before; but I must in fairness to myself, I must in fairness to my State, I must in fairness to almost half of all the Indians in the Republic who live in my State, say that this row is not of our choosing. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], able, genial, courageous, and warm-hearted, tells you one thing and tells you what he thinks you ought to do. The Oklahoma Representatives, with all the earnestness that we have, tell you that you should do another thing. Under such a state of facts, why would it not be the decent thing to do to see what the Federal court, to see what the Dawes Commission, to see what the Secretary of the Interior, to see what the Committee on Indian Affairs, headed by the chairman, JOHN STEPHENS, say, who really know something about it, who are really nonpartisan, who are really not affected in any way, and I shall proceed to tell you what they hold. If the Mississippi Choctaw Indians have any right, it is under the fourteenth article of the Dancing Rabbit treaty. There is an agreed statement of facts, as far as that one proposition is concerned.

Mr. CAMPBELL. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. FERRIS. Certainly.

Mr. CAMPBELL. May I call the attention of the gentleman from Oklahoma to the fact that this is a unanimous report from the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. FERRIS. It is. That is very true, and after a long hearing. And it was the opinion of the Indian Committee last year, and the year before, and the year before that, and each year for nine consecutive years.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I will.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask if in the Sixty-second Congress, a committee composed of Mr. MILLER, Judge RUSSELL, and Mr. SMITH of New York, disinterested persons, did not unanimously report in favor of the Mississippi Choctaws?

Mr. FERRIS. They did not. That was only a subcommittee, and the report referred to was turned down flatly by the full committee. So there can be no question about that.

Let me leave one word with you on the historical phase of the question. You are entitled to know it all. In 1820, 18,000 Choctaw Indians lived in Mississippi. All but 4,000 of them, under a treaty, moved west to Oklahoma, pursuant to a treaty stipulation, and did what the Government wanted them to do. Four thousand of them remained in Mississippi to receive, what? To receive what article 14 proceeded to give them, and that was 640 acres for every head of a family, 320 acres for every child over 10 years of age, and 160 acres for every child under 10 years of age. I open the book, gentlemen of the committee, and I show you the names, in Indian, of every one of the 4,000 that received their land or the land scrip that Congress gave them. They received it. There was no mythology about it. They received it, and if you get part No. 4 of the hearings before the Indian Committee for this year you will find that the Indian Office states that they got it; that they received it; and there is no question about it. Where did the Government err?

The Government allowed these fourteenth-article claimants who remained, at the end of five years, to have their restrictions removed, and they proceeded to sell and dissipate their lands, and are now "broke" Indians. The Oklahoma Choctaws are not to blame for this, and never were to blame. Of the 4,000 that remained, 143 families, embodying about 400 or 500 people, got the full amount of land under the 640-acre provision in the fourteenth article of the treaty of 1830. There are the names of those who got land scrip in lieu of land. Their names are all in the hearings. These names are from Indian Office files.

They are all available or I would insert them in the RECORD at length.

From 1830 to 1842 all but 700 journeyed to Oklahoma. Each and every one of them were promptly adopted and became full-fledged Oklahoma Choctaws. This thing happened 98 years ago. For 60 years—from 1830 to 1893—every Mississippi Choctaw was welcome to come to Oklahoma, and by removing to Oklahoma and enrolling became an Oklahoma Choctaw and received his full quota of the land and money in Oklahoma, notwithstanding he had already received his patrimony in Mississippi. The Oklahoma tribes passed resolutions beckoning them to come, and Congress appropriated $20,000 to bring them, from Mississippi to Oklahoma. Still they would not come—at least 700 of them would not. Then, what happened? I hope the committee will follow me. It means a great deal to my State; it means more to the Indians; it means Congress ought to do full justice to a people that they have been operating on themselves for nearly a hundred years. What did they do? They passed the Curtis Act, creating the Dawes Commission. The President appointed three eminent lawyers to go down there and do what? To make these tribal rolls. A Member of the House, the Hon. HENDERSON M. JACOWAY, of Arkansas, was the secretary of this Dawes Commission. From 1893 to 1907, a period of 14 years, these rolls were in the hands of the Government, and they were beckoning and trying to get the Mississippi Choctaw Indians to come there and enter on the Oklahoma rolls. They would not come; they did not come; and they will not come to-day. They are still in Mississippi.

What happened? In 1842 President Tyler issued a patent to these Indians. I have that provision here. Let me read it. These people have held a patent to their lands since 1842, a period of more than 70 years. They have held a patent from the Government of the United States, the Oklahoma Choctaws have, for three-quarters of a century, and still by an amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], that has the approval of no one but himself, bears the approval of no committee, of no Indian Commissioner, of no Secretary of the Interior, asks this House to do what? To do the revolutionary thing of turning the hands of Indian history back 100 years. Let us see what the patent says. Here is a clause in the patent issued in 1842 by President Tyler to these identical Oklahoma Choctaws:

That the United States of America, in consideration of the premises, and in execution of the agreement and stipulation in the aforesaid treaty, have given and granted, and by these presents do give and grant unto the said Choctaw Nation the aforesaid "tract of country west of the Mississippi"; to have and to hold the same, with all the rights, privileges, immunities, and appurtenances of whatsoever nature thereunto belonging, as intended "to be conveyed" by the aforesaid article, "in fee simple to them and their descendants, to inure to them, while they shall exist as a nation and live on it" liable to no transfer or alienations except to the United States or with their consent.

Mr. THOMPSON of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman permit just a question? I want to ask the gentleman if the Choctaws who went west had remained in Mississippi, like the Mississippi Choctaws, would there be any land out there for anybody?

Mr. FERRIS. Surely not; and, more than that, if they had moved away even after they established residence on the land they would have lost their title.

Still, in the face of all this, my able, genial, and delightful friend from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] would have you do for the people who disobeyed the treaty something he would not do for those who obeyed the treaty.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I can not yield. The gentleman has had four or five speeches, and I have only a short time.

He would have the people who do not live on the land to-day, who do not propose to ever live there, take this property away by a revolutionary and undigested amendment, indorsed by no one, bearing the favorable consideration of no department or committee How many can there be who are willing to work so much mischief and do so much injury to our Oklahoma wards, whose only crime was to do always what the Government desired.

But let me proceed a little further. I told you a few minutes ago that when a controversy comes in before this House busy Members can not run down all the details. The proponents of this claim contend that these people ought to be enrolled, but I beg of you to agree with us that neither in law, equity, or morals they should not be, and are not, entitled to be enrolled. The Federal court, Justice Clayton sitting, acted upon this identical question, and I present to you the decision of the court in the Jack Amos case. I have the decision right here, reported in One hundred and ninetieth United States, page 873.

But let me first give you the facts, as I will not have time to read the whole case. Jack Amos in 1896, before these rolls were closed, and 96 others, full-blood Choctaws, then residing in Mississippi, came before the Dawes Commission and said—what? They said that under the fourteenth article of the Dancing Rabbit treaty they were entitled to participate and be enrolled and still remain in Mississippi. They there contended exactly what the gentleman from Mississippi now contends. Their contention is identical. Now hear what the court says; hear what Judge Clayton, a Federal judge in the Federal court, appointed by the President, and not under local influence, not a Territorial court, says.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. What does the gentleman mean by a "Federal court"?

Mr. FERRIS. A regularly constituted Federal court, which by Congress was given final jurisdiction to pass upon these rolls.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit me, I wish to say that, as showing that he occupied that relationship to the Federal Government, an appeal was taken from his decision to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. FERRIS. Precisely. Now let me read to you what the court says. I read:

I am disposed to the opinion, however, and will so hold, that the descendants of the Mississippi Choctaws, by virtue of the fourteenth article of the treaty of 1830, are entitled to all of the rights of Choctaw citizenship, with all of the privileges and property rights incident thereto, provided they have renounced their allegiance to the sovereignty of Mississippi by moving into the Choctaw Nation in good faith to live upon their lands, renewing their allegiance to that nation, and putting themselves in an attitude whereby they will be able to share in the burdens of their government. The reason for this conclusion is, to my mind, made morally certain when it is remembered that ever since the treaty of 1830, now for the period of nearly 67 years, with the exception of the past 2 or 3 years, the Choctaw Nation, by its legislative enactments, and by its acts so long continued that by custom they have become crystallized into law, have universally admitted all who should remove to this country and rehabilitate them in all of the rights and privileges of citizenship enjoyed by themselves.

Now let me read the concluding paragraph. Let me read to you what he finds. Remember that this is the Federal court talking. This is not the gentleman from Mississippi. This is not the opinion of any Member of Congress from Oklahoma. This will not be a misleading statement; it will be a safe authority to follow.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Was this Judge Clayton a United States district judge or a Territorial district judge?

Mr. FERRIS. He was a United States district judge, appointed by the President for Indian Territory. He was also given final jurisdiction of these cases.

Mr. MANN. Appointed for life?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. He was appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. MANN. I am sure the gentleman is in error.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, if my colleague will yield to me for a moment, I will answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. FERRIS. Yes. I can not understand what difference it was whether for four years or for life he was a Federal judge, and he did decide this case.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Judge Clayton was appointed for four years. We had only an Indian Territory. We had only a Federal court. We had no State or district court.

Mr. MANN. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Oklahoma to the fact that this was before Oklahoma was admitted to statehood, and consequently it must have been a Territorial court. That judge was not a United States Federal district judge.

Mr. FERRIS. Congress gave him final jurisdiction. He was appointed by the President of the United States. He, of course, was assigned to a Territory, but that did not make him a Territorial court at all. Let me read what he helds. I hope the House will hear this. It is important enough. He says:

To permit men with, perchance, but a strain of Choctaw blood in their veins who 65 years ago broke away from their kindred and their nation and during that time, or the most of it, have been exercising the rights of citizenship and doing homage to the sovereignty of another nation, who have borne none of the burdens of this nation, and have become strangers to the people, to reach forth their hands from their distant and alien home and lay hold of a part of the public domain, the common property of the people, and appropriate it to their own use would be unjust and inequitable.

Now, listen. I read:

It is, therefore, the opinion of the court that absent Mississippi Choctaws are not entitled to be enrolled as citizens of the Choctaw Nation.

The action of the Dawes Commission is therefore affirmed, and a decree will be entered for the Choctaw Nation.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The gentleman says that decision was appealed from?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes. From that decision Jack Amos and his fellow Choctaws in Mississippi appealed to the Supreme Court. You will find it in One hundred and ninetieth United States. It was dismissed by the appellants and became a final judgment.

Mr. HARRISON. The gentleman does not intend to say that the Supreme Court settled the merits of the case?

Mr. FERRIS. I do not yield to the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. Chairman. He makes too many speeches and interrupts without permission too frequently. The Supreme Court was interrupted in its duty by the appellants dismissing their own case, which shows they, at least, were willing to abide the decision of the lower court.

Mr. DAVENPORT. It did settle the principle that Congress by legislation gave Judge Clayton of that court the right to pass upon it. It settled the contention that Congress had that right.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, it would take hours to present this case adequately, and I am trying my best to present it in 25 minutes.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman can probably shorten his speech a little bit by the answer which he can give to the question I will propound.

Mr. FERRIS. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. BUTLER. The question I wish to ask the gentleman is this: Has anything happened to change the minds of men on this question?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; two things. The Secretary of the Interior has again reported that these rolls should not be opened, and the Committee on Indian Affairs has made a unanimous report that they should not be opened; and there is no minority report, and there is no minority vote. [Applause.] If there ever was a case of res judicata by courts, by cabinets, by commissioners, by Congress, it is this one. Still it comes here. Still the gentleman from Mississippi will every year put on this vaudeville and take up the time of the House. After 60 years they asked that these rolls remain open to all that would come to Oklahoma. Fourteen years the Congress of the United States held these rolls open and they came not. Congress said to the Oklahoma Choctaws, "We will enroll your people if you will move here," but they refused to move. It has been tried in the courts, it has been tried before the Dawes Commission, it has been tried before three Secretaries of the Interior. President Taft wrote an open letter on this proposition, saying that these rolls should never be reopened. President Roosevelt, President Wilson, Secretary Fisher, Secretary Ballinger, Secretary Garfield, Secretary Lane, and four Indian Commissioners have all refused to agree with the contention of the gentleman. This Congress has voted upon it five or six times. Still the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] injects it in here again. Might we not in good humor, but in earnesteness, ask when will this fiasco end?

Again I apologize to the House for consuming so much time on Oklahoma matters, but this is distinctly not of our choosing. Our State was made the assembling point for all the Indians in the Republic. They were most all brought there together. These Oklahoma Indians are entitled to their peace. They are entitled to their own money that Congress and the Atoka agreement agreed to give them. Article 14 of the Atoka agreement said, We will pay you for your surplus land within a year after we collect it. The Curtis Act said, section 19, We will pay you your money as soon as we collect it, or within a year after it is collected. Last summer I went to a Blue and Gray reunion right over in the midst of these people, and I saw a once proud people, the Oklahoma Choctaws, reduced to chain harness and rags as they drove in to attend that reunion, and this while the Federal Government holds on to their millions and refuses to give them their own money. They have their allotments, but they have little or nothing in the way of houses. They have no teams to work with, they have no implements to work with. Still the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] comes in with his so-called limitation, and proposes to limit this payment until all the negroes and mixed breeds can have their case tried by the Court of Claims. Such a course is unjust. It is unfair. It will teach a proud people to hate their Government for broken and blasted faith.

How much time have I, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. FOSTER). The gentleman has five minutes.

Mr. FERRIS. There is a reason for all this noise, and a good one. Sometimes we can observe the reason for unreasonable requests, but how fortunate are we to-day. I hold in my hand the printed copy of the hearings before the Indian Committee for the House for this year. Here is the picture of Nelson Durant, a full-blood negro who has had service in the Oklahoma penitentiary, whose lapel number is 803. I exhibt to you the picture of another negro, Ben Grayson.

Mr. BUTLER. What is his number?

Mr. FERRIS. His lapel number is 1739 in the Oklahoma penitentiary. I hold in my hand the picture on another full-blood negro whose lapel number is 6087, and still another whose lapel number is 6069 in the Oklahoma penitentiary; still another one whose lapel number is 6422. In 45 of these enrollment cases where the evidence was taken in Muskogee this summer, that negro, Alec Nail, appeared 33 times as a witness to swear people onto the rolls who are no more Indians than I am an Indian. Another one, Webster Burton, appeared 20 times. W. M. James, 5 times. Let me read what the Government inspector says about this, on page 59 of the hearings in his report. I will show you a little later what is going on down in Mississippi as well as in Oklahoma. I will show you why there are so many people who want these rolls opened. Listen to this inspector:

I find that the affidavits filed in support of practically all of these Choctaw cases were made by the professional negro witnesses, Webster Burton, Alec Nail, and William James. These negroes followed no other occupation for months, and were in constant attendance in the Muskogee office of Mr. Ballinger, prepared at all times to make their thumb marks upon and swear to every affidavit prepared and put before them by Mr. Ballinger's associates in this office. These witnesses were paid from 50 cents to $2.50 each by every applicant for whom they made an affidavit, and exacted a promise of additional consideration from many. I obtained exhaustive statements from each of these negro witnesses, and I attach complete copies of such testimony.

The affidavits of these witnesses as they appear attached to the applications filed by Mr. Ballinger are relied upon to prove that the applicant is of Choctaw blood, purporting to show clearly the ancestry from which this blood was derived, identifying, by roll number, many alleged blood relatives who were enrolled as Choctaws by blood, and going into detail as to why such applicant had failed of enrollment by the Dawes Commission. With not one exception, every affidavit filed by Mr. Ballinger in support of the petitions of these so-called Choctaws by blood, purporting to have been executed by these witnesses, is false in its entirety. These negroes testify, in the first place, that they had not known one of the applicants before they met such applicant in Mr. Ballinger's office at the time they made the affidavits.

This is Mr. William L. Bowie, an inspector of the Indian Office, who is making this statement. He has no local interest, is doing his duty, is doing a great service. These cases are—made by the professional negro witnesses, Webster Burton, Alec Nail, and William James et al.

Alec Nail appeared in 33 out of 45 cases. William James was another convict. Let me just dissect this Government report and show what is going on down there:

These negroes followed no other occupation for months, and were in constant attendance in the Muskogee office of Mr. Ballinger, prepared at all times to make their thumb marks upon and swear to every affidavit prepared and put before them by Mr. Ballinger's associates in this office.

They can not read a word.

These witnesses were paid from 50 cents to $2.50 each by every applicant for whom they made an affidavit, and exacted a promise of additional consideration from many. I obtained exhaustive statements from each of these negro witnesses, and I attach complete copies of such testimony.

It is all in here.

The affidavits of these witnesses, as they appear attached to the applications filed by Mr. Ballinger, are relied upon to prove that the applicant is of Choctaw blood, purporting to show clearly the ancestry from which this blood was derived, identifying, by roll number, many alleged blood relatives who were enrolled as Choctaws by blood—

What would they do in the Court of Claims with four ex-convicts appearing to swear men's property away for 50 cents? Listen to this:

and going into details as to why such applicant had failed of enrollment by the Dawes Commission.

Let us see what the reply is. Here is Mr. Bowie, continuing:

With not one exception, every affidavit filed by Mr. Ballinger in support of the petitions of these so-called Choctaws by blood, purporting to have been executed by witnesses, is false in its entirety.

They impeach themselves in the first question in every instance.

These negroes testify, in the first place, that they had not known one of the applicants before they met such applicant in Mr. Ballinger's office at the time they made the affidavits.

I wish I could read the rest of it or I wish the House could read what we heard before the Indian Committee.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Does the gentleman know what will be the fees of this firm of which Mr. Ballinger is a member?

Mr. FERRIS. I have the statement right here. It is approximately over $4,000,000. I will print a statement of their fee so the House can know what a diabolical scheme this is. This whole matter ought to be presented to the Federal grand jury, and the Indian Office ought to do it.

Lee's proposed sale of 40 per cent of his individual shares, or fee, is figured as follows:

2,051	persons.
$3,000	Value of individual share.
$6,153,000	Total value of shares of 2,051 persons.
40	per cent basis of fee.
$2,461,200	Estimated fee.
487	persons.
$3,000	Value of share.
$1,461,000	Total value of shares of 487 persons.
12½	per cent basis of fee of Ballinger & Lee.
$183,023	Total estimated fee of Ballinger & Lee for 487 persons.
1,200	persons.
$500	Ballinger & Lee's fee per person.
$600,000	Total estimated fee for 1,200 persons.
$600,000
$3,244,223	Total of Ballinger & Lee's fee.
Less $150,000	Estimated expense of collection.
$3,094,223
45	per cent with which assistance was contracted.
$1,392,400	Estimated cost of assistance.
$3,094,223	Net fee.
Less $1,392,400	Cost of assistance.
2) $1,701,823	Net fee to Ballinger & Lee.
$850,911	Net fee to Lee.
40	per cent proposed assignment.
$340,364	Fee which will go to owners of the 40 per cent to be sold.

Mr. BUTLER. Four million dollars?

Mr. FERRIS. It is estimated at that. I said I would tell you what was going on in Oklahoma. If I had the time I would tell you what was going on in Mississippi.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Some gentlemen are asking who Mr. Ballinger is.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Ballinger is a lawyer here in Washington, who went down to Oklahoma and picked up two fellows who practice law along the same lines that he does, and they are constantly at this task. They work at it in season and out. They are the ones who back-fire Congressmen and who put on this program. Another firm goes down to Mississippi and employs three negroes, one of whom has since gone to the penitentiary, to do the same thing in Mississippi. Let me exonerate the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] before my time is gone. I know he does not stand for this; but if he keeps on pulling in the same direction much longer, he will be like the Irishman who yoked himself up with a calf, and when the calf began to run away somebody asked him where he was going, and he said darned if he knew, but they could ask the calf; and if this warm-hearted, faithful, brilliant Representative from Mississippi does not stop traveling in the same direction with these perjured negroes, who will perjure themselves for $2.50, somebody will ask him where he is going, and he will not be able to answer the question. This proceeding has gone on long enough. It is the duty of the House to stamp it out once and for all. The vote should be so decisive that we will not be troubled with this claim every year. I thank the House for their attention.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HARRISON) there were 37 ayes and 117 noes.

So the amendment to the amendment was lost

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer another amendment to the amendment. I move to strike out the figures "300" and insert the figures "200."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by striking out the figures "300" and inserting the figures "200."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was lost.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to offer this amendment at the end of the paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the amendment just adopted:

"Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to use not to exceed $8,000 out of the Chickasaw and Choctaw tribal fund for the expenses and compensation of all the United States employees for the distribution of the said per capita payments."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I reserve a point of order to that.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will not the gentleman reserve it so that I can make a statement in regard to it?

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asked unanimous consent, and I objected.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no more debate on the proposition.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I offer it as a separate paragraph.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman asked unanimous consent, and I entered my objection.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Oklahoma did not have to ask unanimous consent.

Mr. MADDEN. But he did. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on this amendment. The Chair thinks that it is entirely new legislation, and sustains the point of order.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last proviso of the amendment that was adopted and add the following.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has already adopted that, and it is not in order to strike it out.

Mr. NORTON. That was the understanding, that we should perfect this by adopting this proviso. I ask unanimous consent that I may offer this proviso.

Mr. MANN. It is still in order to add something.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman's first offer was to strike something out of a provision that had already been adopted.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to add this provision to the amendment already adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the amendment the following:

"Provided further, That the money paid to the enrolled members as provided herein shall be exempt from any lien for attorneys' fees or other debts contracted prior to the passage of this act."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think that amendment should be adopted, for it is for the protection of the Indians.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For salaries and expenses of such attorneys and other employees as the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, deem necessary in probate matters affecting allottees or their heirs in the Five Civilized Tribes and in the several tribes of the Quapaw Agency, and for the costs and other necessary expenses incident to suits instituted or conducted by such attorneys, $85,000.

Mr. HASTINGS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to the last paragraph and reoffer my amendment. I have explained it to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] who made the objection, and I think he sees clearly that it ought to be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to return to the previous paragraph for the purpose of offering an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the last paragraph the following:

"Provided further, That the Secretary is hereby authorized to use not to exceed $8,000 out of the Chickasaw and Choctaw tribal fund for the expense and compensation of all United States employees for the distribution of the said per capita payment."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I object. But let me ask the gentleman from Oklahoma, does it come out of the tribal fund?

Mr. HAYDEN. It comes out of the tribal fund.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then I do not object.

Mr. KONOP. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate on this paragraph has been closed.

Mr. KONOP. I ask unanimous consent that I may ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma a question. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KONOP. I would like to ask whether or not there are not Government agents down there that could distribute the money without further expense?

Mr. HASTINGS. I think that is true, but this is likely to run through 8 or 10 months, and there would only be a few persons placed upon this job, whereas if a part of their own fund is used to help distribute this money more quickly, because they need it badly, and need it now, they would be glad to have part of their fund so used. Then a great number of clerks could be placed on this so that the distribution could be made much more speedily and expeditiously.

Mr. HARRISON. What has been the practice heretofore when per capita payments are made relative to the distribution?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS] will permit me to answer that, I will say that it has been done both ways. Up until about 1908 the expenses for per capita payments were taken out of the tribal funds, and then the Comptroller of the Currency ruled that that could not be done. Since that time the expenses have been met from the Federal Treasury, as they will be met in this case, and there is not a particle of doubt that some new men will be put upon the work to do this, and it will take extra expense.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS]?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the support, continuance, and maintenance of the Cherokee Orphan Training School, near Tahlequah, Okla., for the orphan Indian children of the Five Civilized Tribes belonging to the restricted class, to be conducted as an industrial school under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, including repairs and improvements, $40,000: Provided, That the unexpended balance of $7,500 appropriated by the act of August 1, 1914, is hereby reappropriated for the purchase of additional land not to exceed 60 acres.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order. In the great confusion in the Hall a moment ago I did not ask a question about the preceding paragraph, which I would like to ask at this time. Is this $85,000 which we appropriate for salaries and expenses of attorneys in connection with probate matters reimbursable to the Government?

Mr. HASTINGS. No; the $85,000 is not reimbursable to the Government.

Mr. MANN. Do I understand, then, that we have just voted to pay out about $7,000,000 to a portion of these Indians and that they have large sums of money left to their credit in the Treasury, besides a very large amount of land, but that when we do anything for them we have to pay it out of the General Treasury?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, if my colleague will permit me to answer that, I will say that under the agreements of 1898 and 1902 it is provided that certain tribal funds shall be used for some purposes and for no others. Those two agreements provide that the tribes shall pay for their schools, providing the amount does not exceed the amount used in the year previous——

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman and I are talking about different matters. I am talking about the matter in respect to the probate attorneys.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. No; my remarks are applicable. We are trying to comply with the agreements with the Choctaws and Chickasaws and other of the Five Civilized Tribes in making up this bill, so far as Oklahoma is concerned. The agreement provides that all that money except the money used for schools shall be distributed per capita among the Indians. That was an agreement made between the United States and the Indians, was adopted by the Congress, and was approved by the vote of the Choctaw and Chickasaw people.

Mr. MANN. Does that agreement require the Government of the United States to pay for probate proceedings out of the General Treasury?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. No.

Mr. MANN. Is there any reason why we should pay it out of the Federal Treasury when it is for the Indians and not reimbursable? I understand that we do a lot of probate work down there, but that some of it is reimbursed to the Government when the estates are settled?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. That is true.

Mr. MANN. Is that true of this $85,000?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. It is not.

Mr. MANN. Ought it not to be true?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I think it might be reimbursed from the estate that is settled, and I am glad the gentleman called attention to that. I think a provision might be inserted to that effect, because that is the same way we deal with every other tribe, except the Five Civilized Tribes, under the Burke Act.

Mr. MANN. It seems to me that if we do that work—and it is probably done more cheaply by our agent than by any one else—it is proper that the estates should pay the money for it.

Mr. HASTINGS. There are some of the estates that have nothing out of which to reimburse.

Mr. MANN. Then they would not reimburse.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. If there is an estate to be settled by the court, there would probably be something with which to reimburse the cost.

Mr. MANN. I do not object to the item.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The Burke Act provides that from ten to twenty dollars, if I remember it correctly, shall be taken out of the settlements of each probate matter, out of the funds after the settlement has been made, for the settlement of the matter by the United States Government; but the Burke Act does not apply to the Five Civilized Tribes.

Mr. MANN. Ten or fifteen dollars, or something of that sort.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I think that ought to be done.

Mr. MANN. In reference to this matter which is under consideration, the orphan training school at Tallequah, that is to be made into an industrial school?

Mr. HASTINGS. I will say to the gentleman that that is the purpose of it. Congress two years ago appropriated $8,000 for the purpose of buying an additional 80 acres of land. Out of that $8,000, $500 was used. Twenty acres of land were purchased. There is a tract of land consisting of 20 acres which it is desired to use the remainder of this money unexpended of the appropriation of two years ago to purchase.

Mr. MANN. How much land have the Cherokees left down there?

Mr. HASTINGS. None. Every foot of it has been distributed.

Mr. MANN. I thought they had some coal and oil lands?

Mr. HASTINGS. None whatever.

Mr. MANN. The moment they get all of the land away by allotment or sale then they come to the General Treasury and want us to buy more land for them. Is not that rather going it some?

Mr. HASTINGS. This is for the orphan children of the restricted members of the Five Civilized Tribes.

Mr. MANN. Oh, it is for the orphan children. They all get their allotment.

Mr. HASTINGS. The Cherokee Nation gave the Government this property of $50,000 for $5,000 a year ago.

Mr. MANN. Possibly so, and yet they want us to pay $40,000 besides $7,500, that is $47,500, out of the Treasury for their benefit right here. I do not see we are the gainers.

Mr. HASTINGS. I will say the gentleman from Illinois must appreciate that no better appropriations have been made than to protect the orphan children of the restricted class of Indians.

Mr. MANN. Oh, that is very true, and no better appropriation can be made of the Indians' property than to do it. What we do is, and that is my complaint usually here, we go ahead and give the Indians all of their property and all of their money, and just as soon as that is done we say that we have to support them out of the General Treasury. Of course, there will always be Indian orphans as long as there are Indian people, and there will be white orphans as long as there are white people; but when we give them their money in large sums, then, as soon as they have it, we turn around and pay out of the General Treasury and do everything which they ought to do themselves.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I am going to say in reply to the gentleman from Illinois I do not desire to consume the time of the committee, but Congress took up this policy a number of years ago in reference to the Indians, and, unfortunately for me, or maybe fortunately for Congress, I was not in Congress, and I did not have anything to do with that policy of Congress; but Congress has provided, however, for the distribution of all the Cherokee funds and for the allotment of all their lands, and their lands have been allotted and their funds have been distributed just as the gentleman from Illinois has stated.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois make the point of order?

Mr. MANN. Well, I think I ought to make the point of order, but I will not.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will withdraw his point of order.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman talks about it, I will make the point of order; but I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

The sum of $275,000, to be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, in aid of the common schools in the Cherokee, Creek, Choctaw, Chickasaw, Seminole, and Osage Nations and the Quapaw Agency in Oklahoma, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917: Provided, That this appropriation shall not be subject to the limitation in section 1 of this act limiting the expenditure of money to educate children of less than one-fourth Indian blood.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. HASTINGS. I wish the gentleman from Illinois would be kind enough to reserve the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. How much time is desired on this, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. HASTINGS. I do not want over five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, there is this kind of condition which exists in eastern Oklahoma. There were 19,500,000 acres, in round numbers, of Indian lands. As Congress has heard to-day, these lands by various treaties were allotted. Under the Atoka agreement with the Choctaws in 1897 all of their lands were made nontaxable. Under the agreement with the Creek Indians their homesteads were nontaxable for 21 years. The homesteads of the Seminole Indians are made nontaxable in perpetuity. The homestead allotments to the Cherokee Indians were made nontaxable as long as held by the original allottee. Now, Congress, recognizing that that would be an injustice to the new State, as early as the appropriation bill of 1907, appropriated $300,000 in aid of the schools in a provision in language similar to this provision. The same sort of provision was carried in the Indian appropriation bill of 1908. Then Congress, by the act of May 27, 1908, attempted to remove restrictions upon certain Indian lands and attempted to make those lands taxable. Suits to test the constitutionality of the act of 1908 were brought in the courts. The courts of the State of Oklahoma sustained the constitutionality of the act of Congress approved May 27, 1908, making these lands taxable. Appeals were taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, and in the leading case of Choate against Trapp, May 13, reported in Two hundred and twenty-fourth United States Reports, page 665, the Supreme Court of the United States held that the provision of the act of Congress making these lands taxable was unconstitutional. Now, what is the result? Since that time, by the act of 1912, Congress appropriated $300,000 to aid the public schools in Oklahoma in lieu of these nontaxable lands. By a provision of the act of 1913 Congress appropriated $300,000. By a provision of the act of 1914 Congress appropriated $275,000, and the resolution of last year continued that in the appropriation of this year. Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, there are something like 2,200 or 2,300 of these public schools throughout eastern Oklahoma aided out of this appropriation, and the Indian Department has a school supervisor and other officers and clerical force who are working in harmony with the State superintendent and county superintendent of schools, and these Indian children——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I ask for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HASTINGS. These Indian children are being specially looked after and are placed in these schools. If this appropriation is not made, a great many of these schools can not run more than two or three months in the year, by reason of the fact that there is so much restricted land in a great many of the school districts; and that is the reason why, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, that I appeal in behalf of the restricted Indian children of eastern Oklahoma, who are receiving the direct benefit of what, I admit, is a gratuity from the Congress of the United States, to the gentleman to withdraw his point of order and allow the House to have a vote upon this amendment.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, what is the allowance that has just been given by the House for a per capita to the Indians?

Mr. HASTINGS. Let me say to the gentleman from Texas that that applies exclusively to the Chickasaw and Choctaw Tribes. It does not apply to the Cherokees, it does not apply to the Seminoles, nor does it apply to the Creeks. It is a distribution of a part of their own funds to the amount which the gentleman has heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I will take five minutes of my own time. Have the Cherokees, Seminoles, and Creeks had all their allotments and allowances heretofore?

Mr. HASTINGS. I am not so familiar with the Creeks and the Seminoles. The Cherokees are now having distributed among them $3.30 each, which the Indian Office says is the last penny that is due them. Their last foot of land has been allotted and last fractional piece of land sold, so that they have not a foot of tribal land and not a penny of tribal money. And it is my information that when the existing law is carried out with the Creeks, they will not have any, and perhaps do not have enough to equalize their allotments under existing law.

Mr. CALLAWAY. The Creeks, Choctaws, and Seminoles do not come within this allowance?

Mr. HASTINGS. No, sir.

Mr. CALLAWAY. They have had all their allowances and allotments heretofore?

Mr. HASTINGS. The provision for the distribution of this money per capita made to-day does not apply to the Creeks, Cherokees, or Seminoles.

Mr. CALLAWAY. The Creeks, Cherokees, and Seminoles have heretofore had their allotments and allowances, and the Government does not now hold anything that belongs to them?

Mr. HASTINGS. I have answered you particularly in reference to the Cherokees. It is my information when the funds in the hands of the Government are used, and when the obligations of the Government are met with reference to the Creeks and the Seminoles, the Government will have no funds belonging to them. I would not like to say that the Government has no funds belonging to them. For instance, it has certain money with which to equalize allotments. I think that money belongs, instead of to the tribe, to the individuals of the tribe. It is like a man who has a sum of money and owes some debts. After his debts are paid he perhaps will have none. And that is what I think is true with reference to these tribes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that they have not enough money on hand with which to equalize?

Mr. HASTINGS. That is my idea. They have not enough money with which to equalize. I refer to the Creeks.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Does your State make provision in its common-school system to take care of their schools, or does their exemption from taxation exempt them from the benefits of the public-school system?

Mr. HASTINGS. No; they are not exempt from the benefits of it. The State goes as far as it can. It taxes what land it can tax, and taxes all the property it can tax, and Congress by the act of 1908 said that a lot of this land should be taxed, and the State supreme court upheld the act of Congress, but when it came up to the Supreme Court of the United States that court said that this act of Congress making these Indian lands taxable was, in violation of the treaties and agreements made with the several tribes, unconstitutional, and since that time, of course, we have not attempted to tax those lands.

Mr. CALLAWAY. But they get the same privileges and benefits under your public-school law that any other children of Oklahoma get?

Mr. HASTINGS. Well, the way in which they are doing it now is that a part of this money is used to aid the common schools, to supplement the school district funds and give them about eight months out of the year. For instance, none of the appropriation goes to an incorporated city or town—not a penny. It goes to the rural schools exclusively, and in some school districts the land is practically all nontaxable. Where there would be little or no school funds at all, a part of the school fund is apportioned in order to enable the district to have a school for a reasonable length of time.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Do you mean to say that under your law, where there is a range of territory and land all exempt from taxation in that territory, the State does not provide any public schools at all?

Mr. HASTINGS. We do not have exactly that kind of a case. There is hardly any school district in Oklahoma but has a little taxable land; some of them have a good deal and some have but little. Now, there is no extra provision made by the State of Oklahoma for those particular districts.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Are your schools in the respective districts dependent on the taxable localities for their support?

Mr. HASTINGS. Largely. There are some State taxes which go to them.

Mr. CALLAWAY. But the schools depend on the local tax of that community?

Mr. HASTINGS. Largely. They have a State school fund, but that is a small matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CALLAWAY] has expired.

Mr. THOMPSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say in further response to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CALLAWAY] and in further amplification of the statement of my colleague from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS] that we have a number of districts in the State where there are a large number of Indian pupils and a large number of white pupils attending the schools. Now, all of this Indian land is nontaxable and the land that has been alienated and sold to the noncitizen is taxable. But the property of the noncitizens subject to taxation in that State is not sufficient to carry on the schools, as provided under the constitution and laws of that State, for six months in the year, and in order to do that it is necessary to have this additional appropriation. For instance, in my own county of Garvin, in the western part of the old Chickasaw Nation, and one of the counties that is least occupied by Indians, we have some 30 districts that have not a sufficient amount of taxable property to carry on the schools for six months. This money is used to aid those schools and to carry them on for the constitutional period required in the State.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMPSON. I do.

Mr. CALLAWAY. How much was appropriated for this purpose a year ago?

Mr. HASTINGS. Two hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars.

Mr. CALLAWAY. How long has this appropriation been running?

Mr. HASTINGS. Since 1907.

Mr. CALLAWAY. What is the reason for it?

Mr. HASTINGS. It is in lieu of making the lands nontaxable. Congress has done that since 1907, except in one year, and that was pending a decision of the case in the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. CALLAWAY. If the Government is exempting them from taxes, does the gentleman think it should also give them $275,000 a year to school them?

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, I believe I have the floor. We submit that we ought to have an amount in addition to this, because this land is made nontaxable by an act of Congress and by a treaty with the Indians. We are simply asking this to help out the schools. The burden of taxation is placed upon the lands that are taxable and on the personal property, which belongs largely to the noncitizen element in our country. We are not asking anything unreasonable in this bill, and we are taking care of that in this bill.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I agree with the gentleman that they all ought to be required to pay taxes, State and county and municipal alike; but I do not agree with the gentleman in his idea that since the Government has benefited the Indians by exempting them from taxation, it ought also to benefit them in maintaining their schools on that account.

Mr. THOMPSON. If the gentleman were familiar with the various treaties made by the United States with the Choctaws, whereby they ceded to the Government their right to hold their lands in severalty, when they formerly held them in common, and surrendered their government and council to the government of the white man, I am satisfied he would not hold that opinion. When that treaty was made that was one of the inducements offered to the Indians—that the property of the Indians should not be taxable for 25 years.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Not taxable by the localities?

Mr. THOMPSON. Not taxable at all.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I can understand how the Congress could exempt the territory from taxation by the Government itself, but I do not understand how it could exempt them from local taxation.

Mr. THOMPSON. That was in accordance with the provisions of the treaty.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This appropriation has been carried for about 10 years. I recall that I offered the first amendment that secured the first appropriation.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS] said this had been done since 1907. I do not think his recollection is very good, unless my own is extremely poor, because I think we have carried it only three or four years, when we passed the act making the Indian lands taxable.

Mr. DAVENPORT. That was on May 27, 1908.

Mr. MANN. We passed the law in 1908, making it taxable, did we not?

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Well, that act went before the Supreme Court of the United States, and we did not begin to make an appropriation until that case had gone through the Supreme Court of the United States, so that the gentlemen, both of them, are in error about this. I think they are in error also about some other things.

Mr. HASTINGS. I have the provision here.

Mr. MANN. It would not make any difference. I have made a point of order on it several times before.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield to me, I will say that I have no idea on earth that I can persuade him not to withdraw the point of order on this, but——

Mr. MANN. I am trying to get some information; that is all.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I have argued with him often before on this same proposition, and on only one occasion he did not insist on his point of order. On that occasion I won my point without arguing.

Mr. MANN. Then the gentleman should not argue too much now. [Laughter.] Let me ask the gentleman how much did we pay the State of Oklahoma when she was admitted to the Union because of the fact that a lot of the land there was nontaxable?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. When the State of Oklahoma was organized, Congress very generously endowed the new Commonwealth with $5,000,000 in lieu of sections 16 and 36, which could not be given because all the land on Indian Territory side belonged to the Indians.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. It was in lieu of public land used for Indian purposes.

Mr. MANN. It was for school purposes. You were paid $5,000,000 because the Indian lands were not taxable. Now, how much do we carry in this bill which could be used for the payment of tuition of Indian pupils in those schools in addition to this item?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Does the gentleman mean the Five Civilized Tribes?

Mr. MANN. I mean exactly what I said. How much do we carry in this bill now, outside of this item, which could be used for the payment of tuition for Indian pupils in those schools? Oh, well, if the gentleman does not know——

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. None of it has been used in the past.

Mr. MANN. We appropriate $1,550,000 which can be used for that purpose.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Not one dollar of that is to be used in the Five Civilized Tribes, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. It has never been used, because it has never been available for that purpose. For the first time we have inserted a provision in the bill making it available for the payment of tuition of children in white schools—$1,550,000—and the amount of the item has been much increased. There are three items in the bill, each designed for Oklahoma schools. Of course I appreciate the difficulties there. I grant you that there is quite a difficult situation down there in Oklahoma. Yet the situation there is not so different from what it has been elsewhere throughout the United States. When these original treaties were made, everybody knew in the end what would be the result.

Here is this very valuable land in Oklahoma which people have obtained, much of it, and at very low prices, and some of it, I fear, at prices above what it was worth when it was purchased, and——

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr: Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. MANN. I will when I get through my statement.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I want to give the gentleman the exact figures he asked for.

Mr. MANN. I have given the gentleman the exact figures. I doubt if he can give them to me. I have read the item from the bill—$1,550,000. If the gentleman admits that those are the exact figures, all right. If not, he is mistaken.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The figures I propose to give the gentleman are from House Document 121——

Mr. MANN. Oh, that has nothing to do with this bill. House Document 121 is not legislation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The Sixty-fourth Congress has something to do with this bill.

Mr. MANN. The Sixty-fourth Congress has had nothing to do with it, except as it is up before it now. No House document has anything to do with it. We carry in this bill for the first time—

And for tuition of Indian children in public schools, $1,550,000.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Not one cent goes to the Civilized Tribes.

Mr. MANN. I am reading from the bill. That money is not all for this purpose.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If the gentleman will wait a moment, I will explain this matter.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will give me an opportunity, I will explain it, or I will yield and let him do it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will give you all day, if you want it.

Mr. MANN. No; I am glad to let the gentleman explain it.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I know the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] wants to be perfectly fair about this matter. Not one dollar of this $1,550,000 is spent among the Five Civilized Tribes.

Mr. MANN. Not one dollar of it is appropriated yet.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Not one dollar of the amount of the appropriation carried in this item last year was spent for the Five Civilized Tribes.

Mr. MANN. Certainly; and this language was not in the bill:

And for tuition of Indian children in public schools.

It could not be utilized, nor was the amount the same that it is in this bill.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I will say to the gentleman that I have no hope that any of this money will be spent among the Five Civilized Tribes. The Federal Government has never spent any money for education among the Five Civilized Tribes, except this $275,000 last year and the appropriation of, I believe, $35,000 for the Cherokee Orphan Training School.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], in my judgment, is more often correct about details than any other man I ever saw: but I want to invite his attention to the Indian appropriation act of 1907, which I hold in my hand, and which does carry a provision in it for $300,000.

I call the gentleman's attention to the Indian appropriation act of 1908, which I hold in my hand, and which does carry an appropriation of $300,000.

I also call the gentleman's attention to the Indian appropriation act of 1912, and I will say that it does carry an appropriation of $300,000.

The appropriation act of 1913 carries an appropriation of $300,000.

For 1914 it was cut down to $275,000. The resolution of last year continued that, so this year it is $275,000. So I am correct in saying that the appropriation of 1907 was $300,000; the appropriation of 1908 was $300,000; the appropriation of 1913 was $300,000; and the appropriations for 1914 and 1915 were $275,000 each.

But I find that Congress began, even before that time, and appropriated in the Indian appropriation bill of 1906, long before statehood, $150,000 in aid of the public schools of the then Indian Territory.

Mr. MANN. Why, certainly; before statehood we did it, but we have not done it for 10 years, not even on the gentleman's own statement.

Mr. HASTINGS. The appropriations which I have read to the gentlemen since 1907 are all within 10 years, and the appropriation has been made in varying amounts every year except 1911, and that was while the tax case referred to was pending in the Supreme Court. The case of Choate versus Trapp was decided in the Supreme Court of the United States on the 13th day of May, 1912, and immediately thereafter the Indian appropriation bill of that year carried this appropriation of $300,000 again. It did not carry it in 1911, because we were taxing the lands down there during that year, and that was pending a decision of this matter by the Supreme Court of the United States. Those are really the facts.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The point of order is well taken, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to use not exceeding $35,000 of the proceeds of sales of unallotted lands and other tribal property belonging to any of the Five Civilized Tribes for payment of salaries of employees and other expenses of advertising and sale in connection with the further sales of such tribal lands and property, including the advertising and sale of the land within the segregated coal and asphalt area of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, or of the surface thereof as provided for in the act of Congress approved February 19, 1912 (37 Stat. L., 67), and of the improvements thereon, which is hereby expressly authorized, and for other work necessary to a final settlement of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes: Provided, That not to exceed $10,000 of such amount may be used in connection with the collection of rents of unallotted lands and tribal buildings: Provided further, That during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, no moneys shall be expended from tribal funds belonging to the Five Civilized Tribes without specific appropriation by Congress, except as follows: Equalization of allotments, per capita and other payments authorized by law to individual members of the respective tribes, tribal and other Indian schools for the current fiscal year under existing law, salaries and contingent expenses of governors, chiefs, assistant chiefs, secretaries, interpreters, and mining trustees of the tribes for the current fiscal year at salaries at the rate heretofore paid, and attorneys for said tribes employed under contract approved by the President, under existing law, for the current fiscal year: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to pay the cost of maintenance during the current fiscal year of the tribal and other schools and to continue during the ensuing fiscal year the tribal and other schools among the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Creek, and Seminole Tribes from the tribal funds of those nations, within his discretion and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on this paragraph. May I ask the chairman of the committee, is this in the exact language of former appropriation bills, except the last proviso?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I think it is the same language, with the exception of the last proviso.

Mr. HARRISON. Is the gentleman practically sure of that?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I have not compared it word for word, but I am reasonably sure it is practically similar.

Mr. MANN. There is a provision in there that is legislation, and is new.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes; the last proviso?

Mr. MANN. No; language which expressly authorizes the sale of the land and improvements. The language is, on page 40, line 8—which is hereby expressly authorized.

I take it that is an express authorization of the sale. The grammar is not very good, but I think that is what it refers to.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. As I indicated, I had not compared the paragraph word for word with last year's bill, and it is barely possible that there is some slight change in the verbiage.

Mr. MANN. It was not in the bill last year. Whether it was in the law two years ago, I am not sure.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I am looking now to see if it was in the law two years ago.

Mr. MANN. And there is a difference in the language as to the rate paid to clerks, and so forth. I suppose it means the same thing. While the gentleman from Mississippi is looking up the matter, may I ask about the expenditure of funds for the maintenance of the tribal schools, how much money is expended for that purpose, and what limitation there is on it, and what control Congress has over the subject?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The only limitation is that they shall not expend any more than was expended in the year ending June 30, 1905.

Mr. MANN. And that provision is not in the last proviso.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. No; the act of April 26, 1906, which transferred the schools from the tribal to the Federal authorities, set out that there should not be used in any fiscal year thereafter more than had been used in the fiscal year preceding. That is in section 10, act of April 26, 1906.

Mr. MANN. Those are salaries and contingent expenses, and so forth, but that does not govern the last proviso.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The question I understood the gentleman to ask was, How much was authorized to be used for the school?

Mr. MANN. Yes; how much has been used for the school.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I do not know what the authorization is, because I do not know how much was used in the year ending June 30, 1905.

Mr. MANN. You carry an item in this bill in reference to certain employees, that they shall not be paid salaries in excess of those for the last fiscal year, the rate heretofore paid.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. No, no; I had no reference to the limitation contained in this paragraph. What I called attention to was section 10 of the act of April 26, 1906, which reads as follows:

SEC. 10. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to assume control and direction of the schools in the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole Tribes, with the lands and all school property pertaining thereto, March 5, 1906, and to conduct such schools under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, retaining tribal educational officers, subject to dismissal by the Secretary of the Interior, and the present system so far as practicable, until such time as a public-school system shall have been established under Territorial or State government, and proper provision made thereunder for the education of the Indian children of said tribes, and he is hereby authorized and directed to set aside a sufficient amount of any funds, invested or otherwise, in the Treasury of the United States, belonging to said tribes, including the royalties on coal and asphalt in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, to defray all the necessary expenses of said schools, using, however, only such portion of said funds of each tribe as may be requisite for the schools of that tribe, not exceeding in any one year for the respective tribes the amount expended for the scholastic year ending June 30, 1905.

Mr. MANN. Has that law expired?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. No.

Mr. MANN. Does not that give the Secretary authority to use the tribal funds?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The comptroller, under a ruling which seemed to me to be erroneous, decided that the Secretary did not have authority to use these funds for these schools unless specific appropriation was made by Congress.

Mr. MANN. So the purpose here is to let him use the tribal funds to take care of white schools down there.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. No; but to let him use the funds far paying the Indians who attend tribal and contract boarding schools.

Mr. MANN. That does not say so here. It says tribal and other schools. You want the money to help support the white schools. I suppose you prefer to get it out of the General Treasury rather than the Indian treasury, but you want some money to support the white schools.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. MANN. Why, we just struck out an item on a point of order where it was admitted that the money was wanted for that purpose.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. If the gentleman from Illinois will permit me—I know he wants to be fair——

Mr. MANN. That goes without saying.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The $275,000 which has just been stricken from the bill on a point of order was to be used for the Indian children in white schools. To that extent it was in support of the white schools and no more, and I am very sorry it went out. It was not to be used for the education of white children. This amount is to be used for Indians going to tribal and contract schools which are operated almost exclusively for the Indians.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman satisfies me, but it was the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] who reserved a point of order.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, the reason that I make the point of order is because I think there is new legislation in the provision. The language, in lines 8, 9, and 10, "which is hereby expressly authorized, and for other work necessary to a final settlement of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes," is, I think, new legislation. The wording of that clause or provision might give authority to the Secretary after selling these lands to pay out the money as it came in and wind up the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes without further legislation.

Mr. MANN. I think this does not authorize the expenditure of any money.

Mr. HARRISON. It authorizes the sale of the land and for other work necessary for final settlement.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but the appropriation is only $35,000. Last year it was $40,000. All of that money is to be paid into the Treasury except $35,000, and there could not be paid out by the Secretary any more than that sum.

Mr. HARRISON. I think the language suggested in lines 8, 9, and 10 is new legislation, and I make the point of order to that part of the provision.

Mr. MANN. There is no doubt but that it is subject to a point of order, but I think the gentleman may not understand what the purpose of this is, and I may not either. There is some land down there that ought to be sold. We have been carrying a provision of this kind authorizing the sale of this land. I take it that some question has arisen by reason, perhaps, of the want of express authority. But the Secretary does not spend the money.

Mr. HARRISON. What I object to are the words "for other work necessary to a final settlement of the Five Civilized Tribes."

Mr. MANN. But that is all within the $35,000 appropriation.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. That was in the bill of last year.

Mr. MANN. The bill of last year did not become a law, but it was in the bill as it passed the House.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And it is not law at the present time.

Mr. HARRISON. Do I understand the gentleman from Illinois to say that he thinks the unallotted lands can be sold under this provision, and that there is nothing in this provision that would give the Secretary the right to do any other work that might be necessary toward a final settlement of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes?

Mr. MANN. They could not spend any more than the $35,000.

Mr. HARRISON. No; but if that should be sufficient to sell all of the unallotted land and get into the Treasury, say, five or ten million dollars, then might there not be some danger under that wording of giving him the right to distribute the money?

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; he can not pay a dollar out without an authorization, and that is not an authorization.

Mr. HARRISON. That has been my idea about the law, and that is why I do not want any provision incorporated in the bill that will change existing law.

Mr. MANN. This does not change existing law. This is only an appropriation and it is not an authorization.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, in view of what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] says, I withdraw the point of order. All I desire to do is to play safe against the Secretary being authorized to make any per capita payment without express authorization.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the salaries and expenses of not to exceed six oil and gas inspectors, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to supervise oil and gas mining operations on allotted lands leased by members of the Five Civilized Tribes from which restrictions have not been removed, and to conduct investigations with a view to the prevention of waste, $15,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. I would like to get information on two points: First, these oil lands being very profitable to the owners, why should we pay for their inspection out of the Federal Treasury? Second, why should we create a new mining bureau in the Indian Service when we have the statement of the Director of Mines now that they know a good deal about the subject of oil?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I do not think this creates a new bureau. As I understand it, those six inspectors are there now.

Mr. MANN. I think that to conduct investigations with a view to the prevention of waste would be the creation of another bureau of mines in the Indian Service. That is one of the duties of the present Bureau of Mines in the Interior Department at the present time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It was not so represented to us in the statements made before the committee by Mr. Meritt, who represented the department.

Mr. KONOP. Mr. Chairman, these inspectors are acting both under the Bureau of Indian Affairs and under the Bureau of Mines.

Mr. MANN. Why does the Indian Committee bring them in there and have them paid out of the Federal Treasury? If the Indian Committee provided that they be in the Bureau of Mines, to be paid out of the Indian money, where it ought to come from, I would have no objection to it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would not have any objection to that.

Mr. MANN. These oil and gas wells down there are of immense value and it is perfectly proper undoubtedly for the Government to have somebody there to advise and inspect, but with the enormous profits coming from them, why should we take the money from the rest of the people and expend it for their benefit, and they get all of the profit they make out of the wells?

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, let me say to the gentleman that this is to supervise the lands of restricted Indians that have been leased. Under the law a restricted Indian can not make a lease of his oil lands without the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. That has always been the law. It would be difficult to charge that up to any one particular lease, because there are a number of counties, 6 or 8 or 10, in which there is a great amount of oil development, and I do not have any idea how many of those Indians have oil lands. It would be difficult for me to estimate. It would be very difficult to say that an hour or two of some man's salary for to-day shall be charged up to this particular Indian and an hour or two of the man's salary next week charged up to some other particular Indian. It seems to me that is entirely impracticable, and it could not be reimbursed out of any particular Indian's royalty that is coming in. The purpose of this is to see that the Indian gets all that is coming to him. The purpose of it is to see that there is no waste committed on the land, that the oil is properly run, that the oil is not stolen, and things of that kind. In other words, it is to protect the interest of the Indian. As I suggested a moment ago, by early legislation these leases were made only with the consent of the Secretary of the Interior. He has supervision over the making of them and the approval of them, and he has supervision over the royalties that come in and their disbursement. It would be exceptionally difficult to say what part you are going to take out of one and what part of the expense out of another. It would be impracticable in my judgment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of giving the information that the gentleman from Illinois desires. I read from page 353 of the hearings. Mr. Meritt is speaking:

You will observe, Mr. Chairman, we are broadening the scope of this work so as to include other reservations outside of the Five Civilized Tribes but in the State of Oklahoma. Oil has been discovered on other reservations besides the lands of the Five Civilized Tribes. This appropriation has been very helpful in conserving the gas supply. There was a very large amount of gas going to waste. It has also resulted in improving the operations of the oil men.

Mr. CARTER. Who are these inspectors, Mr. Meritt?

Mr. MERITT. They are civil-service employees, Mr. Carter, and one of the requirements was that they should have had practical experience in oil and gas operations.

Mr. CARTER. What are their names?

Mr. MERITT. The following list gives the information requested.

	Salary.
Carl H. Beal	$2,160
William F. McMurray	3,000
Harry D. Aggers	2,500
George W. McPherson	2,500
John C. Fowler	2,500
Louis W. Courtney	2,500

Mr. CARTER. What are they paid?

Mr. MERITT. About $2,500 a year.

Mr. CARTER. And their expenses?

Mr. MERITT. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Do they put in all of their time on this work?

Mr. MERITT. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. They are regular Government employees?

Mr. MERITT. Yes, sir. They are operating under the directions of the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the Bureau of Mines and under the general direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

I think that answers the gentleman's question.

Mr. MANN. If they are paid a salary of $2,500 and expenses, besides, the $15,000 is not sufficient to take care of six of them.

Mr. KONOP. We cut that amount down because there was an unexpended balance of $11,826 from last year.

Mr. MANN. There was no appropriation last year for this purpose, was there?

Mr. KONOP. Oh, yes. The last bill carried $25,000, and we cut that down to $15,000.

Mr. MANN. These oil wells, as I understand it, are very valuable and the royalties are quite large, and, I suppose, are paid very promptly. They are no smaller to-day probably than they were yesterday, and it looks as though they would not be any less to-morrow than they are to-day. Now, why should we pay for this out of the General Treasury? Why should not this work be done by the Bureau of Mines?

Mr. KONOP. Well, I catch the point of the gentleman. I think the reason for that is the Secretary of the Interior has charge over this. He has charge of the approval of these leases. The whole matter goes through the Indian Bureau, and having it all in the same department is probably the reason for it; I do not know.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, I can answer the question of the gentleman, I think, so far as our section of the State is concerned. The Interior Department was unable, so much being restricted land and leased subject to the approval of the Interior Department, to draw any distinction as to just what part they could apply to the work done on each allotment, so as to apportion the money to those owning the respective leases, and the operators were permitting much oil to flow from the wells and waste. There were also the gas wells, where gas was going to waste, and the representatives of the Government there requested that some one be designated to look after this waste and to prevent the same.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I will take the floor in my own right. It was represented by those who had knowledge of the facts that it could not be done without making it general and look after the entire part of the lands which were restricted in Oklahoma.

Mr. MANN. I want to say to my friend from Oklahoma that if we save the money for the Indians, then we must do so at our expense, not at theirs. It is a great saving, no doubt, to have this waste prevented, and yet, if we make them $1,000 at a cost of $10, we must pay the $10 ourselves and not take it out of them.

Mr. HASTINGS. If the gentleman will permit, Congress has supervision over their property without their consent. They do not want Congress to have any supervision.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. DAVENPORT. There is a saving in two ways. One is the prevention of waste and to prevent an injury that might be done to the adjoining properties, because if the oil is permitted to flow down the streams it destroys what few fish are in them, and often they have a great many fires. It is true it was a saving to the party who had a right to a royalty from the production, but the Government had assumed that responsibility in looking after that for the restricted Indian.

Mr. MANN. The Government has to send people down and teach them how to operate the oil wells, how to handle them and prevent waste, and to save enormous quantities of oil and gas, which means an enormous amount of money for the benefit of the Indians. Every time you do something for the benefit of the Indians we must put our hands in our own pockets and pull out the money and pay the expense.

Mr. DAVENPORT. But when we started in we voluntarily agreed to assume to do that.

Mr. MANN. Oh, not at all; the gentleman is mistaken. We did not agree to do anything of the kind.

Mr. DAVENPORT. In every treaty and in every restriction placed upon the Indian, when we sought to distribute to him his property, we said that we would allot it for him, and as long as it was restricted we would administer the property for him free of costs to the restricted Indian.

Mr. MANN. We did not say we would do this.

Mr. DAVENPORT. We will not permit him to make a lease without the approval of the Government.

Mr. MANN. We will not permit you gentlemen down in Oklahoma to get all of it away from right away, because we know you will get it sooner or later, but not at the moment.

Mr. DAVENPORT. We congratulate the gentleman upon that, because a great many of the gentleman's constituents from Illinois and all over the country generally, all of them are coming down there seeking the same thing, to accomplish the same result.

Mr. MANN. We sent some of our best men, not to mention others, down there to help you to get it away from the Indians, and we know that they are pretty smooth at the business, and that is the reason I am somewhat suspicious.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I am glad the gentleman made the confession he has, that some of his constituents and others went to Oklahoma to assist in getting the property from the Indian. Many good men come to Oklahoma to better their condition and have done so.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does the gentleman withdraw his point of order?

Mr. MANN. I will; but we did not get anywhere.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I will make the point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, is it not too late after the former point of order was withdrawn?

The CHAIRMAN. No; the gentleman had the right to renew the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

That no farming or grazing lease executed by a member or members of the Five Civilized Tribes for a longer period than one year or with stipulations for a renewal thereof covering lands from which restrictions upon alienation have not been removed shall be valid unless approved by the superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes in the State of Oklahoma, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe: Provided, That all such leases shall be either approved or disapproved by the said superintendent within 30 days after said leases shall have been completed and filed with the officer.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I will reserve a point of order on that paragraph.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, it is evident it is subject to the point of order; it is new legislation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman explain the reason for the change of law? I understand there is no provision of law now restricting leases on——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas made the point of order.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas reserved the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Texas to make the point of order and then he got up and left the Chamber.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. No; he reserved the point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is true; the gentleman reserved the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all right; the point of order is reserved.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentleman from Arkansas was asking me a question and my attention was diverted at the time.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand, there is some provision of law protecting the rights of the Indians on restricted lands so far as leased lands are concerned for grazing purposes. Does this amplify the power of the Secretary? If it does, I am in favor of it; but if it restricts the power I am opposed to it.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The present law provides that the restricted homestead allotments in the Five Civilized Tribes may not be leased without the consent of the Secretary of the Interior, but that all surplus allotments may be leased for five years without the consent of the Secretary of the Interior. This item, as the gentleman will notice, provides that no restricted land shall be subject to lease unless approved by the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes, which is an official of the Secretary of the Interior in Oklahoma.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then, the purpose of the provision is to further protect the Indian?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The paragraph clearly prevents the leasing of the restricted surplus for longer than one year without the approval of the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes, a condition which does not now exist. Furthermore it gives the same official in Oklahoma full authority to finally approve leases on the restricted homestead, which can not now be done without the red tape of having the applications come all the way to Washington for final action which sometimes requires several months.

Mr. STAFFORD. For my part, I am in favor of the provision.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I would like to ask the gentleman if this is intended to change that law so that every time you make an agricultural lease with an Indian for a longer period than 12 months you will wait the process of approval that it goes through?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. No. This changes the law in that respect. There are two propositions here. One is to restrict the surplus allotment, and the other is to place that authority with the superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma.

Mr. DAVENPORT. The point I want to get at is, if it is intended now that they can not lease for agricultural or grazing purposes for a longer period than 12 months unless it is approved by the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Unless it is approved by the superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes—the local office in Oklahoma.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on it, but I withhold it.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman withhold it?

Mr. DAVENPORT. I withhold it.

Mr. NORTON. The purpose of this provision is this: At the present time, without the permission of the Secretary of the Interior or the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes, a lease can be made by any Indian of his surplus allotted lands for a period of five years.

It has been the practice of the people in Oklahoma to secure five-year leases on the surface rights of some of this land, and after the lease had run about a year they would take another five-year lease, always holding the Indian surplus lands under lease for about five years. Then, if the Indian should desire to sell his land, this five-year lease would be found to be outstanding against it and would tend to depreciate the selling price of the land, and would depreciate it.

The purpose of this paragraph is to put an end to that kind of practice. I recall that in Minneapolis a man who owned a great amount of very valuable real estate, and who was somewhat of an eccentric character, gave leases on his property for 25 years. Then he was approached by some scheming speculators, who urged him to give to them leases on all his property for a term of a thousand years at such rental as he might name. He, business man as he was, fell for the scheme. In giving this thousand-year lease he usually remarked facetiously: "Gentlemen, when this lease expires come around and I shall be glad to renew it." He died a few years ago. After his death it was found that those outstanding thousand-year leases on his property which he had given to scheming speculators for nothing it was practically impossible to sell that property until the leases had been canceled. And, as you may well understand, it cost a great deal of money to secure their cancellation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The reason I think this amendment would be beneficial to the Indians is simply this: They have a good many farming lands, and they have to rent the land in order to get anything from it. A great many men come in from Kansas and Missouri and rent the land. They go to the Indians and find the land and make a trade with them. Heretofore it took 60 or 90 days to get the lease recognized, and, therefore, not wishing to wait, would then pass on to Texas, and that State has benefited by it. I think they should stop in Oklahoma and that there should be an office there where this one-year rental contract could be approved. Benefit would result to the Indian and also to the people who are searching for some work to do and are leasing lands.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CALLAWAY] make the point of order?

Mr. CALLAWAY. I make the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That when such lands are surveyed and platted they shall be appraised and sold, except land reserved for water-power sites as provided in section 2 of this act, under the provisions of the Revised Statutes covering the sale of town sites located on the public domain. That the proceeds derived from the sale of any lands hereunder, after reimbursing the United States for the expense incurred in carrying out the provisions of this act, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of said Indians.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph just read. We ought to have some explanation of the purpose to be attained by the change of law as indicated by the provision in the bill. I tried to obtain some information from the hearings, but they seem to be rather obscure, and not only obscure, but rather vapid.

Mr. KONOP. I will say to my colleague from Wisconsin that I was looking at the hearings and I see nothing in the hearings upon the proposition except a justification from the assistant commissioner.

Mr. STAFFORD. That "justification" is no justification at all. I would like to have some explanation of this. The hearings do not disclose one word in justification of this change of law.

Mr. KONOP. I think the gentleman from Oregon appeared before the committee on this item.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I thought it went out of the bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is subject to a point of order.

Mr. KONOP. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] appeared before the committee about some item. I do not know whether it was this or not.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is temporarily out of the Chamber. I do not want to take any unfair advantage of him. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to have the item passed over without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] asks unanimous consent that the item may be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the construction of two bridges on the Umatilla Indian Reservation, in Oregon, suitable for wagon and other purposes, across the Umatilla River, at a limited cost of $28,500, the first at or near Thorn Hollow Station, the second at or near Mission Station, the sum of $19,000 is hereby appropriated to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and to be reimbursable from any funds now or hereafter placed in the Treasury to the credit of said Indians: Provided, That no part of the money herein appropriated shall be expended until the Secretary of the Interior shall have obtained from the proper authorities of the State of Oregon, or from the county of Umatilla, at least one-third of the cost of said bridges, and that the proper authorities of the said State of Oregon or the said county of Umatilla shall assume full responsibility for, and will at all times maintain and repair, said bridges and construct and maintain the approaches thereto: Provided further, That any and all expenses above the amount herein named in connection with the building and maintenance of said bridges shall be borne by the said State of Oregon or the said county of Umatilla.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 44, line 25, strike out "$28,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$28,000," and on page 45, line 1, strike out "$19,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$18,866."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish the gentleman from Oregon would explain his item a little bit further. It is a somewhat novel proposition.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I introduced a bill providing for the construction of the bridges referred to, and my bill did not have the reimbursible feature which this paragraph has.

Mr. MANN. Of course the gentleman knows that he could not get this through without the reimbursible feature.

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes; I understand. The bill was referred to the department, and the Secretary of the Interior and the Indian Bureau approved the bill and recommended its passage to the committee. The committee inserted the provision of my bill in this appropriation bill, with the change of the reimbursable feature.

Now, in justification of the matter, I would state that the two bridge sites are on the Umatilla Indian Reservation, Oreg.

This Indian reservation contains the very cream of the wheat lands of Oregon. They raise from 45 to 60 bushels of wheat per acre upon this reservation. The wheat raised in the vicinity of these bridge sites is hauled to the market at the stations of Mission and Thorn Hollow. These two stations are across the Umatilla River from where the wheat is raised. At the station of Mission there is hauled 150,000 bushels of grain every year. At the other station there is hauled to market some 250,000 bushels of grain every year. The Umatilla River has to be crossed at these stations. There is no bridge at either station.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is a deep, swift stream.

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes. The river is a swift stream and a changeable stream. The grain has to be hauled over a river bed from 250 to 300 feet in width, which changes yearly and is full of bowlders. The Indians and the white renters every year put up temporary structures at these points. The floods come and wash away the structures. During a part of the year it is impossible to haul any grain to market.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I understand the Indians desire this, and the amount is reimbursable from their funds?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes. The amount is reimbursable, and the item has the approval of the Indian Bureau. There are now Indian funds to the amount of $150,000, but those funds belong to minors on the reservation. The department is averse to using the funds of the minors. In addition to that there are some 72,000 acres of tribal land unallotted.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What is the value of those lands?

Mr. SINNOTT. Those lands are conservatively worth $500,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, page 44, line 24, by striking out the word "limited" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "limit of."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That only corrects the language, as I understand it. I have no objection to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 44, line 24, strike out the word "limited" and insert the words "limit of."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN. This reads, in line 11, page, 45, in reference to the county and State, "and will at all times maintain and repair said bridges." Should not that read "and agree to maintain," and so forth?

Mr. KONOP. I think that would be better language. We do not know whether they will or not.

Mr. MANN. It is impossible to wait for the construction of the bridges to see whether they will at all times repair and improve them.

Mr. KONOP. I think that change should be made.

Mr. MANN. I move, Mr. Chairman, to amend, on page 45, line 11, by striking out the word "will" and inserting the word "agree" and to insert the word "to" before the word "maintain."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 45, line 11, strike out the word "will" and insert in lieu thereof the word "agree," and after the word "time" insert the word "to."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

PENNSYLVANIA.

SEC. 20. For support and education of Indian pupils at the Indian school at Carlisle, Pa., including pay of superintendent, $132,000; for general repairs and improvements, $20,000; in all, $152,000.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska:
Page 45, line 20, after the word "superintendent," strike out "$132,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$119,550."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will not be adopted. This is one of our best schools, and the amount per capita is lower than $167, as I remember.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEPHENS] wishes to explain his amendment. There may be some reason advanced by him that will convince the chairman of the committee.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. If the gentleman will permit, I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that this bill carries an appropriation of $240 per capita for support and superintendent's salary for the 550 pupils that should be appropriated for in this bill. There are 513 pupils in attendance, and in my amendment I have allowed an appropriation of $167 per capita for 700 pupils. Now, if we should allow an appropriation for 550 pupils at $167 per capita, we would have approximately the exact basis upon which all these largs schools are appropriated for in this bill. My amendment, instead of reducing the amount of this appropriation to what it ought to be, is still $25,000 above what is appropriated for these other schools.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Has the gentleman ever been at th Carlisle School?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I have not.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Does the gentleman know anything about how that school is conducted?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I suppose it is an industrial school, of the same character as the other schools.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Does the gentleman know anything about the outing system that is practiced at the Carlisle School?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Yes; I do.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. For the gentleman's benefit I will say that the enrollment of the Carlisle School is 911.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Yes; but more than 300 of them are out on farms, and not costing the school anything except for their clothes and supervision.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. It costs money to supply them with clothes. It costs money to send them out and to bring them back. They are sent out to private families. The girls are given an opportunity to learn to do housework, to learn to cook, to learn to keep house, to learn to launder, and to learn the other things necessary for a housewife to do, opportunities which the children do not have in any other school, so far as I know. The boys are sent out to shops, to get actual experience in different kinds of shopwork. All of this costs money. All of this means expense. There are 911 pupils enrolled at Carlisle; only 513 in actual attendance, but that means in actual attendance at the school in pursuance of their literary studies. That does not mean, as has been the practice sometimes in the past, that those 513 children are out in private families learning to do housework or out in factories learning shopwork, but it means 513 children who are actually in the school every day, having their expenses paid. The gentleman must remember that the expenses of the others who are out in families and in shops are still going on and must be paid, so that the figures as to the actual attendance, set out at 513, is not a fair test when compared with other schools which do not have to carry a portion of the expenses of pupils not in actual attendance at the school.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. The gentleman's statement is entirely correct, but it does not dispute the claim I make here that this school should not be appropriated for at the rate of $240 per capita, when other schools—the gentleman's school at Chilocco, and the school at Haskell, and at Sherman Institute, and other schools just as large as this school at Carlisle, and having a greater attendance than the school at Carlisle—are appropriated for at the rate of $167 per capita. The 341 pupils out in the country, working for farmers for their board and for what they can learn, are not costing the school at Carlisle anything except their transportation and clothing; and I want to submit to the committee whether or not it is reasonable that we should pay $100 per capita more for the education of the children at Carlisle than we pay for the education of the children at Haskell, a larger school, and at Chilocco, and at Sherman Institute, all as large or larger schools than the Carlisle School? Is it reasonable that we should carry Indian pupils across the continent, from 1,000 to 2,000 miles, at an expense of $10,000 annually for traveling expenses, for the sake of educating them in a school costing $101 per capita more than other schools of like character are costing this Government?

Mr. TILLMAN. I will ask the gentleman if it is not true that Carlisle is the ranking school for Indians in the country, and that it costs more to employ an instructor to teach higher mathematics, or to teach Greek or Latin, than it does to teach the lower branches or the high-school branches?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. If it is true, as the gentleman says, that they are teaching Greek and Latin at Carlisle, it is the biggest argument you can produce for the reduction of this appropriation. The idea of giving a Greek and Latin education to an Indian at Carlisle is absurd and ridiculous.

Mr. TILLMAN. Waiving that for the time being, is it not also true that it costs more to employ instructors in engineering——

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. It does not employ such instructors.

Mr. TILLMAN. And in the higher branches?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. There are no higher branches taught there. I will call the gentleman's attention to a statement that was made to me this morning by the commissioner himself in answer to the question I submitted to him asking why it should cost more at Carlisle. He said, "They do more work." Why do they do more work? Do they teach a higher class of studies? Is their curriculum more extended? If it is, it is a criticism against the department and against any committee who advocate that a school should teach that class of stuff to an Indian, who needs the rudiments, needs to know how to feed and clothe himself, and not to secure an ornamental education.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will say to the gentleman from Nebraska——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I ask unanimous consent that my time may be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TILLMAN. My information is that they confer the degree of A. B. and that they employ a high class of faculty there for teaching. They teach advanced scientific studies, and as a matter of course——

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. But they ought not——

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not want to get into any controversy with the gentleman as to what they ought to teach there.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. But I am stating what they ought not to do, and we ought not to appropriate $101 per capita more to support that school than we do for the good practical schools in the Indian country.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I have been to the school at Carlisle, and it is really an unusual plant. The course is quite extended, way beyond anything like the high school. As a school grows in equipment, in spite of all we can do, the cost increases.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I should say it did.

Mr. FESS. In other words, the highly endowed universities cost the student per capita very much more than it costs in a small institution like the one of which I am president, where the equipment is not nearly so great. I do not believe it is fair to say that a school of the type of the Carlisle could be run on as cheap a per capita basis as a school less in equipment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. It could not, and I will say that the school at Carlisle has absolutely no excuse for existence; it can not be justified by a single fact. Here we are transporting pupils from right under the shadow of Haskell Institute, a great school, and the Sherman Institute, and other large, well-equipped Indian schools that are giving the Indians the sort of education they ought to have, in the environment in which they must live. If this is true it is proof in itself that that school has no excuse for its existence.

There are now in attendance there 2 pupils from Arizona, under the shadow of the Phoenix school; 6 from California; 2 from Idaho; 4 from Kansas; 30 from Michigan; 40 from Minnesota—good schools in both States—18 from Montana; 23 from Nebraska; 1 from Nevada; 33 from New Mexico; 89 from New York, the only legitimate territory the school has got; 59 from North Carolina; 7 from North Dakota; 184 from Oklahoma, right under the shadow of the Chilocco School; 92 from South Dakota; 88 from Wisconsin; and 9 from Wyoming, all transported at a $10,000 expense to the United States Government. This $10,000 is apparently appropriated for transportation of pupils for the purpose of paying $101 per capita more for their education than it would cost in schools near their homes.

Mr. FESS. Is there not a reason why the students from the West and South go to the great institutions like Yale and Harvard?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Oh, you are talking about whites and not about the Indians, who do not need that kind of an education. These Indians need a rudimentary education, to know how to clothe and feed themselves, and not the sort of education you get at Yale and Harvard.

Mr. KONOP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Yes.

Mr. KONOP. If you have an Indian who wants to pursue a high course of study, I say let him have it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I say let him pay for it. The Government should give him only a practical education.

Mr. KONOP. They want to go to the Carlisle institution and get this high-class education, and then go back among their own people; and they will be an influence toward a higher education.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Oh, I have seen students come back from Carlisle and be repudiated by their own people. They have had a sort of education that unfits them to live among their own people and the environment where they grew up. I tell you that the school has no justification whatever.

Mr. KONOP. There are 88, the gentleman says, from Wisconsin. They go to this school, and you will see them come back from Carlisle and teach in other schools. You will find Indian lawyers, Indian doctors, who were educated at Carlisle. I am willing to educate the Indian just as far as he wants to go.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Well, give him the education, but give it to him in his own neighborhood.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska asks for five minutes more. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask that all debate on this item close in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto close in 20 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman from Nebraska yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I will yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. HOWARD. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Nebraska to the fact that I have heard recently in another body the Filipino bill debated, allowing certain privileges to the Filipinos. I have heard the District bill debated as to the privileges that the negroes get in the District of Columbia. I have heard here for three or four days debated the Indian bill, and my observation is that it is a pretty poor thing in this country to be a white man. I do not think the white folks are getting what is due them in comparison to what the Negroes, the Filipinos, and the Indians are getting. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I thank the gentleman for his observation. I want to call attention to a comparison of the per capita cost for salaries and wages at Carlisle and show that it is $101 more than the per capita cost in other schools of similar size.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Since the gentleman looks directly at me, will he yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. In a moment—almost twice as much as some of the schools. Now, the per capita cost of subsistence, an important factor, is $48 at Carlisle, while it is $32 at the Sherman Institute, and runs along from $32 to $39 and $40 at the other eight large schools. Forty-eight dollars at Carlisle. I am trying to show that this school is most extravagant in every way, and that this reduction in the appropriation, which I have proposed in an amendment is justifiable. The per capita cost of fuel, I want you to particularly notice. At Carlisle it is $25, while up at Fort Totten, where it is 20 degrees below zero three months in the year, approximately the per capita cost is $15. Fifteen dollars as against $25. At Genoa and other schools in the same latitude the per capita cost runs from $10 to $13 as against $25 at this school. Coming to the matter of equipment, the per capita cost of equipment and supplies is $20.80 at Carlisle and an average of $10 at all of the other similar-sized schools. No one can justify that. Do you know what I find in that item of equipment? I find that there is an item of $11,000 for paper and other supplies for their printing press. Can you justify that?

Mr. KONOP. Why, they get out a paper up at that institution, and a good one.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Yes; and I find another item of $26,000 for athletics. Can you justify that?

Mr. KONOP. Yes; because I think athletics is a good thing.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. And then they expend $37,000 from the products of the school that they sell or consume. I want to tell you that when you come to justify these things you will not find the facts, and that you will have to admit that this appropriation should be cut to the figures I have suggested; and even when that is done this school has $25,000 more than any other school of like size and character. I submit also that the statement made in regard to the curriculum of that school and the quality of education there is an error. That school gives practically no better education than is given at Haskell, at Genoa, and the Sherman Institute. It should not give any better, either. I object to this school being favored of all others.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. COLLIER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 381. An act to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEPHENS] has made a very fine speech, but the facts are that the essential features of the school and the expenses necessary to the successful conduct of the school have not been touched upon by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEPHENS]. The facts are that this school stands perhaps head and shoulders above any other Indian school in the United States to-day, and I do not say that in a disparaging way to any other school. But it stands higher because the pupils from that school receive a practical training. They are not only taught to read and write but are taught agriculture, carpentering, blacksmithing, and so forth; in short, are educated and trained in such a manner that they are qualified to go out, and do go out, a credit to themselves and the school. A majority of them perhaps do not go back to the reservation and stay there, but prefer to engage in useful occupations, some in business, others in various lines of manufacturing activities. Many of them enter the professions. There are teachers and doctors and lawyers. Some of our best citizens and business men to-day are Indians graduated at the Carlisle School. This school above all others brings the Indian into actual contact in daily life with the civilized people of the United States. I do not say this only because this school is located in my district, but it is a fact that to civilize an Indian you must take him out of his environment, off of the Indian reservations, and he must see something of civilized life and must come in daily contact with it. The Indian boy must come into actual contact with the tradesman if he is to become a mechanic; with the practical farmer if he is to become an agriculturist, one that is up to date, who makes a profit out of farming.

The girls must come in contact with women who know how to do housework. They must be taught how to cook and how to take care of the home, to be neat, tidy, and clean, and they can learn that in no better environment than in eastern Pennsylvania, than which there is no section of the United States superior. [Applause.] There are perhaps a few dollars more expense attached to bringing an Indian into Carlisle, but the question is, What do we get for the money that we spend? Are we not getting a hundred cents on the dollar? I have looked over the wage scale, and I do not see anyone overpaid, and I do not see any necessity for cutting down the wages of anyone. If there is any waste or mismanagement it should be stopped. The management should be held strictly accountable for every dollar expended, but I submit to you that in order to ascertain whether there is a possibility of effecting a saving it is not a proper procedure to cut down the appropriation and thereby destroy the efficiency of the school. The men who are responsible for the conduct of the schools, the men who manage the finances of the school, must be held strictly accountable and see to it that every dollar is expended fairly, honestly, and economically, and for the best interest of the students.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KREIDER. Not just at this moment. The management must see to it that there is no waste and that every dollar that is appropriated by the Congress in this bill is used to good advantage. There seems to be a disposition to criticize this school because it costs a few dollars more per student than it does in some of the schools located close to and on the reservations. It costs something to bring the boys and girls from the West to Carlisle, and there is not only the item of transportation, but there is another item of expense which is charged to the Indian school at Carlisle which the gentleman has entirely overlooked, that is the expense of looking after these boys and girls who are sent out under contract, or let out, whatever the term used may be.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Farmed out.

Mr. KREIDER. They have some one, and he must be paid, who is constantly going around seeing to it that these girls have proper homes, that they are instructed in the domestic arts, that they are properly clothed and fed, and receive decent, humane treatment. It is the same with the boys; they all require looking after; the management must keep in touch with them, and of course it costs a little money. The boys and girls who have come under my observation were well educated; they were taught to act and behave like ladies and gentlemen fit to mingle with the people in any community, and while this costs money and the Carlisle School is charged with the expense, I insist that it is a very proper expense, and brings a tremendous return upon the investment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will say to the gentleman that it is called the "outing system," and the report is that 346 pupils were under the outing system, and those have not been counted in the attendance. It seems the amount based on the enrollment is $157 per capita, while based on the average attendance it is $275; and then there are 346 pupils in the outing system.

Mr. KREIDER. The gentleman from Nebraska has, I think, unconsciously paid the school the very highest possible compliment when he said that boys and girls from Carlisle do not mix as well with their people when they return home from Carlisle as they do when they return from other schools. Very true. In Carlisle we sow the seeds of civilization into their minds and hearts, showing them by actual example a better way, and as this seed grows its influences are seen in their every act and conduct; in fact, their very lives are changed; they have different ideals, and of course are not willing to go back to Indian customs, habits, and practices; they have become civilized, and now they desire to be useful and honored citizens, and they engage in agriculture, in arts and sciences, in the professions, and many stand at the very top of their chosen profession or calling to-day, a living monument to the Indian School at Carlisle, Pa.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I think that the purpose of the amendment of the Member from Nebraska was expressed when he said that there was no need whatever of this school. If I understand why the school ought to be discontinued, from his standpoint, it is because there is no need of work being done there; and if that be the purpose, then the amendment is simply to cripple the institution beyond what it is now able to do, and I do not think that that amendment ought to be offered in that way for the purpose of discontinuing——

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. It is not the purpose of crippling the work that is being done at that school now, but simply for the purpose of reducing the amount to something like a reasonable basis. The school is now getting, under my amendment, $25,000 more than it is entitled to have according to the pro rata apportionment that is given to all the other schools of this size.

Mr. FESS. I would say, if it is the gentleman's purpose to reduce it to the same basis of cost of the other schools, the gentleman ought not to agree to $25,000 more than the other schools get.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I hope to accomplish something. I hope to make my amendment do a great deal if I can get it through.

Mr. FESS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I think that it would be an unwise thing to do anything that would cripple this institution, which I have visited more than once and which I think is doing a wonderful work. I admit that a school in the East is, as a rule, more expensive than a school in the Middle West or in the far West. There seems to be a different standard of expenditure, of cost. As we ascend the scale in education the cost increases. That is why the Carlisle School is more expensive than schools of less rank. I do not think that that means that it is useless or extravagant, but there is a greater expenditure, and I know this is true, that as you increase in the equipment, in the plant, the expenditure is bound to be more than where you have not made the improvement; and that being the case, it is not a useless expenditure. It is an inevitable expenditure and in most cases a most justifiable one, and I do not believe that we ought to do anything to reduce the efficiency of this work nor ought we to limit the increase in the equipment or in the course of study. I do not think there is any reason whatever why an Indian wanting to be educated should be throttled in his aspirations and ambitions to go on and take an increased course so that he might go back to his people and the school that is near where he came from and do work in advance of what he possibly could have done had he not had this advance training. I think it is fundamentally wrong to take that position.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. The gentleman would not yield to me?

Mr. FESS. Yes; I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. The gentleman is an educator. He knows what it means to educate a child out of the environment in which he must live. It is well known to a man who has lived in an Indian country that the taking of boys and girls from Indian reservations to other schools outside of that environment and educating them is impracticable in the results obtained, because when they come back they do not fit into the scheme. I know a great many discredited students of Carlisle in the West, because they are out of harmony with their people, out of tune with them. They are taken when they are 15 or 16 years old to Carlisle, and after several years taken back to a raw reservation to live.

Mr. KREIDER. Is it the gentleman's idea, or his objection to the Carlisle School, that when a student goes there he comes back changed, showing the evidence of his education? Is it his desire to send a boy or girl to school and have them returned showing that no change has been effected?

Mr. KONOP. Mr. Chairman, this is a higher institution of learning, and every person knows that it necessarily costs more to educate Indians in a higher institution than in a lower institution of learning. As to the point the gentleman talks about, to the effect that the Indian does not fit into this environment, I wish to state to the committee that we are appropriating hundreds of thousands of dollars for the purpose of educating and civilizing the Indians. If we want to civilize him, we want to take him from the Indian-reservation environment and put him among white people, and civilize him by having him associate with the white people. That is the only way we can civilize the Indian. It is a well-known fact that where an Indian is educated away from the reservation, and goes back to the Indian reservation, if he stays with the Indians again for any length of time he usually takes up with Indian customs and goes back to the old life. So, I say, the only way by which you can civilize an Indian and make him like a white man is to make him associate among white men, no matter in what part of the country—the West, or anywhere else.

Mr. FESS. It is not true, as a rule, is it, that when they come to Carlisle and are educated in that atmosphere they go back and are useless? That is not the rule?

Mr. KONOP. That is not the rule. Mr. Rogers, one of the Chippewa Indians, of Minnesota, is a prosecuting attorney in a county in Minnesota, where there are only 600 Indians who vote and over 3,000 white people who vote. He is a man of intelligence, a good lawyer, and capable of holding such a position intrusted to him by white men. He was educated at Carlisle. We have an attorney in the State of Wisconsin, Mr. Denison Wheelock, who was educated at the Carlisle School, who is practicing law and competing with white lawyers, and is a very capable man.

If we want to civilize the Indian, I believe the way to do so is to take him and place him among the white people, and in that way educate him industrially, intellectually, and every other way. I think the Carlisle School is a higher institution of learning, and every dollar that this committee has provided is necessary to run it in a proper and efficient manner.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEPHENS].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FOSTER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 10385, the Indian appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

HON. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States.

SIR: I hereby tender my resignation as a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Respectfully, yours, W. R. OGLESBY.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation is accepted.

There was no objection.

MEXICO AND NATIONAL DEFENSE.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to extend my remarks in the RECORD touching the Mexican war problem and national defense.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimouse consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the Mexican situation and the national defense. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

RELIEF IN FLOODED DISTRICTS.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, a number of Members of the House have been very much interested in the passage of a joint resolution extending relief to persons in what is described as the "flood area" as the result of the rise in the Mississippi River. A few days ago the Chief of Engineers sent telegrams to all of the United States district engineers along the river requesting reports upon the situation in their respective districts. I have copies of five telegrams, dated, two of them, on the 3d of February, one on the 4th, and two on the 5th. They are from the Army engineers at Memphis, New Orleans, and Vicksburg, and they not only show there is no necessity for any action at this time, but they express the hope that it be made clear that there is no possibility that free rations will be provided by Congress, in order that they may effectually control the situation. So long as hope is held out that there will be free rations, or so long as appropriations are made providing rations for the people in the flooded district, they can not get the labor under favorable conditions, and it completely demoralizes the labor situation.

I ask that these telegrams be printed in the RECORD, with this statement, so that Members will understand the situation as ascertained from responsible official sources.

Mr. CARAWAY. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman a question. Do they not deal altogether with the situation of the levee?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They refer to the situation regarding the levees, of course.

Mr. CARAWAY. Of course, the engineers say they have sufficient money to care for the levee. They do not deal at all with the question of distress?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They deal with the question of distress. They say there are ample provisions to take care of persons in distress. They notified different parties that Government boats will be sent wherever there is any danger, and one representative planter has asked that no favorable recommendation be made for the furnishing of free rations, as they are amply able to take care of the situation. The telegrams show that there is no need for Government aid in that respect any more than there is need for Government aid in regard to the maintenance of the levee. A number of telegrams have been sent to various Members of the House from different persons in various parts of the affected area, and this request is made so as to put at the disposal of Members representing the districts affected accurate official information as to the real conditions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing certain telegrams from certain Government engineers. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following are the telegrams referred to:

MEMPHIS, TENN., February 3, 1916.

To the CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
War Department.

Have every hope and reason to believe that the flood will pass these districts without levee break, except at the extreme lower end of the White River district, in the vicinity of Laconia Circle, which will almost certainly be flooded. The Government levee at Hickman protecting the Reelfoot district is in prime condition, without the slightest indication of prospective trouble. This levee is due not more than an additional foot to 18 inches of water, to resist which the system is generally above this morning's stage from 4 to 6 feet. A small private levee at Hickman, entirely divorced from Federal responsibility or supervision, broke several days ago, with the result of flooding a few acres of the low portion of the town, as well as the yards and plant of the Mengel Box Co. This break bears no relation to the Government levee in rear. Unless something untoward occurs, the assumption is reasonable that these districts will escape overflow, except in vicinity of Laconia Circle.

MARKHAM, Engineers.

MEMPHIS, TENN., February 3, 1916.

CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
War Department, Washington, D. C.

Reference to conditions at Hickman, the flooded area is a small sector between the Government levee and the Hickman Hills of about one hundred-odd acres area. Of this amount, less than one-third involves small scattered town property and factory houses at the base of the Hickman Hills. The balance is farm land, mill sites, storage yards, etc. About 200 cottages, mainly one storied, have been vacated, the occupants being cared for by their friends in other portions of the town or in a tent camp established on the hills. Those requiring assistance, including 100 or more refugees from the backwater country across the river, total between six and seven hundred. Red Cross has representative on the ground, as has also the State of Kentucky, which has provided tents. Provisions are at hand in ample amount and can be readily augmented. The situation is, of course, distressing to those immediately involved, but is purely local and is in no sense or degree acute. No suffering of any kind exists, nor at present is there any possibility of such. The problem is of such relatively small magnitude as to be squarely and exclusively a responsibility for the community and the State, by which it should be readily handled. Assuming your desire for an expression of opinion, I see no possible occasion for intervention by the Federal Government at this time.

MARKHAM, Engineers.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., February 4, 1916.

CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
United States Army, Washington:

Senator RANSDALL and Representative MARTIN request telegraphic information of levee situation below New Orleans. Wired them information telegraphed to your office, situation as follows: Am giving high-water protection as far as Socola Canal, 50 miles right bank, and Nestor Canal, 55 miles, left bank below New Orleans. Prospects are that levees will hold as far as protected; available balances approximately $10,000 for each bank, but too small to justify extension of protection; possible to protect further on right bank at heavy expense, but would require more funds. Levees below Socola Canal are deficient in grade and section and are exposed to wave action. Prospects of holding these levees depend largely upon winds on left bank; only sea marsh and oyster industry affected by crevasses now flowing; conditions are due to September storm and subsequent rises.

CAPLES, Engineers.

VICKSBURG, MISS., February 5, 1916.

CONGWAR, Washington, D. C.:

Levees being subjected to severe test but no point specially endangered yet. Excellent chance of holding line if white population will put up proper fight. Can give employment and subsistence to all persons in flooded parts of Arkansas. Have already offered such assistance and am extending further offers. At present am having to pay fancy prices for labor to hold commission levees on Arkansas River. Arkansas authorities advised by my assistant several days ago that Government boats would proceed to any point where life was in danger. It would materially help situation if all hope of free rations were squelched.

SLATTERY.

MEMPHIS, TENN., February 5, 1916.

CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
War Department, Washington, D. C.:

Cairo crested last night at 53⅘ and shows fall this morning of one-tenth. Upper Mississippi and entire Ohio falling except at Paducah, which should be at a stand to-day. Cairo gauge should continue to fall. Weather conditions throughout drainage basins suggest no probability of any resumption of rainfall in a number of days. Reports from levees throughout these districts are uniformly most favorable and suggest no probability of levee breaks or overflow. Lower White River district is, of course, covered with back water. As to this backwater situation, relief measures are understood to be in progress and to be satisfactorily effective. I am in receipt of the following telegram from planter of standing in White River district, which is indicative of the sentiment of substantial representatives of the community:

"The representative farmers of this county are unalterably opposed to any plan providing free rations or tents for refugees at Helena, as all are capable of taking care of themselves or their tenants. Government aid only serves to demoralize labor now working on levees, and makes it difficult to handle the labor after water goes down. Our chief interests is in holding the levees and not in selling supplies to the Government. Kindly oppose any such plan if presented for your recommendation."

MARKHAM, Engineers.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a telegram from the governor of the State of Arkansas, dealing with the situation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a telegram from the governor of Arkansas respecting the flood situation. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, February 7, 1916, at 12 o'clock noon.

We come before Thee, Almighty God, to ask for Thy highest and best gift, the gift of the spirit of Thy Son. With Thy holy spirit within us our darkness is turned to light, our sorrow is turned to joy; death is but the entering into life. We seek Thy spirit, which is grace in our hearts, that we may perform the duties of life with Thy spirit and walk as heroes and conquerors through all the difficulties of the life that Thou hast given to us. Guide us this day with Thy spirit's grace and power. For Christ's sake. Amen.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BOSTON, MASS., February 1, 1916.

Hon. HENRY C. LODGE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At a meeting called at Tremont Temple, Sunday January 30, 1916, to consider "The duty of Americans in the war," the following resolutions were adopted, with a vote of 2,300 to 3:

"Resolved, That we, American citizens, spared from the horrors of war by conditions which we can not attribute to our own virtue, deem it incumbent upon us to make public declaration of those principles of faith and purpose which sustain the cause of civilization.

"Resolved, That we pledge to the President our support and service in any action that the fearless protection of our national interests may require, or that our rightful place among nations may demand.

"Resolved, That while we approve the firm and open action by our Government aiming to preserve the rights of neutrals, we deplore any appearance of valuing commercial interests as highly as human lives; and especially do we repudiate the suggestion that any monetary payment can compensate for the murder of noncombatants at sea.

"Resolved, That a national neutrality does not forbid us, either as individuals or as a Nation, to express our condemnation of any warfare that outrages international treaties or violates the territory of nations which seek only to maintain their independence and to protect their homes.

"Resolved, That we protest against every effort, whether among the people or in the Government, to restrict or suppress the export of munitions of war to any belligerent, since such restriction or suppression of commerce must, under the conditions which the war has developed, constitute an evident, if not an avowed, act of national partisanship.

"Resolved, That we are inflexibly opposed to any policy which may represent that we dare not protest against wrongs which we condemn, or that we hesitate, at the risk of life, to defend our flag, and those who have the right to its protection, or to take our just part in the enforcemen of those principles of humanity without which there can be no peace or justice."

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNIVERSITY OF MONTANA,
Missoula, January 30, 1916.

Hon. HENRY L. MYERS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: My attention has recently been directed by State Auditor William Keating to Senate bill 1738, which was introduced by you in the Senate of the United States under date of December 13, 1915. The Montana Forest School is, of course, deeply interested in the proposed enactment of this law, and it is, in connection with Senator WALSH'S bill to appropriate public lands to the State of Montana for the benefit of the school, the most important matter which has ever affected our school.

This matter is receiving a great deal of publicity in Montana, and the proposal that through these acts the Government shall aid the Montana Forest School seems to meet with the enthusiastic approval of the press of the State, regardless of the partisan nature of many of the newspapers.

It occurs to me that it might be of some assistance to you in furthering the passage of this act if you had some of the facts regarding the value of this school to the Government, and particularly to the Forest Service of the Department of Agriculture.

There is every reason why the Federal Government should assist the Montana Forest School. This school more than any other school in the United States has for a primary object the training of forest officers of the United States Forest Service. We have enrolled this year 92 students, of whom nearly one-half are forest rangers and forest guards and other employees of the Forest Service.

Three of the professors of the faculty of the forest school were formerly forest supervisors of national forests, and our school is particularly well equipped for the training of forest officers. The location of the school is also peculiarly favorable for this purpose. The school is within 50 miles of 8 national forests and the timber reserve of the Flathead Indian Reservation and the timber reserve of Fort Missoula, and is within 100 miles of 17 national forests, 2 Indian timber reservations, and a national park.

In connection with the regular four years' course in forestry, each winter a short course of 14 weeks is offered, known as the ranger school, for the sole purpose of training forest officers who are in the employ of the Government. The 1915 session of the ranger school enrolled 30 forest rangers, forest guards, and other employees of the Government, and the school this winter enrolls 42 such students. Although the Department of Agriculture allows the district forester and his subordinates to deliver a total of not to exceed 30 lectures each year in the school, the State has absolutely no other aid from the Government in this work of training Government employees.

Apart from the work which we are actually doing in training employees of the Government, the forest school is performing a very important duty in the way of building up public sentiment in favor of forest conservation and the protection of national forests, and in improving the relations between the Forest Service and the people of Montana.

Forest officers who come to the forest school at the University of Montana do so entirely at their own expense and with a complete loss of salary while they are in attendance at our school and with, in fact, very little encouragement from the Forest Service. As you well know, it is with considerable difficulty that the State of Montana has been able to afford the present cost of the forest school. We have had to get along with only a very little of the equipment which we actually need, and all of our work is being carried on in a small frame building which was erected at a cost of only $2,650, although the school now enrolls 92 students, and will enroll next year about 150 students. In another year we shall need room very badly and shall also need an increased teaching force to give the training which is planned.

I have recently sent to Senator WALSH a large number of newspaper clippings, news items, editorials, press notices, and the like, all of which show the relation between the forest school and the Government Forest Service, or which refer to the training which is being given by this school to officers and employees of the Government.

Unfortunately I had only one copy of each of these clippings, and am unable to furnish a set for each of the Montana Senators. If such data and information is of any assistance to you in securing the passage of your bill you can probably secure the clippings from Senator WALSH.

I shall be very grateful indeed to you if you will inform me of anything that I can do to help you secure the enactment of this proposed law, or to assist you in any way by furnishing information, detailed data, and the like. I am sending to you under separate cover copies of the bulletin or catalogue of our school, which show very plainly the value to the Government of the training which we are giving to forest officers.

Very sincerely, yours, DORR SKEELS, Dean.

Mr. MYERS. I present resolutions of the Havre, Mont., Chamber of Commerce, in favor of the passage of Senate bill 2381, granting to various States public lands for the construction, repair, and maintenance of public roads. I ask that the resolutions may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved, That we, the directors of the Havre Chamber of Commerce (Inc.), of Havre, Hill County, Mont., are strongly in favor of the passage of Senate bill No. 2381 introduced in the United States Senate by Senator HENRY L. MYERS, of Montana, deeming it to be highly beneficial to the interests of the citizens of Montana.

Resolved, That the secretary be instructed to furnish a copy of this resolution to each of Montana's Representatives in Congress.

H. ARCHIBALD, President.
T. E. MCCROSKEY, Secretary.

Mr. MYERS. I also present a letter in the nature of a petition from J. C. Howser praying for an appropriation of $1,000,000 for the Flathead reclamation project in that State. I ask that the petition be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the PRESIDENT AND CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: As one of the unit holders, occupying land within the Flathead Project, I desire to submit for your consideration the following:

At the invitation of the Government I entered upon an irrigable unit embraced in the Flathead Project, under promise by the Government that my land would be irrigated either in whole or in part, and after more than five years of watchful and patient waiting this project is now about 25 per cent completed, and as a result of the Government's failure to carry out its express and implied pledges made to us at the time we made entry, many of the unit holders have been compelled to temporarily or permanently abandon their homes.

We maintain that the treatment accorded to us has been very unfair and not in harmony with the promises made us when we settled upon these arid lands, and we can see no good reason for the Government's procrastinating methods in dealing with this project up to this time. It is to the interest of both the Indian and white man that this project be prosecuted more vigorously, and the lands will amply stand for all construction and maintenance charges provided the work is carried on in an economical and businesslike manner.

All funds expended in connection with the project are reimbursable either to the Indian or the Government, and the sooner this reclamation scheme is completed the sooner the Indian will be reimbursed for the money he has invested on account of same.

In view of the foregoing facts, I respectfully request that Congress grant an appropriation for at least a million dollars for construction work on this project during the ensuing year.

Respectfully submitted.

J. C. HOWSER.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ATLANTA, GA., January 31, 1916.

Hon. HOKE SMITH,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: The board of education of the city of Atlanta is considering the advisability of introducing military training in the public high schools for boys.

I have written The Adjutant General and the commanding general, Eastern Department, to inquire if the Government will furnish the city an officer and the necessary guns and equipment.

If it is not legal for the Government to furnish an officer and equipment for public high schools, can you not have the law so amended that it can be done?

There are approximately 1,300 boys now in attendance in the high schools of Atlanta. Any aid that you may give the city in establishing this department will be greatly valued.

Very truly, yours,

W. F. DYKES,
Supervisor Atlanta High Schools.

NATIONAL-DEFENSE SECRETS.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I introduce a bill to prevent the disclosure of national-defense secrets, which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. To accompany the bill I present a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, which I ask to have printed and referred to the same committee.

The bill (S. 4307) to prevent the disclosure of national-defense secrets was read twice by its title.

There being no objection, the bill and accompanying letter were referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A bill (S. 4307) to prevent the disclosure of national-defense secrets.

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to prevent the disclosure of national-defense secrets," approved March 3, 1911, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows: That whoever without proper authority procures or attempts to procure, either individually or by collusion, information of any kind in any form relating to the national defense at any place within the United States or subject to the jurisdiction thereof; or so receives or assents to receive any such information from any unauthorized person; or whoever, having possession of or control over any such information, communicates or attempts or agrees to communicate the same to any person not authorized to receive it, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 2. That all information of a confidential character communicated by any officer, representative, agent, or employee of the Government to any contractor or any officer, agent, or employee of any contractor for constructing, manufacturing, or supplying for the Military or the Naval Establishments any vessel, building, structure, article, supplies, or thing shall be regarded as included in information respecting the national defense within the meaning of this act.

SEC. 3. That whoever communicates, or agrees or attempts to communicate, information of any kind in any form respecting the national defense to any foreign Government or to any officer, representative, agent, or employee of any foreign Government, shall be imprisoned for not more than 10 years.

SEC. 4. That offenses against the provisions of this act committed upon the high seas or elsewhere outside of a judicial district shall be cognizable in the district where the offender is found or into which he is first brought; but offenses hereunder committed within the Philippine Islands shall be cognizable in any court of said islands having original jurisdiction of criminal cases with the same right of appeal as is given in other criminal cases where imprisonment exceeding one year forms a part of the penalty; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon such courts for such purpose.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 25, 1916.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Pursuant to understanding, I send you herewith a draft of a proposed amendment of the national defense secrets act of March 3, 1911.

It is believed that every provision of value that is embodied in the existing law is included in the proposed amendment, which has been made much simpler in language, and shorter.

The last provision in the first section of the existing law relating to breach of trust by anyone intrusted with information relating to the national defense has been omitted because its object seems to have been to define an offense separate in designation but not in substance from offenses specified in the previous parts of the same section, while it does not provide a separate or special punishment for the special offense. Moreover, presumably, it was designed to cover the cases of officers or enlisted men of the Army and the Navy who might betray secrets. Such a provision is not only not necessary, because such persons are amenable to court-martial for offenses of that kind and would in all probability receive condign punishment at the hands of a court-martial, but such a provision here would give ground for the contention by an accused person that the offense specified was thereby removed from the cognizance of courts-martial.

The second section of the proposed amendment covers in what is believed to be the best form the case of any person who might improperly divulge information furnished by the Government to a contractor for munitions or other things embodying confidential matters.

Sincerely, yours,

JOSEPHUS DANIELS, Secretary.

Hon. BENJAMIN R. TILLMAN,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate, or any subcommittee appointed by said committee, be, and is hereby, authorized and instructed to investigate and report to Congress what companies and corporations are engaged in the importation of said sisal and manila hemp and the production of binding twine, and to what extent, if any, they control the price thereof, and whether there are any combinations or agreements to fix and control the wholesale or retail prices of sisal and manila binding twine in the United States.

The committee is authorized to administer oaths, subpœna witnesses, and send for persons and papers in the prosecution of the said investigation.

THE COTTON BLOCKADE.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I also have a short article from the Daily Trade Record, of New York. It contains some extracts from the Newcastle Illustrated Chronicle, of England, showing that in Great Britain it is now recognized that cotton is no longer necessary in Germany for the manufacture of powder. It is also an English concession that the British Government placed cotton upon a contraband list as the result of popular clamor based upon a misapprehension of the facts. The article is quite short, but the information is valuable, and instead of presenting it in the shape of a discussion on the floor I should like to have it printed in the RECORD. I think we will all be interested to have this valuable information.

There being no objection, the article was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Daily Trade Record, New York, Feb. 5, 1916.]

ENGLAND BASED COTTON BLOCKADE ON OBSOLETE CHEMISTRY, SAYS BRITON—GERMAN SCIENTIFIC ADVANCEMENT SUCH THAT SUBSTITUTES FOR POWDER MAKING WERE DEVELOPED LONG AGO, ASSERTS DR. BUDDE—SIR WILLIAM RAMSAY ALSO ADMITS THAT CAMPAIGN TO MAKE COTTON CONTRABAND PROBABLY WAS FOUNDED ON FALSE PREMISES—A GERMAN VIEWPOINT.

Great Britain made cotton absolute contraband of war several months ago on the theory that the cutting off of cotton supplies would diminish Germany's stocks of one of the essential constituents of smokeless powder.

The contraband order was issued following a vigorous campaign, led by the veteran English chemist, Sir William Ramsay, whose insistence that the cotton supply was vital to Germany's military needs won over practically every section of the British press to the support of the contraband order.

Since the contraband order was issued, the impression has been steadily gaining ground in Great Britain that this step was based upon false assumption, as it has been thoroughly demonstrated that Germany is making gunpowder not out of cotton but of wood pulp.

It has been ascertained that German chemists knew a great deal more about the manufacture of explosives from wood pulp than they had revealed prior to the war, and that they were fully prepared to eliminate cotton from their calculations altogether, it having been assumed by them that the cotton supply probably would be cut off by a British blockade.

Notwithstanding this belated knowledge on the part of the Britons, they have refrained from acknowledging possible error in their conclusions as to the military necessity of cotton to the Germans.

To admit that the alleged primary cause of the cotton blockade—military necessity—is based upon error due to poor chemical knewledge, would lead to a reopening of the entire contraband agitation, in the opinion of Great Britain, and would weaken the British position decidedly.

Nevertheless, the British press is gradually printing the facts about the cotton fiasco, but without much ado, though there seems to be a disposition to criticize the authorities because they did not know of Germany's success with wood pulp.

It is entirely probable that the British authorities did know of the German use of wood pulp, and, in fact, the Government repeatedly endeavored to dodge the contraband order and was sponsor for the publication of a statement that cotton had been supplanted by wood pulp in German powder factories, but the British people and press refused to accept this information as true and raised such a vigorous cry that the contraband order was issued.

The British newspapers, particularly the provincial journals, have just printed a syndicated interview with Dr. C. Budde, of Sunderland, chief research chemist of the Hendon Paper Works Co. (Ltd.), an authority on wood pulp. The following extracts from this interview are republished from the Newcastle (England) Illustrated Chronicle:

"Dr. Budde stated the Germans are nothing if not thorough; they have been preparing for this war, and it becomes more and more evident that they have considered no detail too unimportant to take its proper place in their great and elaborate military system. It is, then, absolutely inconceivable that they should have overlooked such an important contingency as that they might be cut off from their supply of cotton.

"Dr. Budde believes that they not only considered this possibility, but provided against it in such a manner that the declaration of cotton as contraband has had very little, if any, effect on their producing explosives, whatever may have been the effect of it in other directions.

"When cotton became contraband the Germans were evidently prepared; but Dr Budde thinks they were perhaps not prepared to manufacture explosives on the scale the war has proved to be necessary.

"ONLY TEMPORARILY HAMPERED.

"Because of the extra demand, Germany may have been temporarily hampered by the loss of cotton, as the process of producing the gunpowder with the wood-pulp substitute is more involved and more gradual. More plant and more apparatus is required, but he has no doubt whatever that the Germans are now employing such methods on a large scale.

"'I myself,' he observed, 'have made a fairly large number of experiments and can, from personal experience, testify to the fact that excellent powder can be made from wood pulp and is in every respect equal to that made from cotton. I will even go so far as to say that, although straw pulp is inferior to wood pulp, it is still possible to make quite satisfactory powders from straw pulp, which is available to the Germans in very large quantities.'

"Dr. Budde quoted the evidence of eminent scientists to support his views, one of whom, W. F. Reid, F. I. C., F. C. S., of Fieldside, Addlestone, asserts it is ridiculous to state explosives can not be manufactured without cotton, for, as a matter of fact, one of the most popular smokeless powders has been made from wood pulp for more than 30 years.

"SIR WILLIAM RAMSAY ON THE 'TRAGEDY.'

"It has been stated that Dr. Budde's views are in conflict with those of the eminent scientist, Sir William Ramsay, but Dr. Budde produced to our representative an article wherein Sir William observes: 'I quite agree that it is highly probable that the Germans are making nitrolignose from wood pulp. This is the tragedy of our always being too late. I quite agree that we should declare wood pulp contraband.'

"And then, laments the famous scientist, he has not the time to lead an agitation for such a declaration.

"Herein Dr. Budde points a difficulty which leads him to think the declaration of wood pulp as contraband would make little difference to the Germans, as in the case (apparently) of a similar step with regard to cotton.

"Germany is a country rich in its supplies of wood and will also be able to receive supplies from certain outside sources so long as German shipping is at liberty to use the Baltic Sea. German chemists know more than they would publish.

"WOOD PULP CHEAPER.

"Advancing his theory on a new ground, quite apart from the possibility or otherwise of obtaining cotton, Dr. Budde said the question was obviously one of economy, and economy is a particularly strong point with the Germans. The value of cotton is something about £50 per ton—more than double the prewar price—while that of wood pulp is approximately £11. If the statement be correct that the market value of cotton in Germany at present is over 1s. per pound and that they are daily using about 3,000 tons of cellulose in the form of explosives, then they would be able to save more than £250,000 per day by using wood instead of cotton. Great Britain would save about half of this amout if the same quantity of nitrocellulose were manufactured here.

"EMBARGO OF NO CONSEQUENCE.

"'Then,' added the pressmen, 'you don't think the embargo on cotton has had much effect on the duration of the war?'

"'In my opinion, it has not been of the slightest consequence,' answered the doctor."

A GERMAN VIEW.

The Manchester Textile Mercury publishes the following note on the cotton blockade from a German viewpoint:

"According to the Local Anzeiger, Herr Alfred Lohmann, speaking as president of the Bremen Chamber of Commerce, stated with regard to the cutting off of Germany's supply of raw materials by the British Navy, that 'the production of ammunition is not being impeded by the cotton shortage. Germany's forests supply cellulose, which is much more suitable for manufacturing powder than is cotton. Indeed, after the war, the munition factories will buy no more cotton in America.'"

ADDRESS BY SAMUEL GOMPERS (S. DOC. NO. 311).

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I desire to ask to have printed as a public document two papers. One is an address delivered by Mr. Samuel Gompers on the 18th of January, 1916, on the subject of adequate preparedness for national defense. The other is a letter written by him on the next day, January 19, to the president of the National Security League, on the same subject. I ask that they be printed together as one document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ADDRESS BY G. H. PERRIS (S. DOC. NO. 312).

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I ask to have printed as a public document a very short address delivered at the World's Peace Conference at The Hague, in 1913, by Mr. G. H. Perris, on the peril of private munitions plants. It consists of but a few pages.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have had a statement prepared showing the public buildings occupied, in course of construction, and authorized, used, or intended for use in whole or in part as post offices, also sites for same, purchased or authorized. It has been compiled from the annual report of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Printing with a view to having it printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That action will be taken.

SPEECH BY SENATOR PORTER J. M'CUMBER (S. DOC. NO. 313).

Mr. GRONNA. I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a Senate document a speech delivered by my colleague [Mr. MCCUMBER] at the Tri-State Grain Growers' Convention, at Fargo, N. Dak., January 20, 1914.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3331, known as the water-power development bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3331) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906, as amended by the act approved June 23, 1910, and to provide for the improvement and development of waterways for the uses of interstate and foreign commerce.

Mr. SHIELDS. I ask that the bill may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 23, 1910, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. That the United States hereby authorizes any of the persons as hereinafter defined, after obtaining the permit of the Secretary of War, as hereinafter provided, to construct, maintain, and operate a dam or dams or diversion structures and accessory works for the development and improvement of navigation and for water power or other purposes across, in, or along any of the navigable waters of the United States; and such grantee and such permit shall at all times be subject to the provisions of this act, and also subject to such conditions as the Secretary of War shall, in accordance with the provisions of this act, make a part of such permit; that the word 'persons' as used in this act shall be construed to mean both the singular and plural, as the case demands, and shall be construed to mean political subdivisions of States, municipal corporations, corporations, companies, and associations; and the term 'grantee' herein shall mean any such persons to whom shall be granted a permit as herein provided: Provided, That when the power to be developed by the project and improvement of the stream for navigation is used or to be used for a public utility purpose or purposes the grantee must be a municipal corporation, or a political subdivision, or other agencies of a State, or a public-service agent of a State, or a public-utility corporation created and organized under the laws of a State or the United States, authorized to engage in the business of furnishing water, heat, or electric energy for public or private use, and whose rates and charges and service shall be subject to regulation by the laws of the State or a duly constituted commission or other agency of said State; but in any case where the State has not made provision for authorizing municipal corporations, political subdivisions, or other agencies of the State or public-utility corporations or agencies to engage in said business, the qualifications of the grantee prescribed in this proviso shall not apply; and no transfer of any such permit or of the rights thereunder granted, except by trust deed or mortgage issued for the bona fide purpose of financing the business of such grantee, shall be made by any grantee, without the approval of the Secretary of War, to any transferee not having the qualifications herein specified for a grantee hereunder; and any successor or assign of the rights of any such grantee, whether by voluntary transfer, judicial sale, or foreclosure sale, or otherwise, shall be subject to all the conditions of the permit under which such rights are held by such grantee, and also subject to all the provisions and conditions of this act to the same extent as though such successor or assign were the grantee hereunder.

"SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War may grant a permit or permits for such dam or dams and accessory works upon the following conditions:

"First. The plans and specifications for such dam and all accessory works, together with such drawings of the proposed construction and such maps of the proposed location as may be required for a full understanding of the subject, shall be submitted to the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers, and when approved shall be made a part of such permit; and thereafter no change in such plans or specifications shall be made except as such change shall be approved and made a part of such permit by the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers.

"Second. The project adopted, including the plans, specifications, and location for any dam and accessory work, shall be such as in the judgment of the Secretary of War shall be best adapted to a comprehensive plan for the improvement of the waterway in question for the uses of navigation and for the full development of its water power and for other beneficial public purposes, and best adapted to conserve and utilize the water resources of the region in the interests of navigation, the needs of the Government, and the public welfare.

"Third. As part of the conditions of such permit the Secretary of War may, in so far as he deems the same reasonably necessary to promote the present and future interests of navigation and consistent with a reasonable investment cost to such grantee, include any or all of the following provisions or requirements: (a) That such grantee shall, to the extent necessary to preserve navigation facilities at least equivalent to those existing prior to the construction of such dam, construct, in whole or in part, without expense to the United States, in connection with any such dam a lock or locks, booms, sluices, or other structures for navigation purposes, in accordance with plans, specifications, and conditions approved by the Secretary of War and made a part of such permit; (b) that such grantee shall furnish free of cost power for the operation of the same; (c) that in case such navigation facilities shall not be made a part of such original construction at the expense of the grantee, then, whenever the United States shall deem such navigation facilities necessary, the grantee shall convey to the United States free of cost such of its land and its right of way, and permit such control of pools as may be required for such navigation facilities, and shall furnish free of cost power for the operation of the same; (d) that such grantee shall reimburse the United States for the cost of any investigation necessary for the approval of the plans as herein provided and for such supervision of construction as may be necessary in the interest of the United States; (e) that such grantee shall pay to the United States reasonable charges in consideration of the benefits accruing to and used by such grantee through the construction, operation, and maintenance by the United States of headwater improvements, including storage reservoirs, on any such waterway, such charges to be fixed from time to time by the Secretary of War and to be based upon a reasonable compensation proportionate to the benefit actually received by the grantee by reason of any increase of flow past or over the water-power structures artificially caused by such headwater improvement, and all moneys received from such charges are hereby reserved and appropriated as a special fund in the Treasury to be known as 'the headwater improvement fund,' from which fund expenditures for headwater improvements and maintenance may be made by and in the discretion of the Secretary of War; (f) that such grantee in the construction, maintenance, and operation of such dam or diversion structure and accessory works may, with the authority of the Secretary of War, occupy and use, to the extent necessary for the project, any lands of the United States, including the public lands; and any part of the public lands may, on certification by the Secretary of War that the same is required for navigation purposes, be withdrawn by the President for said purpose as provided in the act entitled 'An act to authorize the President of the United States to make withdrawal of public lands in certain cases, approved June 25, 1910'; and for any land of the United States so used and occupied the grantee shall pay to the United States such reasonable charges, based upon its value as land, as may be fixed by the Secretary of War; and in fixing such charges consideration shall be taken of the benefits accruing from the use and occupation of such lands to the interests of navigation, as well as to the business of said grantee.

"In fixing such conditions, or any of them, the Secretary of War shall also take into consideration the probable cost to such grantee of construction and maintenance and operation and the probable consumers' rate required to produce a reasonable return upon the investment required of such grantee. As between contesting applicants for a permit hereunder having the legal qualifications required by this act, and being equally well qualified to improve or develop waterways for the uses of interstate or foreign commerce, preference shall be given to that applicant which is best qualified to expedite and realize the maximum useful development of all the water resources of the region; and as between such contesting applicants which appear equally well qualified in such respect, then preference shall be given to that applicant which has first complied with the laws of the State or States in which the dam or diversion structure is to be constructed. In granting permits hereunder and fixing conditions thereof, and in prescribing rules and regulations as to the maintenance and operation of any structure to which this act is applicable, the Secretary of War, before acting, shall have the report and advice of the Chief of Engineers.

"SEC. 3. That the control of the level of the pools above and below such dam and of the currents developed therein and of the flow of the water over and past such dam and the operation of navigation facilities which shall be constructed as a part of or in connection with any such dam, whether at the expense of such grantee or of the United States, shall at all times be subject to such rules and regulations as shall be deemed by the Secretary of War to be reasonable and necessary in the interests of navigation. Such rules and regulations may include the maintenance and operation by such grantee, at its own expense of such lights and other signals as may be directed by the Secretary of War and such other lights and signals and such fishways as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce, and for failure to comply with any such rule or regulation such grantee shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished as provided in section 8 of this act.

"SEC. 4. That any such permit shall not have the effect to relieve the grantee from liability for any damage occasioned to the property of others by the construction, maintenance, or operation of any dam or of the works appurtenant or accessory thereto, and the United States shall in no event be liable therefor. When a grantee hereunder is a municipal corporation, or a political subdivision of a State, or a public-service agent of a State, or a public utility or service corporation, it may acquire the right to use or damage any lands or property of others necessary to the construction, maintenance, or operation of any such dam or diversion structure or of the works appurtenant or accessory thereto by the exercise of the right of eminent domain in the district court of the United States for the district in which such land or other property may be located, or in the State courts. The practice and procedure in any action or proceeding brought for that purpose in the district court of the United States shall conform as nearly as may be with the practice and procedure in similar actions or proceedings in the courts of the State where the property is situated.

"SEC. 5. That unless revoked for cause as provided in section 8 of this act the rights under any such permit shall continue for a period of 50 years from and after the date of the completing and putting into commercial operation of the initial installation required by the Secretary of War, as provided in section 9 of this act, and after the expiration of said 50 years such rights shall continue until revoked for cause as provided in section 8 of this act or until terminated and compensation has been made to such grantee for its property as provided in section 6 of this act.

"SEC. 6. That at any time after the expiration of said 50 years the United States may terminate the rights hereunder granted upon the giving to the grantee of one year's notice in writing of such termination, and upon the taking over by the United States of all the property of the grantee dependent in whole or in part for its usefulness upon the rights hereunder granted, which are necessary and appurtenant, or acquired and valuable or serviceable in the distribution of water, or in the generation, transmission, and distribution of power, and upon paying to the grantee the fair value of said property, together with the cost to the grantee of the lock or locks, or other aids to navigation, and all other capital expenditures, required by the United States, and assuming all contracts entered into by the grantee which have the approval of the duly constituted public authority having jurisdiction thereof, or which were entered into in good faith and at a reasonable rate, in view of all the circumstances existing at the time such contracts were made. The fair value of said property and the reasonableness and good faith of such contracts shall be determined by agreement between the Secretary of War and the grantee, and in the event of their failure to reach unanimous agreement, then by proceedings in equity instituted by the United States in the district court of the United States in the district within which any portion of such dam may be located. In the determination of the value of said property for any purpose as between such grantee and the United States or any State no value shall be claimed by or allowed to the grantee for the rights hereunder granted.

"SEC. 7. That whenever all or any part of the power produced at any dam or diversion structure authorized hereunder is offered or disposed of by the grantee to the public, or for a public-utility purpose, all charges, rates, and service by any grantee hereunder shall be subject to regulation in accordance with the laws of the State within which the service is rendered: Provided, That where the said power or any part of it shall enter into interstate or foreign commerce, the rates, charges, and services made and rendered, shall be reasonable, nondiscriminatory, and adequate to the public; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon and vested in the Interstate Commerce Commission to enforce this provision, upon the complaint of any person aggrieved, in the manner and according to the procedure and practice of that commission in fixing and regulating the rates and charges of railway companies, the grantee to have the same rights of hearing, defense, and review as said companies in such cases: And provided further, That in the valuation for rate-making purposes of the property of any such grantee there shall be included the cost to such grantee of the construction of the lock or locks, or other aids to navigation, and all other capital expenditures required by the United States, but no value shall be claimed or allowed for the rights hereby granted: And provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent any State in which such dam with its appurtenant property is located, or in which such business is to be conducted, from making and enforcing any lawful regulations, with respect to the property or business of such grantee; and the plant and its appurtenances of the grantee, including, real, personal, and mixed property, constituting the same and used for the generation and distribution of power, or for other purposes, shall be subject to taxation under the laws of the State where situated as other similar property within the State, while owned by the grantee, or any subsequent owner who may acquire the same by purchase from the grantee, or other person, or under any proceeding herein authorized and provided for; but in the assessment of the property for taxation the value of the dam or dams and other structures and appurtenances constructed or used primally for the purpose of developing and improving navigation shall not be estimated and included.

"SEC. 8. That any grantee who shall fail or refuse to comply with any of the provisions of this act or any of the conditions made a part of any permit issued hereunder or any regulation or lawful order of the Secretary of War, made in accordance with the provisions of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000, in addition to other penalties herein prescribed or provided by law and in such proceedings each party shall have the right of appeal as in other cases; and every month such grantee shall remain in default after written notice from the Secretary of War shall be deemed a new offense and subject such grantee to additional penalties therefor; and in addition to said penalties the Attorney General may, on request of the Secretary of War, institute proper proceedings in equity in the district court of the United States in the district in which such structure or any of its accessory works are, in whole or in part, situated, for the purpose of having such violation stopped by injunction, mandamus, or other process; and any such district court shall have jurisdiction over all such proceedings and shall have the power to make and enforce all writs, orders, and decrees necessary to compel the compliance with the lawful orders and regulations of the Secretary of War and the performance of any condition imposed under the provisions of this act; and if the unlawful maintenance and operation continues after such conviction has been affirmed on appeal or the right of appeal has expired and is deemed by the court to be such as shall require, in the public interest, a decree revoking all rights and privileges held under authority of this act, the court may decree such revocation, and in case of such a decree the court may wind up the business of such grantee conducted under the rights in question and may decree the sale of the dam or diversion structure and all appurtenant property constructed or acquired under authority of this act, and distribute the proceeds to the parties entitled to the same, and may make and enforce such other and further orders and decrees as equity and justice may require; and in case of such sale the vendee shall take the rights and privileges and shall perform the duties which belonged to the grantee, and shall assume all outstanding obligations and liabilities of the grantee which the court may deem equitable in the premises; and in case no purchaser be found the court shall, by the appointment of a receiver or otherwise, exercise all jurisdiction necessary for the protection and administration or disposition of the property and for the equitable execution of this act.

"SEC. 9. That the grantee shall commence the construction of the dam and accessory works within two years from the date of the permit herein provided, and shall thereafter, in good faith and with due diligence, prosecute such construction; and shall, within such time as may be provided in the permit, complete and put in commercial operation such part of the ultimate development as the Secretary of War shall deem necessary to supply the reasonable needs of the then available market; and shall, from time to time thereafter, construct such portion of the balance of such ultimate development as said Secretary of War may direct and within the time specified by him so as to supply adequately the reasonable market demands until such ultimate development shall be completed; and extensions of the periods for the commencement and completion of the construction may be granted by the Secretary of War, when, in his judgment, the same are not incompatible with the public interest. In case the grantee shall not commence actual construction within the time herein prescribed, or as extended by the Secretary of War, then the authority as to such grantee shall terminate, and in case any dam or diversion structure and accessory works be not completed within the time specified in the permit or extended as herein provided, then the Attorney General, upon the request of the Secretary of War, shall institute proper proceedings in the proper district court of the United States for the revocation of said authority, the sale of the works constructed, and such other equitable relief as the case may demand, as provided for in section 8 of this act.

"SEC. 10. The Secretary of War may lease to any applicant having the capacity of grantee as herein defined, and having complied with the laws of the State in which a dam is constructed or to be constructed by the United States, the right to utilize the surplus water power over and above that required for navigation at any navigation dam now or hereafter constructed, either with or without contribution by the applicant, and owned by the United States, and on such terms as may be deemed by the Secretary of War for the best interests of the United States, and reasonable and fair to both parties, and in awarding such lease preference shall be given to a municipal corporation, a political subdivision of a State or a public service agent of a State, or any part thereof, provided the plans of the same are deemed by the Secretary of War to be adapted to conserve and utilize in the public interest the navigation and water resources of the region; and in contests between other applicants the Secretary of War shall likewise give preference to the applicant whose plans he finds and determines are best adapted to develop, conserve, and utilize in the public interest the navigation and water resources to be affected; and all such leases and the parties thereto and the terms and conditions thereof shall be reported annually to Congress. The charges and rents arising from such lease or leases are hereby reserved and appropriated as a special fund in the Treasury to be expended for the maintenance of said dams and the further improvement of waterways in which the same may be situated under the direction of the Secretary of War.

"SEC. 11. That this act shall not affect the rights of any person, company, or corporation as to the construction, maintenance, or operation of any structures heretofore constructed or upon which construction has been begun, under permit or approval of the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers or other authority heretofore lawfully granted: Provided, That in the operation of any such structures and accessory works the provisions of sections 3, 7, 8, 12, and 13 of this act shall apply to the same extent as if such structures had been authorized under this act, and all conflicting provisions relating to the operation of said structures and accessory works contained in any authority heretofore lawfully granted are hereby altered, amended, or repealed so as to conform with the provisions of said sections 3, 7, 8, 12, and 13 of this act: Provided further, That upon application by any person, company, or corporation having the capacity of grantee as herein defined, which is now constructing or operating any structures herein specified across, in, or along any navigable waters of the United States under authority heretofore lawfully granted, the Secretary of War may issue to such applicant a permit in accordance with the provisions of this act, and in such a case the provisions of this act shall become extended to such applicant as a grantee hereunder: And provided further, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to irrigation or power dams or grants to municipal corporations affecting the use of water or water power for municipal purposes or to other projects approved or erected under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of Agriculture upon the public lands of the United States.

"SEC. 12. That the works constructed and maintained under authority of this act shall not be owned, leased, trusteed, possessed, controlled, or operated by any device or in any manner so that they form part of or in any way effect any combination in the form of an unlawful trust or monopoly, or form the subject of any unlawful contract or conspiracy to limit the output of electric energy or in restraint of trade with foreign nations or between two or more States or Territories, or within any one State or Territory, in the generation, sale, or distribution of electric energy.

"SEC. 13. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved: Provided, That in case any grantee hereunder shall, at the time of such alteration, amendment, or repeal, have exercised rights in accordance with this act, such rights and the property used thereunder shall be deemed property rights of such grantee, of which such grantee shall not be deprived by such alteration, amendment, or repeal, except upon the conditions provided in case of termination by section 6 of this act.

"SEC. 14. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed."

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the water-power bill be temporarily laid aside and that we take up for consideration Order of Business No. 3, being Senate bill 2520.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; I will wait until he gets through. I do not want him to yield. I wish the floor when he is through.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada asks unanimous consent that the water-power bill be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2520.

Mr. SMOOT. Both requests can not be acted upon at the same time.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, as soon as that request is submitted to the Senate, or before it is submitted, I wish the floor. I was watching when the request was made as to the original bill, and I never heard that request for unanimous consent submitted. If it was done, of course it was done, but I was listening and did not hear it.

Mr. President, I am unwilling to yield to the proposition that a mere notice that a particular bill is to be called up gives it any precedence over the bills on the calendar. I think we are entitled to go through the calendar and take up the bills as they are reached.

I have a bill ahead of this power bill in which I am very much interested. In fact, there are two or three bills in which I am very much interested. I have been waiting for the Senator from Nevada to get through with his bill, because it is ahead of the one I wished to press, and I thought he was entitled to finish it first. I wish to call attention to No. 18 of the Senate Calendar, being Senate bill 706. If the policy is to give notice that bills are to be called, I give notice that I will ask the consideration of Senate bill No. 706 immediately after the consideration of the bill now before the Senate; but I am not seriously intending to give notice, because I think we are entitled to dispose of bills on the calendar, and a mere notice should give no precedence.

If we are to give notice, and notice is to give precedence, then every Senator who has a bill he desires pressed, should give notice, and we should make up a new calendar by notices and not as the matters stand on the regular calendar. I give notice, but I do not desire it noted on the calendar, that hereafter I shall object to any precedence on account of a notice, and shall insist upon pressing Senate bill 706 in its order upon the calendar.

I will not object to the unanimous consent asked for by the Senator from Nevada, as I did not object to the unanimous consent asked for by the Senator from Tennessee. I do not object in the case of the Senator from Nevada because his bill heads our list, and I think it is entitled to precedence.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, in view of the motion of the Senator from Nevada, I ask unanimous consent that the bill now under consideration be laid aside until 2 o'clock, and that it then be proceeded with as the unfinished business.

Mr. STONE. That the bill be laid aside until what hour?

Mr. SHIELDS. Until 2 o'clock.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I can not consent to that. I am willing that it shall be laid aside, and that we shall dispose of the bill of the Senator from Nevada, and then return to the power bill; but let us get through with something. Let us get through with the bill of the Senator from Nevada, if we take it up.

Mr. SHIELDS. I will amend my request, and ask unanimous consent that the present bill may be laid aside until the bill of the Senator from Nevada is disposed of, and that then it be proceeded with as the unfinished business.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, why should not the Senator simply ask unanimous consent that the water-power bill be temporarily laid aside? Afterwards he can call it up at any time he desires; and I think that is the fairest notice to Members of the Senate. Then no Senator can say that it was brought up under a notice and that he was not present. I think the Senator ought to make his request in that way.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I agree that the proper request would be, as the Senator from Utah suggests, that the bill be laid aside temporarily. Perhaps the Senator may state that it is his purpose to call it up at 2 o'clock.

Mr. SMOOT. That is all right.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not want to stand in the way of the request of the Senator from Nevada to take up the bill proposed by him, but I do want to say that the resolution to print the report on the development of water power in the United States is a matter which I desire to ask to have considered at the earliest moment. I think it ought to be considered and disposed of now. It is a very important matter. If this material is to be printed at all it ought to be printed now, and I desire the Senate to act on the resolution just as soon as we can possibly reach it.

I do not know how long the bill the Senator from Nevada proposes to take up now will consume, and I do not feel inclined to object to it; but if I can do so, I propose, as soon as I can get the floor after that matter is out of the way, to ask for the consideration of the resolution to print the department's report on this subject.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah will state it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The bill which has just been read, as I understand, is not now the unfinished business.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We have no unfinished business now. At the close of the day——

Mr. SMOOT. This will be the unfinished business.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It will if we are considering it when we adjourn. I do not understand that unfinished business is established by order. It is a physical condition, is it not?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The question I desire to submit is whether or not this bill would become the unfinished business unless it were under consideration at the hour of 2 o'clock.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, as I understand, any proceedings had on this bill prior to 2 o'clock would not make it the unfinished business. You can not make it the unfinished business, as I understand, by proceedings on it prior to 2 o'clock; neither can you make it the unfinished business by motion. If we take it up and it is still under consideration after 2 o'clock it becomes the unfinished business.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That was my inquiry—whether it would not be necessary that the bill should be under consideration at the hour of 2 o'clock in order that it might become the unfinished business.

Mr. SHIELDS. If there is an objection to the motion I made, I move, then, that the bill be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I have no desire whatever to antagonize the consideration of the water-power bill; but I should like to say to the Senator from Tennessee and to the Senator from Nevada and to the Senate that as soon as the morning business is over—that is, at the hour of 2 o'clock—I should like the Senate to have a very short executive session. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] has just called my attention to a matter in which he is interested that must be acted upon somewhat early to-day to make it worth while to be acted upon at all. The executive session, if agreed to, I am sure will not occupy more than 5 or 10 minutes.

Mr. SHIELDS. I have no objection to an executive session at any time.

Mr. STONE. I should like very much, at 2 o'clock, to have a brief executive session.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah has propounded an inquiry to the Chair, which the Chair will answer with the proviso that upon additional light the Chair may be compelled to recede from its position. The Chair finds that once before while the present occupant has been here the Chair ruled that when there was no unfinished business before the Senate, and a bill was taken up prior to 2 o'clock, it was proper to continue the consideration of the bill beyond 2 o'clock, and that it became the unfinished business unless displaced by something else.

The present opinion of the Chair is that if the bill should be temporarily laid aside and something else taken up, and if the consideration of it should be resumed prior to the adjournment this evening, unless displaced on a motion to take up something else, the so-called power bill would be the unfinished business of the Senate.

That is the present opinion of the Chair. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to temporarily lay aside the bill. There being no objection, it is temporarily laid aside.

LANDS IN NEVADA.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] asks unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2520.

Mr. SMOOT. Why not modify the request so as to proceed to the consideration of the calendar under Rule VIII, and, of course, the Senator's bill being the first one, we can then proceed with it under Rule VIII until the other bill is taken up for consideration?

Mr. PITTMAN. That would be satisfactory to me, but I renew my request for the immediate consideration of Senate bill 2520, because it is the same as the modification suggested by the Senator from Utah, the bill being at the head of the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2520) granting to the State of Nevada 7,000,000 acres of land in said State for the use and benefit of the public schools of Nevada and the State University of the State of Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I am going to be as brief as I possibly can in regard to this bill. It has been debated for several days in a desultory way, but I wish to impress on the Senate that the measure is one of more than local importance. It means the development of millions of acres of land in the West.

I realize that when we ask for 7,000,000 acres of land to be granted to a western State for the purpose of education it sounds like an enormous grant, but when you realize that there are 70,000,000 acres of land in that State the grant does not appear so large. When you realize also that the unoccupied public lands in that State are larger than all the New England States and that the property held in private ownership is only about the size of the State of Connecticut the condition we are in is apparent. Imagine, for instance, all the New England States having to depend entirely upon the single State of Connecticut to support a government for that whole area. You have placed us in this position, and you have compelled us to accept a form of State government. It is essential that we carry on that State government and provide the laws to protect it, build roads, and incur all the other obligations that any other State must incur; and yet you deprive us of the only possible means of supporting the government, and that is the power of taxation.

Think for one instant of a State as large as all the New England States and only 5 per cent of the property in that State in private ownership. That is not just to the people of that State. The Government has not devised any means by which that property can go into private ownership. The Government has not devised any means that will induce individuals to acquire that land.

I wish Senators to understand that it is not the character of land that some of you are familiar with. It is fine soil, but there is no water. A man can not homestead land where there is no water. As a matter of fact, it can not be entered as desert land, because the records disclose the fact that there have been only about 300 desert-land entries taken up in that State since 1872. To be exact in the matter, there were 384 desert-land entries allowed since 1872 in the State of Nevada, where we have 70,000,000 acres of land.

It must be apparent from that record that the existing law will not induce the private ownership of land. You say to us, Why, then, grant it to the State if it is of that character? For this reason: In the first place, the State wants that land settled. It wants it made available for taxation. In the next place, it is entitled to the utilization of that land for the purpose of education.

There is a movement through this country, or rather through the western part of the country, looking to a demand for the transfer of all the public lands to the States. I want to state to you emphatically that I believe it is right. I am satisfied that the people of the Western States know better how to develop that land than people who have never been west of the Mississippi River.

We had a wild, crazy era of conservation sweep across this country. It started on a right theory and then the pendulum swung until instead of being conservation it was obstruction. To-day any effort that we make for legislation to develop that land is met by a charge that we are making an assault upon the public domain.

In a recent issue of the Washington Times I find this attack made upon all the western Senators. It is headed:

GENERAL ASSAULT UPON PUBLIC LANDS IN WEST ORGANIZING IN SENATE—WESTERN MEMBERS HAVE EYES ON BUNG OF BRAND-NEW PORK BARREL—BILLS INTRODUCED PROVIDE FOR TURNING OVER TO STATES 30,000,000 ACRES OF PUBLIC DOMAIN.

[By Judson C. Welliver.]

The Senate has its eye fixed on the bung of a brand-new pork barrel that is seemingly being set up by the Western States with the purpose of piping off a big layer of cream from the Federal milk can.

Uncle Sam having for a number of years manifested indisposition to separate himself from the remaining parts of the public domain with his old-time amiability, the Western States are organizing to get the public lands turned over to them for their administration and disposal.

GENERAL ASSAULT ORGANIZING.

The campaign has now developed to the point where it becomes apparent that a general assault on the public domain is organizing. Already bills have been introduced in the present Congress which provide for turning over to Western States about 30,000,000 acres of public lands. This is not a great area when compared to the 800,000,000 acres which still remain within the public domain. But when it is considered that perhaps half the public lands are of no practical value, and that these proposed grants would be selected from the good lands, it becomes evident that a considerable inroad on the remaining national estate is in sight.

For a number of years after the conservation movement had gained strength enough to command respect there was little effort at getting control of the public lands. But the last few years have seen a decline of interest in conservation measures. Something like a shock was given to advocates of this policy when the Senate Committee on Public Lands reported favorably a bill by Senator KEY PITTMAN, of Nevada, to cede to his State 7,000,000 acres of the public lands within the State. The bill was introduced on December 16 and reported the very next day. Then its progress was checked, and the other day, when it came up in the Senate, there developed a discussion which made clear that at least there will be a determined effort to block the general assault on the remaining national treasure.

That is the character of attacks that are being made upon Senators from the West because they are striving to make homes for people on those arid lands.

Yet this same writer a day after having written this attack upon the western Senators finds no difficulty at all in taking exactly the opposite view of the case, and his argument is so splendid in the last one that I want to read it:

CALIFORNIA OIL VICTIM ASKS AID OF CONGRESS—ATTEMPTS AT CONSERVATION BRING ABOUT SITUATION DEMANDING SPEEDY RELIEF IF IRREPARABLE DAMAGE IS TO BE AVERTED.

[By Judson C. Welliver.]

The oil industry of California is in a critical condition, appealing to Congress for relief. Its crisis has been brought about by a bad bungling of executive orders, legislative efforts, and judicial determinations, presumably aimed to conserve oil supplies, and now threatening to destroy them.

In all the history of the public domain's dissipation there could hardly be found an instance of more unfortunate results from bad administration.

Attempts at conservation unintelligently directed have precipitated this situation from which relief is acutely needed. The business interests of California are making a strong effort to get Congress and the national administration to understand the precise facts, feeling confident that once fully appreciated the situation will promptly be remedied. Unless this is accomplished at the present session irreparable damage will be sustained not only by the oil industry, but by Pacific coast business in general.

DATES TO HYSTERIA ERA.

This whole muddle dates back to that period of hysteria about conservation, when enthusiasm outran understanding of the subject. There was a time when anybody attempting to make the public lands useful was presumed to be a grafter, and when it was assumed that the way to get the most out of the natural resources was to lock them up and not let anybody use them. There has been a veering of sentiment toward a more reasonable understanding in recent years, but some of the unfortunate products of the hysteria era are still observable, and the California oil calamity is one of these.

That simply illustrates the inconsiderateness of the attacks that are made on those who simply disagree with regard to the best method of the development of this country.

I want to say to Senators that in 10 years the amount of property that has gone into private ownership in that State out of the 70,000,000 acres has been only 149,000 acres. We have in farms in our State less than 3,000,000 acres, including both the improved and the unimproved. During the last 10 years the amount of land that has gone into private ownership has not increased 6 per cent.

Now, what remedy are you going to give us? What is your proposition? If you are to maintain control over the 67,000,000 acres of public land in the State of Nevada, what are you going to do for us? Are you going to do nothing? Have you any proposition to offer us? Is there any means by which you can develop that land?

Is it not an outrage that 67,000,000 acres of land, an area as large as the whole of the New England States, should remain idle, as it has since that State was admitted into the Union in 1864? No effort has been made by the Government to develop it at all, and yet the Government will not permit individuals to develop it. Is not that condition wrong?

We have had our homestead laws, and yet the people have not homesteaded that land. We have had our desert-land laws, and yet in all the years since 1872 only 384 entries have been allowed. We have had the Carey Act, and it did not develop it. There is not on the statute books to-day an act that will ever bring that land into private ownership or ever develop it.

We are entitled for two reasons to have that land go into private ownership. In the first place, it is essential to the support of the State government, and, in the second place, no one except a private individual owning the land will ever develop it.

We are constantly trying to protect somebody against the acquiring of a monopoly of land. In all the history of this Government there is not a case of the monopoly of land. There is not such a thing as monopolizing land. A man who gets a large tract of land is constantly trying to colonize it. Take the State of Texas, for instance. It is a splendid illustration. When they got ready to build their capital they gave away 3,000,000 acres of land, and hundreds and thousands of people at that time said that that was going to be a great monopoly. Those men acquired the land. What did they have to do? They had to develop it so as to get their money out of it. The result is that to-day those 3,000,000 acres are in small holdings and is the garden spot of Texas.

I know you will say, if this land is not fit for homesteads and not fit for desert-land entries, what good is it to anyone? Here is a farmer who has 320 acres of land irrigated. He has sufficient water to irrigate that land. He has a little surplus in the spring that he might put on some adjoining land to help make pasture land out of it. Being only a small tract of land adjoining his irrigated land, he could so govern the grazing that it would assume some value. He would purchase it from the State; the money would go into the educational fund, and the land would be subject to taxation.

Now, then, we come back to the question as to whether the other Western States are being unfairly treated with regard to this matter, and by comparison.

I do not want to take up much of the time of the Senate in arguing that character of question; I do not think it is sufficiently material; but I want to say this: The Western public-land States have received two forms of assistance from the Federal Government with regard to educational and other public purposes. They have been in the form of a certain percentage of the proceeds of sales of public lands and direct grants of land. Nevada has received less than 4 per cent of its public land; the State of Utah has received more than 14 per cent of its public land; the State of Arizona has received more than 14 per cent of its public land; the State of California has received 8 per cent of its public land; but, in addition to that 8 per cent, it has received $1,108,688 in cash out of the percentages from the sales of public land. Take the State of Washington, for instance. While it has received only about 7 per cent of its public land, it has received in cash from the sale of public land $404,940, while the State of Nevada has received from the sale of public land only $35,631.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, that is because the lands in the State of Washington are worth more than are those in Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is absolutely true. Those lands in the State of Washington were more valuable than were the lands in the State of Nevada. In the State of Washington you had plenty of water, you had a heavy rainfall. Therefore I leave it to the Senator from Washington, in considering the amount of the land grant to a State, that the value of the land should be taken into consideration; in other words, the 7 per cent of the land granted to the State of Washington was probably worth more than 25 per cent of the land that is now subject to grant in the State of Nevada.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. FALL. In addition to the statistics which the Senator from Nevada is now giving as to the lands which the other States have received, I desire to say that I have not heard any reference from him to lands received directly from the United States by Illinois, Alabama, Florida, Louisiana, Arkansas, Missouri, Iowa, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, and Kansas. If the Senator will permit me, I will at this point call his attention to the amount, as shown in the official report, though I have no desire to interrupt him.

Mr. PITTMAN. I have no objection at all, but shall be very glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I notice that various States, those that I have mentioned particularly, in addition to the lands referred to by the Senator from Nevada as being given for general purposes, have received special grants of land in aid of intrastate railroads and wagon roads. Illinois has received from the United States gifts and donations of land to the amount of 2,595,133 acres; Mississippi, 1,075,345 acres; Alabama, 2,746,440 acres; Florida, 2,216,980 acres; Louisiana, 371,768 acres; Arkansas, 2,562,095 acres; Missouri, 1,837,728 acres; Iowa, 4,929,769 acres; Michigan, 3,133,231 acres; Wisconsin, 3,649,749 acres; Minnesota, 8,030,839 acres; Kansas, 4,633,760 acres.

If the Senator from Nevada at this point will permit me, and if I am not interfering with his remarks, I want, Mr. President, to read another table. In 1836 the Congress of the United States, on the insistence of the then President of the United States, passed an act under which the States of the Union at that time received on deposit from the Treasury of the United States more than $74,000,000, the proceeds of the public-land sales then in the Treasury of the United States. With the Senator's permission, if I am not encroaching too much upon his time, I will read the amounts now due from each of those States for the sums then received by them.

Mr. PITTMAN. I shall be very glad to have it read.

Mr. FALL. Maine received $955,838.25, which is still due to the United States. She never paid a dollar of interest nor returned a dollar of the principal. New Hampshire received $669,086.79; Vermont, $669,086.79; Massachusetts, $1,338,173.58; Connecticut, $764,670.60; Rhode Island, $382,335.30; New York, $4,014,520.71; Pennsylvania, $2,867,514.78; New Jersey, $764,670.60; Ohio, $2,007,260.34; Indiana, $860,254.44; Illinois, $477,919.14; Michigan, $286,751.49; Delaware, $286,751.49; Maryland, $955,838.25; Virginia, $2,198,427.99; North Carolina, $1,433,757.39; South Carolina $1,051,422.09; Georgia, $1,051,422.09; Alabama, $669,086.79; Louisiana, $477,919.14; Mississippi, $382,335.30; Tennessee, $1,433,757.39; Kentucky, $1,433,757.39; Missouri, $382,335.30; and Arkansas, $286,751.49.

Mr. President, that was cash deposited with the different States in 1836, following the message of President Jackson in December of that year, out of the surplus funds arising from the sale of public lands to the amount of $28,101,644.91, to be returned by them upon demand of the Treasurer of the United States from time to time. Not one dollar of that sum has ever been returned, and those States still owe the public-land fund the original $28,101,644.91 with interest, not one cent of which has ever been paid from that day to this, and no act of Congress has ever been passed discharging those States from the liability. With interest at 5 per cent, doubling itself every 20 years, those States would owe to the Treasury of the United States $392,000,000 upon the public-land funds received by them 80 years ago. With simple interest they would owe to the Treasury of the United States $90,000,000, and they now owe it.

I simply desired to call the attention of the Senator from Nevada to that.

Mr. PITTMAN. I thank the Senator from New Mexico for his information.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada if all, or a great part, of the lands asked for are arid lands?

Mr. PITTMAN. They are all arid lands. We have no land now left in our State that has any available water supply.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. What is the probable normal value of those lands?

Mr. PITTMAN. These lands vary in value from a dollar an acre to two or three dollars an acre.

As I said a while ago, Mr. President, that which best indicates the character of the lands is the extent of the acquisition of them under the public-land laws. In 1900 there were 2,565,647 acres of farms in private ownership in Nevada; in 1910 there were 2,714,757. In the 10 years there was an increase of less than 6 per cent; and yet there was more public land subject to settlement under all the public-land laws in that State than in any other State in the West. It simply goes to show that the existing laws will never result in settling that land. For pasturage purposes or for a lot adjoining a ranch where there is a water right the land has a value. It has a value to a farmer as a corral.

We are asking for 7,000,000 acres. As I have stated, that sounds like an enormous grant; but what does it amount to in comparison with the 70,000,000 acres of land in that State? What does it amount to in comparison with the 67,000,000 acres which are not in private ownership, which have brought no money to the Government and no money to the State since its admission to statehood in 1864?

I have a table here—which I am going to ask leave to insert in the RECORD, as I do not desire to read it all—giving the total area of the public-land States, the amount of lands granted to each one, and the amount of money also received by each one of the public-land States as a percentage upon the sale of public lands. It will be found that Nevada has received less in land than any other public-land State, although it was admitted into the Union in 1864, and admitted into the Union for the purpose of passing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States. The vote of Nevada was absolutely essential to the passage of the thirteenth amendment. Yet during all that time since 1864 the Government has only placed at the disposal of the State for educational and all other purposes 2,723,647 acres out of the 70,000,000 acres of public land there, while the Government has turned over to Arizona 10,484,000 acres; to New Mexico, 12,000,000 acres; to Utah, 7,408,000; and in many cases the land that was granted to the other Western States was far more valuable than the land which was granted to the State of Nevada. It was far more valuable than the land which now would be granted under this bill. The land which would be granted under this bill has not any real value, except possibly in conjunction with an irrigated ranch as a pasture or as a corral. The Senate should take into consideration the value of the land when considering the efficacy of a grant to a State.

I desire to call attention to another consideration. For instance, the State of Washington has received, and there is in private ownership, under the timber-and-stone act, 2,135,000 acres. The State of Nevada has only received under that act 6,222 acres. Under the desert-land act, the State of Utah has received 357,000 and odd acres, while the State of Nevada has received only 80,000 acres under that act. Under all of the public acts you will find that the other western States have had from five to ten times as much of their public lands go into private ownership, to be subjected to taxation, as has Nevada. I do not believe, Mr. President, that in asking a grant of 7,000,000 acres of land for the benefit of the university and the public schools of Nevada we are asking anything unfair of the Federal Government.

I am not going to argue as to whether or not some other States should have a grant. I want to say that I am in favor of the public lands in the West being devoted to the development of the West. I am absolutely and firmly convinced that the people of the Western States know better how to handle that land than do people who have never been out in that country; and I have absolute confidence not only in their ability but in their integrity with regard to the handling of that domain. It seems to me that it is indisputable that the granting of this land would be a great benefit to the schools, to the State, and to the Federal Government, because every time you place land under cultivation it is bound to inure to the benefit of the whole country; and I take it that any act looking to the placing of 7,000,000 acres of land under cultivation is a matter worthy of consideration by this body. I sincerely hope that they will pass this bill.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the table to which I referred a few moments ago be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, permission is granted.

The table referred to is as follows:

Lands in farms in Nevada, 1900, 2,565,647 acres.
Lands in farms in Nevada, 1910, 2,714,757 acres.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, before the Senator yields the floor I wish to say that when this bill was up the other day, as I remember, there were several amendments, at least, suggested. I think one was proposed by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL].

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLIS in the chair). Two amendments have been suggested, and one is pending. The Chair thinks the Senator from Nevada has an amendment pending.

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. What I rose to ask was whether the Senate had adopted any of the amendments? I have forgotten now what they were.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They have not been adopted, but one is pending, and it would now be in order to have that amendment stated. The Chair will ask the Secretary to read it.

The SECRETARY. In section 3, page 2, line 7, after the words "shall be disposed of," it is proposed to insert:

To citizens of the United States, by sale to the highest bidder at public auction, upon due notice, and at not less than $1.25 per acre, and a comma.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I do not know that I would object to that amendment, but I am satisfied that there are some Senators who would. I have forgotten now who they are. There are only a few Senators here, and I wonder if it would not be a good idea——

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield for a moment, there would be objection to that amendment in the case of the homestead bill or any other general law; but as this bill is applicable entirely to the State of Nevada, if it suits the Senators from Nevada I shall not make any objection. My own judgment, Mr. President, is that the restriction as to the sale of 640 acres will be found to be such that it will render the act largely inoperative; but, of course, the Senators from that State are much more familiar with the conditions than I am. In my State the ownership of 640 acres would be an additional liability rather than an asset.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the junior Senator from Nevada yield the floor?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield the floor.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I wish to say only a few words.

Senators will observe that thus far Nevada has received less than 3,000,000 acres, while Arizona has received 10,000,000 acres and New Mexico 12,000,000 acres, although the area of each of those two States is about that of Nevada. These grants exceed in the number of acres the grants made to other States, and the natural inquiry is, Why? So far as the number of acres is concerned, there would seem to be an inequality in the cases of Arizona and New Mexico and an inequality in the case of Nevada if we have an extra grant of 7,000,000 acres above the 3,000,000 acres already granted. The answer is that the land is not so valuable. The States of Arizona, New Mexico, and Nevada are the most arid States in the Union, and whilst the land is fruitful, there is a lack of water, and the land is worthless without water.

The very fact that for years this vast territory of Nevada has been open to entry under the most liberal land laws—the homestead law, the desert law, and other laws—and that a very small area has been taken up during that period, demonstrates that the lands are almost valueless unless water can be applied. The engineering situation and the climatic situation are such as to make it evident that Nevada has almost reached the limit of its water development unless underground waters can be found. So in the case of Arizona, though 10,000,000 acres were granted, as compared with the 4,000,000 acres that were granted to the State of Wyoming, those 10,000,000 acres are not nearly so valuable as the 4,000,000 acres granted to Wyoming, where part of the State is humid and a part semiarid and hardly any part of it really arid.

It is upon those grounds that we say that a total ultimate grant of 10,000,000 acres, less than that received by Arizona and New Mexico, would be a reasonable grant.

I wish to say, with reference to the security of this grant in the future and the probability that it will be adapted to the real requirements of that community, that whilst many of the States have been in the past quite wasteful of the grants that have been made to them and have not exercised proper providence in taking care of these grants and husbanding them in such a way as to receive as large an amount of money as possible, that era has gone by. This grant is made to the State for school purposes and for university purposes. We have the good fortune to have in that State a university that is closely identified with the welfare of the people. The professors in that university are men of high scientific attainments and great regard for the promotion in every way of social efficiency. The university is a power in the State by reason of its fine spirit, its information, and its intelligence. I believe that this grant will be most carefully administered under the auspices of the university and that the young men in the legislature who are the graduates of that university and subject to its influence will see to it that it is not wasted.

I was asked by one of the Senators on the floor to what immediate use this land could be put. I can not say just now. Certainly the water can not be found for its irrigation; but the State university now has an appropriation from the State for the development of underground waters. Something may be done in that direction. I imagine that all the State can do, probably, until the process of development is scientifically worked out, will be to lease these lands at a very small rental for sheep and cattle. From that use it can get a moderate revenue.

Senators will see, obviously, that the disadvantages under which that State labors are very great. It was coaxed into the Union rather against its will, and it yielded to persuasion as a patriotic duty at a most critical time, when its vote was needed to meet conditions with reference to such constitutional amendments as the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments. It has had a heavy burden to bear ever since. The railroad situation was such, unfortunately, that though the great road running through that State was part of a great transcontinental line, consisting of the Union Pacific and the Central Pacific, the ownership was not united for many years. The owners of the Central Pacific, becoming interested in the Southern Pacific, running through Arizona, lent their energies to the development of that road rather than the Central Pacific, running through Nevada; and so that State lacked the stimulus that other States had in the existence of great railway systems whose future absolutely depended upon an increase of population and the building up of the State.

Fortunately, those conditions are now in large degree remedied. The transportation system of that coast is bent upon the larger development of the State as a matter or self-interest; but the work before the State is a hard one. I appeal to Senators that the Nation can well be as just—not generous—to the State of Nevada as it has been to the States of Arizona and New Mexico, to which States a larger grant has already been made than the one proposed to be made to Nevada.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. JONES. The Senator from Nevada, of course, is very familiar with the situation in his State, and the character of the lands that are likely to be selected by the State under this grant. As I understand, there are no lands that can be selected under this bill except grazing lands.

Mr. NEWLANDS. That is my opinion.

Mr. JONES. And these are rather poor grazing lands, too?

Mr. NEWLANDS. The land is rich enough, if we could only get the moisture.

Mr. JONES. Yes; I understand that; but I was assuming from the statements made that the moisture is not available, or at least that nobody knows of any source of moisture at the present time, taking the lands as they are.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. JONES. There is an amendment pending, I understand, that fixes $1.25 per acre as the minimum price at which these lands can be sold. Does the Senator think that the lands that will be selected under this bill can be sold at $1.25 an acre?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I should doubt it; but I yield to the judgment of my colleague regarding that matter. I believe my colleague has assented to the amendment.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I think most of the lands would bring $1.25 an acre. I do not know.

Mr. JONES. As I understand, the original sales at any rate can not exceed 640 acres to any one person?

Mr. PITTMAN. That is correct.

Mr. JONES. Does the Senator think that a person would buy such grazing lands as there are there and pay $1.25 per acre for them unless he had the hope of buying up a lot of this land from other people and getting it into a large body?

Mr. PITTMAN. I think it would be bought largely by people who already have irrigated farms, as an adjunct to their farms.

Mr. JONES. Does the Senator think that most of this land would be selected adjacent to or near irrigated sections?

Mr. PITTMAN. I think so; yes.

Mr. JONES. The 7,000,000 acres?

Mr. PITTMAN. I think so.

Mr. JONES. How many different irrigated sections are there in the State?

Mr. PITTMAN. In the whole State, wherever they have any farms at all, it is through irrigation.

Mr. JONES. Yes; I know that. I had the impression that there were not very many irrigated sections in Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will say to the Senator from Washington that that would hardly express it, because there are small streams all over the State—not extensive ones, but they are found in a great many places in the State. In fact, there are farms in every valley in the State, but they are not large. There are mountain streams. Our State is divided by 8 or 10 mountain ranges running north and south, and the valleys are fed by mountain streams, snow streams.

Mr. JONES. So it is the Senator's opinion, then, that most of this 7,000,000 acres of land will be purchased by persons who are already farming lands there?

Mr. PITTMAN. I will say to the Senator that in my opinion they would be the chief purchasers of this land.

Mr. JONES. Of course the Senator knows more about Nevada than I do. I had an impression that that would not be the case at all. I think it would be very desirable if that situation would follow. The only thing that occurred to me, from what little I have seen of Nevada, was that I thought this limitation of $1.25 an acre would probably nullify the purposes of the act or result in the land eventually going into large ownerships.

Mr. PITTMAN. No; I think not. That is not our view of it.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat I wish to say that he has asked some interesting questions, and I have here the rainfall statistics for the State of Nevada, which will possibly give the Senator from Washington an idea of the great difference between the lands in Nevada generally and those in the States of heavier rainfall.

I notice that the State is divided into various districts, of course, and the bureau has stations at the places named, and generally the elevation is given. Of course, the elevation cuts a very material figure in the amount of precipitation.

I notice that the station at Austin, in Lander County, had an elevation of 6,500 feet and the average annual rainfall from 1877 to 1908 was 11 inches. At Battle Mountain, during the same period—that being at an elevation of 4,843 feet—the average rainfall was 6.71 inches. At Belmont, Nye County, at an elevation of 8,000 feet, the average annual rainfall from 1889 to 1905 was 8.67 inches. In Eureka County the average annual rainfall was 6.48 inches. In Humboldt County the average annual rainfall was 3.83 inches. In Esmeralda County the average annual rainfall was 4.98 inches. In Elko County, the average annual rainfall from 1870 to 1909, a period of 39 years, was 7.22 inches; and so it goes all through the State.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, that really confirms the impression I had, and that impression led me to ask the questions that I did ask, because I am not opposed to the proposition of the Senator from Nevada. I am in favor of it.

Mr. FALL. I am in favor of it; and it was the figures here and my knowledge of the western country that caused me to make the remark that, in so far as New Mexico was concerned, the limitation of land of this kind to one ownership of 640 acres constituted a liability rather than an asset.

Mr. JONES. Yes; and I think the limitation that it can not be purchased for less than $1.25 an acre has the same effect.

Mr. FALL. Very likely.

Mr. JONES. I should like to see them get all the money they possibly can out of it. I am inclined to think that would be a handicap on accomplishing the purposes desired by this legislation rather than a help to it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Washington whether it is not altogether likely that lands that will not bring $1.25 an acre will not sell at all?

Mr. JONES. That is what I think. I do not think they will sell at all. I think the State will simply have them on its hands and get nothing out of them.

Mr. WALSH. What I mean is, would the Senator feel that if a minimum price of 50 cents were put on the land the situation would be any different?

Mr. JONES. I think it would be a little bit different; but as to much of the land I have seen in Nevada, I doubt if it would bring 50 cents an acre.

Mr. WALSH. The point I am making is that beyond question there are some of these lands that are worth more than $1.25 an acre, and this simply restrains the sale of lands that are valuable for less than that. My idea is that if land will not sell for $1.25 an acre it will not sell for anything.

Mr. JONES. I doubt if there is any very considerable amount of this land, from the descriptions given by the Senator from Nevada, and what I know myself in a general way of the territory, that will sell for $1.25 an acre.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, referring to the remarks of the Senator from Montana, we have found in western Texas, for instance, between the Pecos and the Rio Grande—which, together with the southern part of New Mexico and Arizona, we were taught when I was in school constituted the "Great American Desert"; that portion of the country lying southwest of the State of Nevada, the Llano Estacado, that we used to read about in the old geography, was the "Great American Desert" at that time—we discovered this: That Texas, retaining to herself when she came into this Union all her own lands, handling them as she pleased, so that she was not embarrassed by the diversity of opinion existing as it does at present between the Representatives in Congress and the Senators from the different States where different conditions exist—Texas, not being so embarrassed, but handling her own lands, by disposing of lands in eight-section tracts, approximately 5,000 acres, granting first the prior right of homestead, and attached to that the right to purchase eight sections on 40 years' time at 4 per cent interest, has developed a State of independent, prosperous cattle farmers upon just such lands as are embraced in a great portion of the area of the Southwest which compares in annual rainfall with the figures which I have just read for Nevada. That is, in the plains between the Pecos and the Rio Grande, extending up into New Mexico south of an east-and-west line drawn through the middle of my State, for instance, the average rainfall in that plains country is about 8.62 inches, entirely too little, of course, to justify trying to raise forage crops. But we have discovered there that we can sell lands by selling them on long time, and we can sell land provided we are allowed to sell them in tracts of sufficient size to enable the purchaser to keep from 100 to 250 head of cattle upon a tract of land.

These statistics, and I have them here if any Senator would desire to read them, and my own judgment is confirmed by the report of the Department of Agriculture here and also from the Interior Department, show that in that section of the country it requires 40 acres on an average for one cow, so that 640 acres would simply mean that the average purchaser owning the land could only run 16 head of cattle. You can not run dairy cattle on dry land of that character. You must have feed to produce milk, cheese, and butter. The consequence is that you can only run range cattle.

The people of the United States generally do not understand what we in this arid region are attempting to secure. The interesting part is that the great Southwest, the remaining portion of the great American desert, constitutes a great cattle-raising portion of the United States. There is your breeding ground. By some policy which will enable the settlers in that country to acquire a sufficient amount of land to graze 100 or 150 head of cattle, they can raise the calves which go north and constitute the feeders, and they can feed the people of this country.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE. The hour of 2 o'clock has arrived. I should like to make an inquiry. There is not any unfinished business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that there is not.

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business for the reason I stated a while ago.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened.

LANDS IN NEVADA.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2520) granting to the State of Nevada 7,000,000 acres of land in said State for the use and benefit of the public schools of Nevada and the State University of the State of Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN obtained the floor.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WALSH in the chair). The Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] has the floor. Does the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. What is the state of business? Is the bill that was under consideration when we went into executive session before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that, under the ruling made by the Vice President earlier in the session to-day, the bill under consideration when the hour of 2 o'clock arrived is now the unfinished business. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] to that bill. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 7, after the word "of" and before "under," insert "to citizens of the United States by sale to the highest bidder at public auction upon due notice, and at not less than $1.25 per acre."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington desire to address the Senate?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I understand that the amendment has been adopted. I do not wish to speak to that amendment but to the bill. I wish to inquire——

Mr. PITTMAN. There is another amendment to perfect the text which I wish the Senator would allow to be acted on first.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Is that other amendment pending or has it been submitted?

Mr. PITTMAN. It is pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has been offered, and it will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 12, after the word "land" and before the period, insert "under the terms and in the manner provided in this act."

Mr. POINDEXTER. I wish to say——

Mr. SMOOT. Before that is voted on——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington has the floor.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just a moment, and then I will yield to the Senator. In line 9, page 1 of the bill, after the word "unappropriated," there ought to be inserted the words "and unreserved." Will the Senator from Nevada consent to make that change in the bill?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; I consent to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is agreed to, without objection.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Now I should like to inquire of the Senator from Nevada whether any change has been made in the amount of land donated by the bill.

Mr. PITTMAN. There has been no amendment offered of that character.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like the Senator to offer an amendment. I think the amount specified in the bill is entirely too large and ought to be cut down.

Mr. PITTMAN. I hope the Senator will not offer such an amendment. I tried to explain to-day very carefully the condition and the character of the land. It seems to me that——

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to have the pending amendment read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 3, page 2, line 12, after the word "land" insert "under the terms and in the manner provided in this act."

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that in my opinion that is not necessary because in the very section he is undertaking to amend the provision is "that the land herein granted shall be disposed of under such laws, rules, and regulations as may now or hereafter be prescribed by the Legislature of the State of Nevada not inconsistent herewith." The section itself provides perfectly how the land shall be disposed of, and it seems to me it is entirely useless to have this amendment added to the text. If the Senator will give his attention to that phase of the bill, I believe he himself will admit that there is no necessity for the amendment.

Mr. PITTMAN. The object of placing it there is simply a precaution. I may say that there are laws existing in the State of Nevada to-day for the disposal of this character of land, and at the time the million acres were granted to our State they passed an act in the legislature for the disposal of that land by subsequent grants of that character. I do not want this land or any of it to be conveyed under that former act of Nevada. That is the reason why I took the precaution to put this language in by way of amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I can not see that that obviates the difficulty the Senator speaks of because it provides for the disposition of the land provided for in this bill, and the same section that the amendment is offered to specifically prescribes how the land shall be disposed of. It seems to me it is perfectly useless to put that amendment in section 3. Of course if the Senator wants to have it go in, I shall not object as far as that is concerned, but I do know it will do the bill no good, and it may muddle the decision if it ever goes before the court, as to what was really meant.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to. The bill is as in the Committee of the Whole and open to further amendment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. In section 1, page 1, line 4, I move to strike out "7,000,000 acres" and to insert "3,000,000 acres."

Mr. NEWLANDS. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington whether he does not regard the grant of 3,042,000 made to the State of Washington as very much more valuable than a grant of 7,000,000 or 10,000,000 acres to the State of Nevada, knowing, as he does, the difference in climate, the scarcity of water in Nevada, the fact that these lands have been open for years under liberal land laws and have not as yet been entered upon? Will it be possible for any such condition to exist in the State of Washington, and was not the grant of 3,000,000 acres to the State of Washington a very much more valuable grant than the proposed grant of 7,000,000 acres or than even a grant of 10,000,000 acres would be to the State of Nevada?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, if any such grant as that has been made to the State of Washington, it undoubtedly would be more valuable, because the lands in the State generally, as has been stated by the Senator from Nevada, are more valuable. But there has been no such grant as that made to the State of Washington. The State of Washington has received from the Federal Government grants which contained that many acres of land, perhaps, but it was not granted as 3,000,000 acres of land. It was granted as sections 16 and 36, and the State of Washington took it, whether it was a glacier on the top of a mountain, or a burned-out forest, or a desert, whereas in the bill here proposed you are granting to the State of Nevada the privilege of selecting, out of all the public domain in the State, the very best there is. If there is a water hole or a stream or if there is a fertile piece of land in the State, it will be taken by the State under this grant. The State of Washington never had any such privilege.

Furthermore, Mr. President, the State of Nevada, I will say in answer to the Senator's question, has already received from the Federal Government the same grant which the State of Washington received, which the Senator is referring to now. The grant proposed in this bill is in addition to that. The State of Nevada received section 16 and section 36, and the State of Nevada was of the opinion that it was more advantageous to the State to take the privilege of selecting, out of the public domain, 3,000,000 acres of land, and that bargain was made between the Federal Government and the State of Nevada. The State surrendered sections 16 and 36 and selected 3,000,000 acres, so that it has had the benefit of the same grant that the State of Washington has had, and disposed of it through the agreement which their own legislature proposed in a manner which they thought most advantageous.

Mr. NEWLANDS. But does the Senator contend that the 3,000,000 acres heretofore granted to the State of Nevada compare at all in value with the 3,000,000 granted to the State of Washington?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I did not hear the first part of the Senator's question.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask whether the Senator regards the 3,000,000 acres heretofore granted to the State of Nevada as at all comparable in value to the 3,000,000 acres granted to the State of Washington?

Mr. POINDEXTER. That would be rather a haphazard matter, because ours was taken as it came, regardless of the description of land, whereas the State of Nevada, I assume, took the best 3,000,000 acres there were in the public domain in the State. So I am not able to say how it could compare. All I can say is that I prefer the State of Washington to the State of Nevada, and I am glad I live there instead of in Nevada. There is a better climate and there is better land generally speaking, although——

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to state to the Senator that with the 3,000,000 acres heretofore granted to the State of Nevada by the Government it has taken 20 years or more to dispose of that land grant at the price of $1.25 an acre. Does not the Senator regard that as an indication that the land has very little value? Does the Senator suppose for a moment that a grant of 3,000,000 acres made to the State of Washington 30 or 40 years ago would not have been exhausted by this time?

There is another thing I wish to call to the attention of the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am inclined to think, Mr. President, that a grant made 30 or 40 years ago in the State of Washington would have been exhausted by this time.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will ask the Senator further——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Let me answer that question, if the Senator please.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think that is a distinct proposition, and it leads to a thought that goes to the principles underlying this bill or similar bills. The Senator asked if a grant of land to the State of Washington 30 or 40 years ago would not have been exhausted by this time. One of the great misfortunes in the conduct of the public lands owned by the State has been that they have been exhausted too rapidly, and that the returns have not been adequate, so that, generally speaking, there has grown up a great body of public opinion which, while it is in favor of the full use and development by the public of the public lands prefers that the distribution shall be made by the Federal Government and not by the State government.

The Senator knows the great private interests that are concerned in securing the valuable resources of the public domain, and the greater opportunity that they have in dealing with the State government in subserving their purposes, and often selfish purposes, compared with the opportunity which they would have in dealing with the Congress of the United States. Consequently, it has been considered a wise public policy to ordinarily work out through Congress than through the State legislature, not that the people who think in that way are opposed to the beneficial use and distribution of the land. They are in favor of that, but they prefer that it shall be under the control of the Federal Government.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator another question. He doubtless knows that a grant of 10,000,000 acres was made to the State of Arizona and about 12,000,000 acres to the State of New Mexico, whilst to the other Western States grants were made of from 3,000,000 acres to 8,000,000 acres. Does not the Senator know that the reason for the larger grants to Arizona and New Mexico was because those States had a larger area of land without moisture, without water, than any of the other States and that the lands themselves were not as valuable as those granted to the other States? Does not the Senator admit that?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not deny it, Mr. President. I do not regard it as very essential, whatever the facts may be in that regard, but I am not particularly advised in the matter.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The report of the committee shows the fact that 10,000,000 acres were granted to Arizona and 12,000,000 acres to New Mexico, and it is a matter of common knowledge that, on the average, the lands in those States are of less value, simply because they have not moisture, than in the other States, and that that condition justified the larger grant to those States. Now, I ask the Senator if we acted justly toward those States in granting them ten and twelve million acres, respectively, does not equal justice require that similar grants should be made to the State of Nevada, which ranks with those States in the matter of aridity and is far behind all the surrounding States in water supply?

I should like to have an answer from the Senator. It seems to me to be perfectly conclusive that justice requires that Nevada should have the same number of acres as the other two States which stand upon a par with it as to aridity, these three States being exceptional in their aridity among all the States of the Union.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I do not agree with the Senator in the conclusion which he draws. Of course we know how much grant has been made to Arizona and to New Mexico, and also the area of public lands within those States; but as to the bearing of that fact upon the policy of granting large quantities of lands to the States I differ entirely with the Senator. The State of Nevada, as has been so often remarked in this debate, has already had its selection, and in that respect it had an advantage, so far as I am informed, over any other State.

The fact that there is a large area of public land in the State and that the land is of small value does not involve in any way whatever the policy which should direct the United States in dealing with the public domain. The same policy should apply whether the land is valuable or whether it is cheap. There is no reason why a distinction should be made between the State of Nevada and other States.

Our State has never had the advantage which the Senator speaks of, and never asked for it. We do not propose to ask for it, so far as I am concerned. If I knew a bill would pass Congress granting the State of Washington 3,000,000 acres of land out of the public domain if I would introduce it, I would not introduce it.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator doubtless realizes that the 3,000,000 acres already granted the State of Washington are much more valuable than the 7,000,000 acres proposed to be granted to the State of Nevada.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, that matter has been gone over entirely. I do not know that that is the case. I know that, generally speaking, the lands in the State of Washington are more valuable, but whether the chance selections of sections by numbers that come on the map would produce lands more valuable than the privilege of selecting 3,000,000 acres after examining the character of the land I am not able to say, and I do not suppose the Senator from Nevada is able to say.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. PITTMAN. I desire to call the Senator's attention to certain facts in regard to the land, which I believe will indicate to him the value of the land. There are 67,000,000 acres of unoccupied and unowned land. When I say "unowned land," I mean land not in private ownership. In 1900 there were 2,565,647 acres in farms, improved, and unimproved; and in 1910—10 years later—with all of this vast amount of land open to acquisition under the homestead laws, the desert-land laws, the Carey Act, and the enlarged homestead act, we find that the amount was only 2,714,757 acres; in other words, the land taken up in those 10 years was only 149,110 acres of those 67,000,000 acres. I simply call that to the attention of the Senator as an indication of the undesirability of that land. From personal knowledge of the State, I know it is a fact that all of the known supply of water has been taken up and is now held and owned, and the land that is left, which is subject to selection, is simply arid land without any known water supply.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, if I understand, then, the conclusion of the Senator from Nevada, it is that all of this land is arid or semiarid, and that practically none of it is agricultural land. Am I correct in that?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not know that it would be a correct definition to say that it is not agricultural land. So far as the soil is concerned, it is quite rich, but the land is not capable at the present time of any great agricultural development because of the lack of water.

Mr. McCUMBER. Two things are necessary to make it agricultural land—one is the soil and the other is the water. If it can not receive the water, either from the streams in the mountains or from the sky, no matter what the soil may be, I would suppose it could scarcely be denominated agricultural land. The Senator from Nevada has information on that subject and I have not; hence my question.

Mr. PITTMAN. I have stated the character of the land. The character of the soil is good, but it is without water.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand that the Senator's bill provides that not more than one section of this land may be sold by the State to any one person or corporation?

Mr. PITTMAN. That is correct.

Mr. McCUMBER. We will say it is all, or practically all of it, nonirrigable, nonagricultural land, fit only for stock raising. I do not know much about the State; I have been through it a few times and have seen considerable of the stretch in its territory, but my observation would lead me to believe that as to most of this land one section would not be sufficient to make stock raising profitable. Therefore, if the State sells this land a section at a time to one individual, that person must take it necessarily not for his own use, but for the purpose of selling it to some one else. If that were in an agricultural section there would be no danger of the land falling into the hands of two or three corporations or a very few persons, because in an agricultural State the business is not so profitable that it can be carried on on a large scale where all of the help must be hired. Hence we naturally get down to small farms in the end, though there may be big ones in the beginning of the development of a State. Exactly, it seems to me, the opposite rule now prevails; and that, under the provisions of this bill, in a very few years, if the land were sold in a few years, it would practically all fall into the hands of a few cattle companies or corporations. It may be that that would be better for the State—at least, the land would be used. I am not criticizing it; but having something of a wholesome fear about such an immense tract of territory falling into the hands of a very few people, I inquire of the Senator from Nevada if he himself does not also join in that apprehension?

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I am very glad the Senator has asked that question. I think it is very pertinent in this consideration. I believe this land will be purchased by existing farmers. In our section of country, as I explained a while ago, we have a great many mountain streams. They are small. We find probably one or two or sometimes three ranches, three farms, at the mouth of one of these gulches. Those one or two or three farms consume all of the water in those little streams on which they are located. There is no question but that 640 acres of this arid land adjoining an irrigated ranch would have value to the farmer, and considerable value.

In the first place, in the early spring when the snow is melting in that mountainous country there is generally a surplus of water, but as the spring goes on the water decreases until there is not sufficient to irrigate any more than the farm which would be at the mouth of the gulch; but by fencing in 640 acres of this arid land adjoining the irrigated farm it is found in the early spring that there will be a small amount of water to put on the adjoining tract; and while it would not be sufficient to raise a crop of hay, it would stimulate the growth of grass on those 640 acres. By handling your stock on those 640 acres of land in a judicious way you would get a great deal of benefit out of it, and, in my opinion, it would be a great boon to the farmers in my State.

Mr. McCUMBER. Right here I wish to ask, does the Senator from Nevada think that there are many 640-acre tracts so connected with water holes or springs or streams that they could be slightly irrigated and which also would pay to be operated as stock-raising farms?

Mr. PITTMAN. No; I will say to the Senator I do not think so.

Mr. McCUMBER. It would require considerably more than that?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes. I think that such a tract, except as an adjunct to an existing irrigated ranch, would have very little value; and I have, therefore, in mind the sale of this land to existing farmers as a lot or a corral adjoining such a ranch. Of course, as the Senator from North Dakota knows, we have no right to fence in the public domain, and very properly should not have a right to do so. A farmer who has homesteaded a piece of land at the mouth of one of those streams has no known way to-day of acquiring any additional land adjoining his place, and yet for the purpose of a corral, for the purpose of handling his stock during the haying season and during times while they are being fed and taken care of, it would be valuable.

So far as the land dropping into the hands of a few persons is concerned, I do not fear that. The Senator from North Dakota asked me that question and I want to answer it. I do not fear it for this reason: The method of selection of land is such that I do not fear that danger, because the land is nearly always taken up in the vicinity of some existing ranch, some farm, as I have stated. That was the disposition which was made of the first 2,000,000 acres of land which we had in the State.

Mr. McCUMBER. Possibly the Senator can draw upon his knowledge of conditions in New Mexico. His colleague [Mr. NEWLANDS] just stated that there had been some ten or twelve million acres of land of like character granted to the State of New Mexico. Well, what has been the result of that grant? Has it been sold? If it has been sold, has it fallen into the hands of a few so that immense tracts of many thousands of acres are held by one corporation or by one man?

Mr. PITTMAN. I can not answer that question from my personal knowledge. I wish, however, to say that in our State the 2,000,000 acres which we have heretofore received did not fall into the hands of a few people, but its ownership is scattered all over the State. We have some 2,000 people there who have participated in the purchase.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I have been reading during some years past of the immense tracts of land, we will say, in Texas, where one man would own two or three hundred thousand acres, and, as I understood, similar tracts were owned in New Mexico by one individual or corporation, and that it was as though one man would own an entire county or, indeed, several large counties. I do not know how much truth there is in that; I do not even know that it has been detrimental to those States; but certainly it is against the present spirit of the American people to allow the public domain to fall into the hands of a comparatively few people.

Mr. PITTMAN. I want to say to the Senator from North Dakota that in our State of Nevada we have not been annoyed very much by the public domain falling into the hands of anybody, because of our 70,000,000 acres of land we only have a little over 3,000,000 acres of it in private ownership. About 18,000,000 acres of it are reserved for forest reserves, and there is some of it in Indian reservations. All of the inducements that the Government has held out to settlers have failed to entice people because the land subject to irrigation had been taken up at an early date. The land that is now there is not enticing to homesteaders; it is not subject to being taken up under the desert-land act, because that act requires that you must show that you own sufficient water to irrigate the tract, and they have not the water. Therefore all of those acts have failed. For instance, in 1872 we passed the desert-land act, which at first allowed a man to take up 640 acres; the act was then amended to make it 320 acres of land; and yet in all those years since 1872 there have only been 384 entries. We have not had any monopolization of land in our State.

This proposed act would be of great benefit to existing farmers in Nevada because it would enable them to obtain some of this arid land next to their irrigated homesteads; it would give them a corral; it would allow them to fence it off next to their ranch; and it would stimulate the growth of grass on it. There is grass on this land, though not a great deal of it, but we have found out that by fencing this arid land you can enormously increase the growth of grass by keeping the stock off it at certain seasons of the year and by not letting them stay on the land too long at one time. They can take this original 640 acres and make it produce something; they can make it produce some meat. This legislation will help our farmers; it will help develop our State, for it will bring under semicultivation land that could not be brought under cultivation in any other way.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat I should like to ask him a question. He understands the subject of public lands much better than I do, so I want to ask him if the main purpose of this bill is not to turn something over to the State of Nevada which it can dispose of and make useful in providing education for the children of the State? That is the main purpose of the bill, is it not?

Mr. PITTMAN. The main purpose of the bill, of course, is to improve our schools in the State and to endow our State university. That is the main purpose of the bill; but, in addition to that, there is the benefit, I will say to the Senator, of bringing under cultivation land that would not be brought under cultivation by any other method of disposal of which I know.

Mr. WEEKS. It seems to me that one of the difficulties with this bill is that it is based on the proposition that some of the States have received more land than has the State of Nevada. If this additional grant of public land is made to the State of Nevada, then some other State may very properly come in here and say, "Nevada has been granted more than I have in the shape of Government lands," and thus we will have a constant repetition of bills of this kind without knowing definitely whether or not absolute justice is being done in all cases. Why would it not be better to have a general bill applying to all of the States, if it is good policy to turn over the public lands to the States for school purposes, so that each State might be treated as it should be treated on the basis of the number of children to be educated? On that basis, it seems to me, Nevada has already received more than its fair share of the public lands, because I notice from the report that in the case of some of the States they have not received more than 3,000,000 acres of land, although they have twenty times as many children to educate as there are in Nevada. What I should like would be to have some proposition which would do absolute justice in all cases and which would cover all the public-land States instead of an individual State as in this instance.

Mr. PITTMAN. It is true, Mr. President, that the population of Nevada is very small, and it would occur very naturally to one that population would determine the amount of money that would be needed; but that is not entirely true. I wish to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that we have 360 schools in our State, and we have not half enough now. We have a school for three children, for instance. If we can not get any more than three children in a school, we have a school for that number just the same. It is our theory in Nevada that no child should be deprived of education simply by reason of the misfortune of not being close to some settlement. Therefore the school system in our State is very expensive. We have little isolated communities off in the mountains and in the valleys, and I will say to the Senator that to-day the chief portion of our State tax is for school purposes.

I think that it will be agreed that we have a right to desire to build up a big university out in that section of the country.

In that section of the country there should be a big university. There are greater opportunities for agricultural research in Nevada than in nearly any other portion of the West. There is greater opportunity for mining research in that country than nearly anywhere in the West. We are building up now a great agricultural university, and we are going to build up a great mining university. We are going into research investigations of all kinds and character. We are now sending to other universities and picking out the very best men we can obtain from those universities, and we are indulging the hope that the Government will at least aid us in that work to the extent of this grant of 7,000,000 acres out of 67,000,000. The land is not valuable; it will not bring much, and the amount of 7,000,000 acres will enable us to do no more than should be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER].

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the bill provides that only 640 acres of land can be sold to any citizen or individual, but there is nothing to prevent 20 citizens buying from the State of Nevada 640 acres of land each, and just as soon as title from the State is passed to the 20 individuals, or the very next day, they can transfer that land to one corporation or to one individual.

Mr. PITTMAN. If the Senator will pardon me, is not that true with regard to all lands?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes, Mr. President, that is true in regard to all lands; but it is also true that whenever a man goes upon the public domain and makes a homestead entry he has got to comply with the law; he has got to live upon the land; he has got to do improvements upon the land; and he has got to show that the land is capable of cultivation and a fit place for a home before he can secure title to it. In this case it is entirely different. The State makes the selection; the State sells the land to an individual; but the individual is not required to live on the land a second; the individual is not required to make any kind of improvements upon the land; the individual is not supposed to make a home on the land; and therefore it is quite different from the case of the entryman who goes upon a piece of public land for the purpose of making a home.

That is why I call attention to this matter. I do not see why the Senator from Nevada objects to saying plainly and bluntly to the Senate of the United States that the character of the land in Nevada is such that the only way it can be used is for grazing purposes, and that the State intends to sell this land, and that it will be used for grazing purposes in large tracts. I know the State well enough, Mr. President, to say that the land is not going to be held in 640-acre tracts.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. PITTMAN. I have already stated my views in regard to this land, so that it becomes unnecessary for me to answer the Senator again. I believe that this land will be purchased by existing farmers as an adjunct to their existing ranches. I think that is the chief value of it; and, that being its chief value, it will go to that source.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I merely want to say that the idea of the situation as stated by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]—who I regret is temporarily absent from the Chamber—is, in my opinion, correct. However, I am not going to complain at all about that, knowing that to be the condition; but I think it ought to be stated plainly and frankly exactly what the land will be used for, and that will be for grazing purposes.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. FALL. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] asked a question a few moments ago with reference to New Mexico. The Senator from Utah is now referring to the use of these lands. I will say to the Senator that I will be more than glad to explain to the Senate exactly how New Mexico is availing herself of the donated lands, how she has found it possible to utilize them to some benefit, why she is so utilizing them, and why we are opposed to a grant to an individual limited to 640 acres. I will explain the necessity for large acreages when an opportunity arises, now or at any other time.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I thought I could turn to the Statistical Abstract and ascertain the amount paid per annum for educating each student in the various States. I have been unable to find the table, but, if my memory serves me right, Nevada does not pay any more per capita for the education of her children than many of the other States of the Union pay, and there are a great many that pay more per capita; so that the reference made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] is, to my mind, very pertinent and has a bearing upon the situation.

Mr. President, I have no idea of discussing this bill beyond what I said when it was under discussion several days ago; but I do believe that the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], now pending, ought to be adopted. I believe that would be more just to the other States, and I believe that at least Nevada would be placed on an equal footing in every respect and on a footing a great deal more than equal if 3,000,000 acres of land are granted to that State. Taking everything into consideration, the population, the value of the land, and every other question that has been discussed affecting this bill—taking them all into consideration, weighing them in any way that you please, I can not see, for the life of me, why, if Nevada receives 3,000,000 acres, she would not be in just as good a position, and perhaps a better position, than the other States.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I want to make a statement. I am in favor of the principle of the bill now before the Senate, and I shall at the proper time go somewhat at length into figures and details, which might not prove very interesting at this time, but which will shed some light, I think, upon the matter of the value to the United States of the remaining public lands in the United States and of the proper method of handling those lands.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] has referred in his table to the fact that New Mexico received quite a large donation of land. That fact has been referred to upon several occasions, and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] asked as to how New Mexico was handling her land. The receipts of the commissioner of public lands in New Mexico for the last fiscal year amounted to $710,000. The income to the public schools was $258,000, and that will continue, I think, as a permanent income or will increase.

New Mexico received altogether from the United States at various times, including the donation when she finally came into the Union, a total of approximately 12,000,000 acres. She proceeded to locate that land as soon as possible. Of course this includes, Mr. President, school sections 2, 32, 16, and 36. We were enabled to locate our lieu lands, as we call them, in rather large bodies; that is, in the Spanish land grants, Indian reserves, and other reserves. For the school sections which we were entitled to within the area covered by those reserved lands we were allowed under the act of Congress to locate lieu lands wherever we pleased. In that way we have been able to locate lands in larger bodies than would otherwise have been the case.

Now, sir, there has been as much as 47,000 acres of these lands in New Mexico sold to one individual or to one corporation. Those lands were added to the lands donated in 1898. They were located, possibly by misunderstanding or mistake, in an area where it would require 100 acres or more of such lands to furnish grazing for one head of cattle, one cow. They were located in what we call the Malpi country, or the lava-bed country, and the salt flats in southern New Mexico, largely in my county in New Mexico. They were possibly the least valuable of any lands so located or any of the donated lands. As I say, they were located in 1898. There was a portion of this tract which was fit for colonization, approximately 5,000 acres out of the total of 47,000 acres. The largest number of cattle which has ever been grazed upon that land, or which it will carry, is less than 1,500.

To illustrate, to give the Senators here some idea of the area required for grazing, I will state that three years or more ago, through the Agricultural Department, a reservation was made in my State, New Mexico, by the then President of the United States for the purpose of establishing a grazing experiment.

Under a contract made at that time—a contract then in existence and afterwards signed and now being carried out—a cattleman was allowed to graze his cattle upon this acreage, cutting out 10,000 acres of the total upon which stock should not be grazed, so that the natural grasses might be allowed to grow without being eaten, while the adjoining area should be utilized by this stockman, not overstocked, but the number of cattle per annum kept upon it that were necessary, in the opinion of the expert of the Agricultural Department, to enable him to ascertain how the grasses would reseed themselves or how many cattle a given area in New Mexico would carry with safety. The number is limited in the contract to 1,500 head. The area set aside for the purpose is 232,000 acres. This will possibly be somewhat enlightening to the Senate as to the area which it is necessary to set aside for cattle-grazing purposes in that remaining portion of the "great American desert."

I have here, and I will read into the RECORD, at the proper time, the official letters and correspondence with the Agricultural Department, the Interior Department, and the Forestry Department, relating to New Mexico, as to the area necessary to use for the grazing of stock. I have received a letter on the subject since I made a statement a few days ago in the Senate, in which I said that we calculated 40 acres to a cow. I have had a confirmation from the Forestry Department as to the number of acres necessary for an animal, according to their statistics, in the State of New Mexico. They say that, cutting out from the reserves to which they refer possibly one-third to one-half of the total area as unfit for grazing, they find that it is necessary to provide 38.4 acres for a cow. Now, in our calculations of 40 acres to an animal, we, of course, have not the privilege that the Forest Service has of excluding from the total area lands which are entirely unfit for grazing. In other words, we figure that out of 200,000 or 47,000 acres, as the case may be, possibly a third or a fourth of it is entirely unfit for any purpose; but we include that in the entire area in estimating 40 acres per cow, while the Forest Service's estimate of 38 acres is cutting out such area as that, setting it aside.

As to New Mexico, sir, our conditions were these: Embraced within our exterior limits was a total acreage of 78,485,760. Of this there was embraced in Spanish land grants, confirmed by the Congress of the United States long prior to the establishment of the court of private-land claims, 9,882,000 acres. Those Spanish land grants are held in acreages running from, we will say, 100,000 to a million and a half or more. They were obtained possibly by speculators or by investors in the early days. New Mexico is 300 years old, Mr. President. These grants, made by the Crown of Spain prior to the acquisition of New Mexico by this country, and, in fact, prior to the date of the Mexican revolution in 1810, and confirmed by the treaty stipulations between this country and old Mexico, went into the hands of comparatively a few individuals. With the exception of the community grants along the Rio Grande, which were irrigable grants, the greater area was an arid country, and the grants were made in very large acreage, because New Mexico was understood to be purely a stock country, as it is yet, aside from a comparatively few acres.

The railroad land grants made directly by Congress were 4,035,000 acres. In the Indian reserves in the State of New Mexico there are embraced 3,766,000 and a fraction acres. In the Pueblo Indian reservations, which were Spanish land grants in themselves, granted to something like 20 different communities of sedentary or Pueblo Indians, there are embraced 985,000 acres. In the withdrawals by Executive orders and others, including the withdrawal to which I have just referred of 232,000 acres for cattle-grazing purposes, national monuments, military reserves, horse-breeding ranches, forest reserves, and so forth, there are withdrawn and held by the United States Government, of our total area, 16,029,105 acres. The remaining public lands in New Mexico now, out of 78,000,000 acres, total 27,788,000 acres, or much less than a third of the area.

Now, sir, for 60 years our citizens have been entitled to avail themselves of the public-land laws of the United States, just as the citizens of any other public-land State have been. Now, remember that we had 78,000,000 acres to start with. We have now 22,000,000 acres of public domain; and in 60 years, under the land laws as made by the Congress of the United States, while the Territory of New Mexico had no voice or vote in the Congress, the pioneers of New Mexico have been able to segregate from the public domain and acquire title to 3,700,000 acres out of a total of 78,000,000 acres.

It was absolutely impossible for the people of New Mexico to acquire the lands under the present laws or customs. Therefore they gladly availed themselves of the opportunity afforded by the terms of the enabling act to locate the lands in tracts where they could be leased and where they could be sold to actual settlers, constituting stock ranches, enabling us to continue our cattle breeding in the greatest cattle-breeding section of this country; and there is not a man in New Mexico who does not know that it is necessary, to enable any homesteader to support a family, for him to secure at the least estimate 4,000 acres of land in private ownership. Otherwise he can not make a living for himself and educate his children.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. FALL. I do.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. In cases such as the Senator is discussing now—lands that are semiarid and more or less unfitted for agricultural purposes—does the Senator know why the lands should not be allowed to be taken in large quantities, even by a cattle company, if it is necessary to have a good many acres to support one cow?

Mr. FALL. If you do not work it out in just that practicable way, Mr. President, the price of beef will continue to go up in these United States from day to day until we will be a nation of fish eaters, in my opinion, instead of a nation of beef eaters. This is where you are breeding cattle, where you are feeding cattle that come from the great ranges of the West.

The settling up of this country, the cutting of the cattle away from the streams by the settlement upon such lands as can be used for agriculture, has left the great table-lands—the dry, arid portion of the country—without even water facilities. In my State we have hundreds of wells in which it has been necessary to go to a depth of 1,500 or 2,000 feet to obtain water with which to supply from 200 to 300 head of cattle at a prohibitive cost to a homesteader. Think of the condition! Water unavailable for any possible purpose within 1,000 to 1,500 or 2,000 feet of the surface; a well costing, without equipment of engines, etc., for lifting the water but simply for the excavation of the well alone, from five to ten or fifteen thousand dollars!

The Senator asks, "Why not allow cattle-raising corporations or individuals owning large herds of cattle to acquire more than 640 acres?" It is absolutely necessary that they should acquire it. What man with 640 acres can spend five, ten, fifteen, or twenty thousand dollars to develop water for the purpose of watering 16 head of cattle? Sixteen head of cattle, with an 80 per cent calf stock, would mean 12 calves a year. One-half of those calves would be for sale. Six calves bringing at the outside price, the very best which it is possible to realize, $30 each at the age of 8 months or $40 at the age of 11 months would bring in a total income, a magnificent income for this homesteader, of $180, not counting his expenses.

What American citizen can educate a family of children on such an income, or can invite a wife to go with him to acquire such a homestead? Why, sir, it is necessary that those lands should be handled in large tracts.

Of the total of 12,069,000 acres donated to New Mexico under the different acts by the Congress—I shall go into the statement more fully later—of that amount the State has acquired title to 7,816,000 acres. It has not acquired title to the balance because of the red tape necessary to go through in the offices, in the bureaus, of this Government. The Congress made the grant absolutely. It is a grant in presenti, but with such restrictions as to mineral lands and as to reserved lands and as to surveyed lands—only a fraction of our remaining lands being surveyed—that before we can get them clear listed we make our application in the local land office just as an individual would; that application is passed upon and forwarded to the Commissioner of the General Land Office; from the Commissioner of the General Land Office it goes formally to the Geological Bureau, and they must say whether there is any mineral upon these lands; and if they are not clear listed, as nearly one-half of our lands are not, that department holds them up there for years, subject to examination as to whether they are of a mineral character. So that we have been able so far to acquire title to only 7,800,000 acres out of a total of 12,000,000 acres.

Of that total, Mr. President—I think these figures are somewhat enlightening—of the total of 7,816,000 acres we have now under lease, paying an income to the public schools, assisting in the education of the children of New Mexico, 6,109,065 acres, producing a regular annual income approximating $258,000 for the education of the public-school children of New Mexico. We have disposed of 304,964 acres. The greater portion of the land which could be disposed of under the donations has not as yet been clear listed so that it can be sold. We had 1,000,000 acres of land in the grant given to us to reimburse the State of New Mexico for some railroad bonds, which the Congress of the United States, by special act, forced us to assume and pay.

The Congress then, in its generosity, gave the State of New Mexico a million acres of land with which to pay off these bonds which it had forced upon us.

That land, or a great portion of it, we have not as yet been able to get clear listed. Applications are in for the sale of it. It will be sold. It will help to make homes. I want to say to you now, Mr. President, that in the State of New Mexico the citizens of that State and those coming in there desiring to make homes had rather give to the State of New Mexico $3 an acre than to take the homesteads from the United States free of cost.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. FALL. I do.

Mr. JONES. I just wondered if the State had been able to sell very much of those lands.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, if we should offer those lands for sale at the minimum price fixed by Congress of $3 per acre for the greater portion of the area and $5 per acre on what we call the Pecos Valley side, I believe every foot of the land can be sold.

Mr. JONES. Then there was a minimum price?

Mr. FALL. But we must sell it in bodies of five to ten or fifteen or twenty thousand acres.

Mr. JONES. What does the Senator think it would sell for in maximum parcels of 640 acres?

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I will answer the Senator by giving him a little historical data. At the last election a candidate for Congress, who had been a Member of Congress from New Mexico, a gentleman of great attainments and fine character, thoroughly sincere and earnest, had offered in the House a 640-acre bill which passed that body. In the last campaign, in every county in the State of New Mexico, an issue against that Member of Congress was his 640-acre homestead bill, and he was defeated. He had been elected to Congress before and he was defeated by 5,000 majority; and in every precinct, in every county in that State, an issue was made against him of his advocacy of the 640-acre homestead bill.

Mr. President, the conditions differ in the different States. New Mexico is, from her taxable property, building roads and supporting courts and educating children, and doing her duty as a State of this great Union to the best of the ability of her citizens. She is taxing herself, issuing bonds, placing a mortgage upon the prosperity of future generations of New Mexico for the purpose of building roads, for example. I want to say to you just here that for every acre of land in private ownership in New Mexico benefited by this taxation, which we have voted upon ourselves for the construction of these public roads, there are 1,000 acres of the public domain benefited, and the Government of the United States gives us not one cent. And then, Mr. President, when we ask to be unhampered, to be allowed to handle the resources of our State in order that we may progress, that we may continue to educate the children of the coming generation, that we may continue to build good roads, that we may continue to be worthy of citizenship in this great Nation, we are almost invariably met by just such expressions as were read into the RECORD from a newspaper article by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] this morning. Some one in the United States seems to think the people of the West are anxious to take from the people of this country a magnificent domain, of immense value to the people throughout the different States of this Union, for the purpose of conferring it upon a few bloated bondholders or a few soulless corporations!

Why, sir, we have the same interest in our State that the citizens of any of the older States have. We ask to be allowed the same privileges that the people of the older States have been allowed. We ask that our conditions be taken into consideration, and that you do us the justice to believe that we are just as honest, just as thorough and conscientious and loyal American citizens, as are the citizens of Connecticut or any of the older States of the North or South in this Union; that the citizenship of this great Western country of ours is American citizenship, exactly the same as that which was found in the original 13 Colonies. And, Mr. President, when we come to you and say that we know our conditions, we know what it is necessary for us to do, we ask you to place the same confidence in us; but I want to describe to your, sir, the reception that we meet with at the hands of the bureaucrats who are at the present time running this Government.

A poor homesteader applies for 160 acres upon the public domain in the State of New Mexico. He at once becomes an object of suspicion. Every little sixty-dollar clerk who has been sent out from Washington as an inspector of public lands or of public-land entries makes it his business to watch this homesteader, because the moment the application is filed apparently the suspicion is aroused in the minds of some of the gentlemen who are in control of one branch of the administrative departments of this Government—that is, the Department of the Interior—that a thief is attempting to steal, not from the people of the United States but from the Department of the Interior, 160 acres. Why, sir, they seem to think, and actually the idea seems to rest in the minds of some of the gentlemen who are engaged every week in sending out plate matter to the weekly newspapers from the city of Washington in the name of "conservation," and in the minds of many good citizens of the country, that when a man secures 160 acres of land he takes it away with him somewhere. Why, sir, the land remains there. It can not be carried away. It is there yet. It is paying taxes to the local government.

Instead of inviting the homesteader to go upon the public domain the tendency now is to throw every possible obstacle in his way to prevent him from acquiring a home; and this is shown in the matter of desert lands. If the Senators will read what is said in this report of 1915 from the General Land Office with reference to the desert lands, they will see that it has been made harder and harder and harder and harder for the settler to obtain a title, until now I say to you, sir, that under the rules and regulations issued within the last year or two—not under the act of Congress, because that has not been changed—a man who makes application for a 320-acre desert-land entry takes his liberty in his hands and the penitentiary doors stare him in the face from the day that he makes his application to the day upon which 9 out of 10, as shown by these statistics, are rejected by some local inspector of the public-land office who knows nothing in the world about the conditions.

Sir, this Government of ours should do as the Canadian Government is doing, as the Government of India is doing, as the Australian Government and the other Governments are doing. It should invite the people of the United States to acquire in private ownership the remaining public lands instead of throwing obstacles around the acquisition of these lands and their settlement. But, Mr. President, instead of the inspector from the public-land office being welcomed, as he should be, by the homesteader desiring to settle his family upon the public domain; instead of his being received with pleasure by the children of that man, when he arrives in sight, as their friend, who is able to show them how to comply with the law and how to acquire their homes; instead of his being received in that way, the old frontiersman feels, sir, that if he could carry out his wishes in the matter he would receive him at the point of a Winchester rifle when he gets within rifle shot of the front door, because he comes as an enemy.

I am stating these as facts from thirty-odd years of personal experience and familiarity with this southwestern country. I may say, in passing, that it has been my fortune to be associated with some of the larger private irrigation projects in my country and with some of the railroads seeking to develop that country with the various development enterprises, and I think I know somewhat of what I am speaking in this instance. I have on file here, filed several years ago, appeals to the then Secretary of the Interior—not the present incumbent of that office—to modify in some way, if possible, the feeling that existed, at least through instructions to the special agents and the investigators of his department in our portion of the country.

It is hard enough for any man from Nevada, from New Mexico, from Arizona, or from one of the other public-land States to impress the real situation upon Senators who have no knowledge, and could have no personal knowledge, of the conditions existing in each of these States. It is hard enough to get any kind of remedial legislation; and in every effort made by such a Senator there is always an amendment or some proposed compromise or something offered which possibly unfits the bill for his purposes. For that reason I have said that the Senator from Nevada, of course understanding the conditions there, may know that his people can dispose of 640 acres without inviting the charge of collusion or fraud; they may be able to dispose of 640-acre tracts to individuals. I will say to him, however, that our experience under the act of 1898 was this:

A great domain, 2,000,000 acres or more, was granted to New Mexico. With the exception of 22,000 acres sold by collusion, as it is claimed, in one of the timber districts in New Mexico to a lot of entrymen, each securing 160 acres—on this land there was no residence required—with the exception of that tract and one or two other tracts of similar character obtained in a similar way, it was absolutely impossible for New Mexico to dispose of a foot of that land. Eighty acres, I think, out of 2,000,000 acres of land, went to actual settlers! They were such lands as could not be used unless they could acquire more than 160 acres. So the only disposition made of this land was under such methods as brought about suits by the United States Government to see that the purposes of the law were carried out, paralyzing the industry of New Mexico for years. They were finally compromised, and the parties did not go to the penitentiary. That is as much as I can say for them. But so far as the beneficial results were concerned, they were absolutely nil. We had the lands, but we could not dispose of them.

I believe firmly that in New Mexico a 640-acre limit would only result in this: We would take it, of course, and then come back to Congress at the next session and ask it to relieve the 640-acre limit still more, and we would keep coming to Congress until we finally persuaded it in one way or another to give us more; and in the meantime we would be looking with some little degree of partiality to the sale of those lands and with not too much strictness to the manner or method of sale. In other words, I say to you frankly the land could not be utilized if the law was strictly enforced and only 640 acres could be acquired by the individual.

I have offered, and I shall call the attention of the Senate later to a bill for New Mexico donating or selling to New Mexico 27,000,000 acres of unreserved and reserved land still remaining. I will say to the Senator from Montana that one of the provisions of the bill is that there shall be a guaranty that the State of New Mexico will pay out of the proceeds of those lands 62½ cents per acre to the United States Government for the benefit of its Reclamation Service. If we have those lands sold, we will pay to the Government of the United States $15,000,000 for the 27,000,000 acres.

Mr. President, I have figures here, taken from the records of the Land Department itself, which show that for every acre of land in the State of New Mexico disposed of by this great Government of the United States for the last five years the taxpayers of the United States have paid more than one cent per acre and the land has paid nothing to the United States; in other words, that the expenses of the administration of the public lands in New Mexico have been greater than the entire income from the disposition of such lands. Instead of being a great asset for the taxpayers of the United States, the citizens of the old States and the other States of the Union are being taxed for the support of the Land Department across the way in the city of Washington. The report of the Secretary himself and the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, when dissected, will show to you that the administration of the public lands in the United States to-day is being paid for by the taxpayers and that the proceeds of the public domain are being eaten up by clerks in the Public Land Office. Instead of there being $2,000,000 as shown in this report, I say to you that there is not one dollar of receipts above expenditures. The report itself does not show that the last Congress for the purpose of paying these expenses, as set forth in this report, appropriated more than $3,000,000 which was expended by the Land Office itself or by the Interior Department.

I am not reflecting, Mr. President, I want it understood. Some Senators always fear that in remarks of the kind I am making there is intended some reflection, political or otherwise, upon the present incumbent of some office. Nothing is further from my thoughts. The present administration is pursuing exactly the course which has been pursued by former administrations. It is pursuing exactly the same methods of bookkeeping which they found in force when this administration took charge of the Land Office. They are disposing of lands in the same way they have been disposed of for years and years. Under the method of bookkeeping it is shown that $4,000,000 were placed to the credit of the reclamation fund of the United States out of the sale of public lands. The Treasury report shows nothing like so much placed in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury. The Interior Department's report shows nearly a million dollars less; but these mistakes were made and have been made for years, not simply by this administration.

Mr. President, it may be that we can not get a general measure which would be satisfactory to the Senators from the different States. For my State, or my portion of the country, the only satisfactory method of handling the public lands is to let the local people handle them themselves. It costs too much in overhead charges to handle them from Washington. You can not do it without a loss. You can turn them over to the people of New Mexico and they will handle them at a profit, but they must not be restricted in handling such lands as the Senator is now asking in regard to those to be donated to his State. The tracts must not be restricted to 160 acres or 320 acres or 640 acres. The only object in making a restriction would be to prevent lands from going into private ownership through some collusion and fraud, and the object is that they shall become taxable and help out the revenue of the local government.

Mr. President, I have said much more than I expected to say on this occasion. I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate later to present some further figures upon this interesting subject.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, in voting upon the amendment I do not want to have that act construed as differing from the general attitude taken by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. In a great deal of what the Senator from New Mexico has said with regard to the administration of public lands I agree entirely. I think the real difference is rather a difference of opinion as to what the remedy is.

I admit that there are many faults in the administration of the public domain. I know that the great principle, as I regard it, of conservation is being injured and brought into more or less ill repute in the country by the manner in which it is administered through the Land Office. In saying this I repeat what the Senator from New Mexico has just said, that I do not intend to reflect upon any administration or any individual.

The proposition of the Senator from New Mexico, however, to remedy this situation by a bold and comprehensive stroke of turning over the entire public domain to the administrations of the States I deny would remedy it; at least we have no evidence that it would remedy it. Mr. President, if we should grant, as is proposed in this bill, 7,000,000 acres of land to the State of Nevada, or if we should grant all of the public domain that is left in the State of New Mexico outside of the 12,000,000 acres which have already been granted, what evidence have we that homesteaders would have a better opportunity of acquiring homes than they have now, or that there would be any homestead law at all or anything corresponding to it? What evidence have we, Mr. President, that if the land is proposed to be sold by the State in 640-acre tracts it will be put to any beneficial use and not held for speculative purposes? None whatever. There is no provision in the bill to that effect.

It seems to me that a more sane and reasonable attitude to take in regard to this great question would be that Senators from the public-land States should all stand here without division and say that the laws we place on the statute books should be administered in the spirit in which they are written.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will yield in just a second. The law provides for the beneficial use of every resource that there is on the public domain. It provides for the homesteading of agricultural lands that are within the forest reserves, and it should be administered and construed liberally to encourage homesteaders to settle there and improve this uninhabited land, not as the Senator has very truly said to discourage them and put obstructions in their way.

But the Senator, I very much fear, could not get support for the proposition of divesting the Federal Government of the title to its public domain and vesting it in the States. I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, in reference to the last remark, the Senator from New Mexico will assure the Senator from Washington that during his entire remaining term in the Senate he will worry some Senators until he gets support for the proposition, because otherwise the State of New Mexico is going to ask the taxpayers of the United States for an annual appropriation for its support unless we are allowed to have our resources, our wealth, ourselves.

What I wanted to call the attention of the Senator to is the fact that exists under the law as it stands to-day, even if it was administered in the most liberal spirit. I do not think the Senator was here when I read some statistics with reference to the annual precipitation in Nevada. Land where there are 3 to 6 or 8 or 9 or 10 inches of rainfall unquestionably can not be used, as the Senator knows, under the agricultural homestead or the desert-land act.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think that is very true; but there ought to be some plan worked out by which it can be used. When the Federal Government parts with the title of the land it ought to fix that policy; and that is the fundamental difference between what might be called the two schools of thought on the question of the disposition of the public domain, whether the policy shall be fixed by the National Government or whether it shall be turned over without restriction at all to the local legislature and allow them in each State to determine the policy on which the land shall be granted.

Mr. FALL. If the Senator will just pardon me a moment, I wish to say to the Senator that in the bill which I have proposed and which is now pending before this body for the disposition of those lands, turning them over to New Mexico for handling, the method by which they shall be handled is suggested in the bill itself and runs with the title. There is a provision that as much as eight sections can be sold to an individual for a grazing homestead, but no more can be acquired by that person from any other individual so long as he holds the eight sections; that there shall be a condition of forfeiture in his deed so that if a corporation or an individual, directly or indirectly, acquires more than eight sections at any time the entire holding shall be forfeited absolutely and become again the property of the State, and the United States Government shall have a right to enforce the law in the court.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, such a bill as that is far more coherent and rational, it seems to me, than a mere unrestricted grant to the State without any conditions attached to the grant whatever.

I have not seen the bill of the Senator from New Mexico, but from his statement of it it answers some of the objections which have occurred to me to the bill which is now under consideration, which contains no such provision.

I had not expected to take any extensive part in this debate. The speech which the Senator from New Mexico has made, raising the general question of the administration of the land laws and arraying and arraigning those who are opposed to the grant of the public domain to the States, as though that question were involved in this bill, almost impels those of us to whom this question is a great practical and political issue to state their position in regard to it. I do not expect to do so, except as I have already done at this time. It seems to me that that is rather afar from the question which is now before the Senate. The question of homestead is not involved. The general policy, however, of the Federal Government in regard to the public domain is involved.

I agree with the Senator from New Mexico that there is no reason why there should be a restriction limiting the holding of these lands to 640 acres. It seems to me a proposition of that kind is simply a sop to the general cry against monopoly of public lands without any regard to the existing conditions. It ought to be dealt with in view of the necessities of the case. Everyone familiar with the conditions knows that those make it impossible for a man to make a living on 640 acres of land in a desert. Yet here it is proposed to grant 7,000,000 upon that basis.

The Senator from New Mexico is entirely right in regard to that, and, Mr. President, while, as I said before, I differ with him as to whether the State or Federal Government should fix this policy, he believing that the State should do it, I believing that the Federal Government should do it, he is right in saying that under whichever jurisdiction the law is fixed and the granting of the land is passed, the policy under which it shall be sold ought to be fixed in the law.

If we are granting 7,000,000 acres of land to the State of Nevada, one thing that occurs to me as I stand upon the floor that ought to be put into the law is some provision against the acquisition and the holding of those lands for speculative purposes. There ought to be something there which would carry out what the Senator from Nevada says his intention is, that the lands shall be used; that they should contribute to the support of the schools of the State. How do we know that they will contribute to the support of the schools of the State? It may be that they will be dealt with as many of the more valuable lands in the State of Washington have been in times past. Great areas of timberland, whether acquired in one way or another by large companies, were held for speculative purposes, not developed, not put to any beneficial use, the owners of them in constant protest and a state of war against the taxing power of the State and the counties, so as to evade paying taxes and to put the taxes down to the lowest possible sum, allowing them to accumulate from year to year and then making a compromise at one-tenth of what the taxes ought to be.

There ought to be some provision which would prevent that state of affairs if we are going to grant to the State of Nevada the right to pick up 7,000,000 acres of the cream of the public domain. What is the Federal Government going to do with the desert which is left after the State of Nevada has picked it over and selected all that was worth anything? We might as well grant the State the entire domain as to grant them the privilege of selecting 7,000,000 acres of the best land that there is in the State.

The senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] pelted me with a great many questions this morning as to whether the lands in the State of Washington are not better than those in the State of Nevada. Generally speaking they are, but the mistake of the senior Senator from Nevada was that he seemed to assume that the worst lands in the State of Washington are better than the best lands in the State of Nevada. That may be true; I do not know but what it is; but I do not know that it is. Yet that will be the situation. We had to take the worst along with the best. Here it is proposed that the Federal Government shall keep the worst and give the best to the State of Nevada, and that, too, after Nevada has had ten times the same opportunity to select that other States have had—not the same opportunity to select, because the other States have not had the opportunity to select, but they had the same grant, because the State of Nevada preferred the right to select to the grant which the other States had, and it was given that right in exchange for the original grant.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER]. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it. The noes have it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The bill is still as in Committee of the Whole and open to further amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 9, after the word "herewith," insert:

Provided further, That no portion of said lands shall be disposed of by the State for a period of 25 years from and after the passage of this act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, with the general purposes of this bill I am in entire sympathy. It is proposed here to set aside or donate out of the common property of the people of this country 7,000,000 acres of land to the State of Nevada. Such a proposition, Mr. President, could not be entertained for a moment excepting it were made for the purposes set forth in the bill, namely, for the benefit of the public schools and of the university of that State. The people of all the country have an interest in the education of the citizens of every State. In this interest lies the justification of legislation of this character.

But, Mr. President, if we are to take any lesson from the experience with measures of this character which have heretofore been passed, we ought to provide for the largest possible gain to the educational fund of the State that is to receive a donation of the public lands. I am not prepared to say that the history of every one of the States that have received donations of this sort out of the public funds is a history of betrayal of trust, but I do know such to be the history in many States that have been the recipients of such donations. In many States the lands donated by the Federal Government to aid education by action of the legislatures have been put upon the market and sold at once and but paltry sums realized, although in many cases the very terms of the grant implied that the State should get out of it the largest possible measure of benefit to secure to the State educational funds.

I know a few of the States have conserved the land so granted to them. Minnesota is one and that State to-day has a university with an endowment which will forever relieve the people of the State from any taxation to support that great institution.

In Wisconsin, Mr. President, the record shows very badly for those in control of the State government at the time the lands of this grant were sold. We had a donation from the Federal Government amounting to something over a million acres, largely valuable pine timberland—240,000 acres to the agricultural college, 92,000 acres to the university, and the remainder to the common schools of the State. The record of its disposition is one of shame and disgrace to the State. A great part of those lands were sold and speculated in, with the result that our schools have an annual income of a paltry sum, instead of an income of half a million dollars annually, which we might have derived from those lands had they been handled pursuant to the spirit, if not the letter, of the act which donated them. The income from the university fund amounts to $15,000 only, hardly enough to pay for printing the annual catalogue of the institution. From the sale of the 240,000 acres given to the agricultural college, an annual income of only $12,000 is realized.

Mr. President, I would cheerfully vote for this appropriation of 7,000,000 acres of land to Nevada, not to be sold to the big cattle companies at $1.25 an acre, but to put ultimately into the school fund of the State a great sum of money, which would forever relieve the taxpayers of Nevada from contributing one dollar to the support of their public-school system, including all the schools from the common school up to the university. I have been informed by one of the Senators from that State that out of three million and odd acres already donated to Nevada, title to all of which has been parted with by the State, they have a fund which produces an annual income approximately of only $100,000 to support the State university.

To maintain any great educational institution such as Nevada will ultimately build up as a State university will, of course, require many times the amount of the income derived at the present time from the sale of all the land donated to the State for these purposes. The State of Nevada finds itself with this small income, Mr. President, because those lands have been sold too cheaply. Michigan, one of the States that received a liberal donation of public lands for the benefit of its educational institutions, held on to those lands until they have reached a high value, and the State now is building up from the sale of these lands a large fund for the support of the university.

Mr. President, I was a Member of the other House when the enabling act was passed for the States of North Dakota and South Dakota, and, as I recall, these acts fixed a minimum price at which the lands set apart for school purposes should be sold. As I recall, the minimum was $10 per acre.

Mr. STERLING. The Senator from Wisconsin is correct in that statement.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. As a result of that wise action those States are now in the possession of enormous school funds for the support of their educational systems. The amounts realized overtops the funds of those of other States the public-land donations of which were not similarly safeguarded.

I do not think it would be wise, and I considered that in drafting this amendment, to put such a limitation upon the sale price per acre of the land to be granted to Nevada. This land is varied in character; much of it doubtless will be rough land that would not attain to the minimum which it would be proper to fix, if one were to propose an amendment to raise the minimum price.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Just let me conclude. So I have thought best to provide rather that the land shall not be sold until after a lapse of a period of 25 years. By that time, Mr. President, the population of Nevada will have increased; the demand for these lands will have likewise increased; and no one knows what development there will be in the possibilities for irrigating those lands. No one can forecast the progress that will be made in the next quarter of a century. It is not unlikely, Mr. President, that by that time those lands can be put upon the market, and such as are irrigable can be sold at a very high figure.

I now yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, he was enumerating some of the States and the manner in which they had disposed of their public lands, and he spoke of cattle ranches absorbing the State lands at extremely low prices. I wish to say as to Wyoming, which is known as one of the cattle-range States, that her constitution, which she adopted before she applied for statehood, provided the minimum of $10 per acre; that no land should be sold for less than $10 per acre. The money—all of it from sales and from leasing—is kept in a permanent fund, and only the income from it is used, and that for the schools.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. A very proper and wise provision.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SAULSBURY in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. FALL. I have been very much interested, Mr. President, in the line of thought just suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin, but I desire to suggest what would be the result if he would carry it a little further. My native State of Kentucky was at one time very heavily timbered with walnut timber. To-day it is almost denuded of walnut timber. If the State of Kentucky had retained its walnut timber, that timber would now be worth possibly $1,000 an acre; but, Mr. President, Indians, I presume, would still be roaming there; white people would not have lived there. You can not have your pie and eat it, too.

Now, carrying further the suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin with reference to Nevada, if Nevada, by the restriction upon the sale of this 7,000,000 acres of land, would be so very greatly benefited, then it would be benefited if the sale of any of its land were prohibited for 25 years. In that case, where would be your population, which is going to make the lands increase in value? It would have to remain somewhere else outside of the State of Nevada, because it could not find homes there.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the suggestion of the Senator from New Mexico brings me back to the suggestions made and arguments used, as history records, when the legislative acts in Wisconsin were passed to put its school lands upon the market; that to encourage the settlement of the State it was necessary the lands should be sold. Nevada has a very large expanse of territory outside of this 7,000,000 acres of land upon which people who are looking for homes may settle.

Mr. FALL. Will the Senator from Wisconsin yield further?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. FALL. Of course, I understand the Senator from Wisconsin is sincere, as is the Senator from New Mexico, in the discussion of this matter. I see the thing possibly from the other side, but I should like to know if those lands which have been disposed of have not been paying taxes for counties, municipalities, the State, public schools, and all other purposes, and have they not been settled by actual residents and settlers of the State who have gone there, raising families and forming a part of the population?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Oh, yes; Mr. President, that is true; and the people who bought the lands at the low price fixed by the legislature at that time held the lands for years before they would sell to actual settlers, and thus made large sums of money by the speculation. That is exactly what can be done under the terms of this bill. The purchasers of these 640-acre tracts, if they succeed in acquiring the water holes and the places of vantage for the control of large areas about them, will be able to hold on to them until the other unoccupied lands of the State are occupied, and then demand a very high price and secure an enormous profit out of this donation made by the Federal Government to that State ostensibly for the purpose of benefiting its common schools and university.

Now, Mr. President, let us look at this matter exactly as it is. Here is a proposition to give 7,000,000 acres of land to the State of Nevada for the benefit of its common schools and State university. If the Federal Government were to be taxed to support those schools, and had this land which it might use with good business judgment to build up a fund to relieve itself of taxation in the future, what would it do? It would hold on to the lands until such time as it could create such a fund as would relieve it forever from taxation for the support of those schools.

Certainly the lands in Wisconsin that belonged to the Wisconsin University and the agricultural school and the common schools are being taxed in the State, and the people in that State are being taxed more than $2,000,000 a year to maintain the university, and besides they are being taxed, of course, very heavily for the support of the common schools. Had the lands been held pursuant to the spirit of the trust which donated them to the State, the whole State would to-day be relieved to a very large extent of the burdens of taxation that are now laid upon it to maintain those educational institutions.

Mr. President, I trust the amendment which I have offered will be adopted.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat, and in line with the suggestion that I was interjecting, I want to say that I can understand how the argument of the Senator might apply to some extent to an old settled State; that is, where there are in private ownership sufficient lands and sufficient resources to support the people, to support educational institutions, and to support the Government, or where there is sufficient income for all those purposes, his argument is all right. I can not, however, agree with the argument that in building up a new country there is any possible process by which you can keep the land away from the people and at the same time build up the population of the State. I can not conceive any possibility, in a State like mine, for instance, of holding the lands for 25 years to get additional profit on them, and at the same time secure a population for the State, unless I am willing to agree with the idea entertained by some people, apparently, in this day that we should now constitute the relationship between this Government and its citizens of landlord and tenant, and that we should constitute the people now building up the remaining portion of the great West into communities of tenant farmers. I can not agree to that view.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, just a word in answer, and it will of necessity be something of a repetition of what I said before.

The grant proposed here is one-tenth only of the area of the State of Nevada. Nine-tenths of the acreage of that State will be open to settlement. We would not be keeping the land out of the reach of the people.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, does not the Senator know that any business man would locate these 7,000,000 acres on the best remaining portion? They would necessarily be cut out of the heart of the public domain in Nevada, out of the most valuable remaining portion, and the Senator would have that vast acreage tied up for 10 or 25 years.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I would either vote for it to be used in the largest possible measure of benefit for the school fund or I would not vote for it at all. I would not make that donation to the cattle companies of that State, for that is practically what it amounts to if it is to be sold to them at $1.25 an acre.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I think a word should be said on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Of course it is very easy to understand that the Senator from Wisconsin should be exceedingly apprehensive about the manner in which the Western States will handle grants made to them by the General Government, in view of the record made by his own State, which has not been, as he suggests, particularly creditable to it; but I should like to suggest to the Senator from Wisconsin that it is not very fair or very sound to assume that any such prodigality will be exhibited by States receiving land grants at this time. We should not guide our action by what was done by a State such as the State of Wisconsin, which disposed of its munificent grant during the time when millions of acres were being granted to the railroads and other corporations of that character. I say it is not fair to assume, and it is not sound to assume, that the States to-day having grants of public lands from the Government are going to dispose of those lands with that degree of prodigality and want of foresight that characterized the elder States in the disposition of their grants.

We ought to consider what the States are doing to-day with their grants. Take the State of Oregon, for instance. It was likewise entirely unfrugal in the disposition of its land grant, while the State of Washington, on the other side, has made a most creditable record. Washington, however, did not get its grant until 1889, while the State of Oregon got its grant when it came into the Union 30 years before. So it is with my own State. The grant to it likewise was made subject to restriction in the disposition of the land, so that the State was unable to sell any of the land at less than $10 an acre. I advised the Senate the other day that the lands granted to that State for university purposes have been disposed of at an average price of upward of $16 per acre, showing that the State does not feel disposed to sell even at the limited price of $10 an acre, but that the State is carefully husbanding its grant and disposing of it at the very best possible prices obtainable and with much business prudence and judgment. The same thing characterizes all of the Western States in the disposition of their land grants. So that I think we may well intrust to them a larger measure of discretion in the disposition of these lands than would be warranted if we were guided solely by the experience of the older States.

So I say to the Senator from Wisconsin that, if he thinks that the limit of $1.25 an acre placed upon the price of these lands is too small, he ought to urge that it be increased; but certainly, upon reflection, he will give no countenance to his own amendment; which proposes, Mr. President, to tie up 7,000,000 acres of the best lands in the State of Nevada so that they can not be utilized for any purpose whatever, forcing settlers who come into that State to take the inferior lands, in the hope that by development of the inferior lands the lands thus set apart, after the lapse of 25 years, will constitute a great fund for the public schools of that State.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, along the line which the Senator is now speaking, I wish to say that at the time Wisconsin was disposing of its public lands, for I do not know what price, but evidently getting something for them, this great Government, which is so much better able apparently to handle our resources than are we, the people of the States, disposed of 81,193,000 acres in railroad grants absolutely without a dollar of return. For instance, the Union Pacific was granted 11,000,000 acres; the Oregon Branch of the Central Pacific, 3,000,000 acres; and the Northern Pacific, 36,000,000 acres.

I merely call the attention of the Senator to the fact that that was the policy; and to the further fact that I think, if the Senator would make a simple calculation for the Senator from Wisconsin, he would find that if these lands in Nevada were sold now for $1.25 an acre and the money was put out at 4 per cent interest, compounding it annually, as could be done, there could be bought back in 25 years, at the rate of $10 per acre, double the 7,000,000 acres which it is proposed to grant to the State.

Mr. WALSH. I want to add, Mr. President, that the effect of the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin, if adopted, will be, of course, to nullify the grant, because the State of Nevada will not select 7,000,000 acres of land to be tied up for 25 years, and ask the settlers in that State to take the inferior lands. The State will not make the selection; and consequently the land will be open to appropriation exactly as it is now, and the grant will in effect be nullified.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I want to inquire of the Senator whether, in his judgment, under this amendment, if it were adopted, it would not be possible and proper for the State of Nevada to lease these lands during the 25 years in such quantities, so far as acreage is concerned, as she might see fit?

Mr. WALSH. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. NORRIS. Such leases would not even be restricted, as I understand the amendment, by the 640-acre prohibition, which applies in the case of sale?

Mr. WALSH. Yes, Mr. President; the Senator is quite right. A restriction upon the sale in all probability would not be a restriction upon the right to lease; but the Senator is from a public-land State himself and he knows that no Western State undertakes to lease its lands as a permanent, desirable system. It simply leases until it can dispose of the lands, because the State has exactly the same purpose in encouraging settlement as has the Federal Government. The State does not want persons to lease its lands if others are willing to buy those lands and make permanent homes on them; and I need not say to the Senator that nobody is going to lease land for the purpose of making a home on it, however much any great cattle company might desire to pursue that system in order to carry on its business.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit a further interruption, it seems to me that it would be very practicable for the State of Nevada to lease this land in quantities for the purpose of grazing. I presume that if it were sold it would not be sold to men who would go upon the land as they have gone upon homesteads to make homes. It would have to be disposed of in reasonably large quantities, embracing at least several sections, and would then be used for grazing purposes. If I understand correctly, about the only use to which these lands in Nevada can be put now is for grazing purposes.

In my State for a great many years we have been leasing school lands. We have had no difficulty in leasing them, and we have provided in the leases for an appraisement every five years, as I remember now, during the term of the lease, which has run for 20 years. It seems to me that it would be practicable for the State of Nevada to provide, for instance, for the leasing of four, six or seven sections of land for a term of 10, 15, or 20 years.

The only object that I can see in the pending amendment—and I think it is the one intended by the Senator from Wisconsin—is that between now and the expiration of the 25-year period it may be that these lands will be very valuable. There may be some method by which they can be cultivated or irrigated or put to some use, about which we know nothing at the present time, the idea being to hold them until the State can get the benefit of them, and in the meantime the State can lease them.

Mr. FALL. I should like to ask the Senator if the lands would not still be there, and, if they are going to be valuable, if the value would not attach to them?

Mr. NORRIS. Exactly.

Mr. FALL. There is no difference if they go in there as individuals; the State would get its income from taxation.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes; but it would be much better if the State of Nevada owned a million acres of land that was worth only $1.25 an acre now, and she knew that 25 years from now that land would be worth $50 an acre, if she would hold the land, and in the meantime lease it and get out of it what she could.

Mr. FALL. Why, Mr. President, just as I suggested a moment ago, if the State sells it at $1.25 an acre, it pays taxes at once. The interest at only 4 per cent would be 5 cents an acre a year. Aside from that, it collects its local, municipal, county, and State taxation upon that land. It gets the settler upon that land if it is four or five thousand acres just as much as if he only occupied 10 acres. If the Senator will look a little into the matter, he will find that computing that interest annually, letting it rest and draw interest for 25 years, he could pay $50 an acre and more if he could buy it.

Mr. NORRIS. But the Senator knows that if the State of Nevada leased these lands, the probabilities are that the lease money that she took in would be applied to and used in the school fund of the State, if the lands were retained.

Mr. FALL. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. And out of that she could get a very large sum of money that would be permanent. I am assuming that it would not be lost or misappropriated. It would be there forever, the same as the land would be, and she would get the income from it; but in the meantime, as the land became more valuable, if it did become more valuable, she would get an increased rental from it. It would be used for the same purpose, namely, grazing, that it would be used for in case she sold it; and, as far as getting additional settlers is concerned, I do not see any difference between one plan and the other.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, if you can just work out some scheme here by legislation by which you can have a magnificent undeveloped domain and can settle that domain without settling it, and can make it valuable without doing anything to make it valuable, but can just sit down here in your seat in the Senate and see your property increase and increase and increase in value with people living somewhere else, and with no use being made of it at all—if that scheme can be worked out by legislation, then I, for one, am willing to admit that the old theory of government under which I was brought up was a delusion and a snare, and that all you have to do is to legislate and create heaven on earth.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I desire to say only a word in answer to the line of argument pursued by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

Of course all of the Western States are leasing their unsold lands wherever they can lease them. Many of them have leased them ever since they came into the Union, or after the selections were made, only a few years after the year 1889, for instance, in the case of the four great northwestern States. But in every case they lease subject to the right of the State to sell whenever the circumstances seem to justify putting the lands up for sale; and I shall regard it as exceedingly unfortunate if any considerable body of lands shall go into the control of the States with a restriction upon their right to dispose of them when the conditions are ripe for their disposal. Whenever the time comes that settlers desire to go upon those lands and take them up and cultivate them the State ought to be permitted to sell them.

I should listen with considerable sympathy to a suggestion that the minimum price ought to be increased so that the lands would be sold only to those who could use them in connection with agricultural development and not be sold in great tracts simply for the purpose of making grazing ground for great cattle companies; but I submit that the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin is a nullification of the grant.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I wish to say a word with relation to this matter.

I have no doubt that the suggestion made by the Senator from Wisconsin is made in the utmost good faith and that he believes it would be to the interest of Nevada to limit the time in which they can sell only after 25 years. But I must say that I have had a little experience on a land board in the State of Colorado, and we found there a condition which, it seems to me, is directly antagonistic to the position which the Senator from Wisconsin has taken.

We have large grants of land for school purposes in the State of Colorado. We have a leasing system with respect to those grazing lands. The amount that is paid is 5 cents an acre upon absolutely dry land and 8 cents an acre upon land that has a spring on it or a stream running through it. That is a very small amount, and yet it is impossible to get more than that amount. Even under that system there is nearly a million acres of land that nobody leases at all. The amount which is thus realized by leasing is not equal to the amount of taxes which that land would pay for State and county and school purposes if it were in the hands of private owners; and the result is that, so far as income is concerned, it would be to the advantage of the State of Colorado, if this were going to be a permanent policy for hundreds of years, absolutely to give away its land in order to raise taxes upon it.

Mr. President, the boards of these Western States are just as anxious to get good prices for their lands as anyone can be. They generally consist of the high officials of the State, and they are just as anxious to make a record in regard to the amount that can be realized as anyone in this body possibly can be. Sometimes they are mistaken; but, nevertheless, it is one of the things that we generally recognize as true that it does not pay to hold vacant land for a long period of time. That is true to such an extent that a calculation of the small cost of some pieces of land running a series of years shows the absolute loss there is in holding vacant land.

For instance, there is a calculation that I made upon a statement—I saw it in a book many years ago, and I made a calculation on it—with regard to the island of Manhattan, which was bought from the Indians for $37 three hundred years ago. The prevailing rate of interest in my country at the time I made the calculation was 8 per cent. I calculated how much $37 would amount to in 300 years at 8 per cent, compounded every year, and I found that the sum amounts to the entire value of all of the real estate of the United States, with all the property that has been built on it, all the houses and all of the railroads thereof. It amounts to that enormous total by this process of doubling every 10 years. Double $37 thirty times and you will find that it runs up into the billions and billions of dollars.

That simply illustrates the fact that it does not pay to hold vacant lands. Of course, the land in New York City has paid for itself. Why? By reason of the fact that houses have been built upon it and great rents have been obtained; but if the land had remained vacant you would have found that it would have been a loss, unquestionably, even at the low original price of $37.

Mr. President, we have a difficulty in our State by reason of holding some of the State lands. We put a pretty good price on them, and tried to get it. They sell for all the way from $8 an acre to about $15 or $16 an acre for dry lands. Lands that may be the subject of irrigation run up as high as $54 and $55 an acre. We are eager to get it, and if we think the price can not be obtained at the moment, sometimes a considerable length of time is taken to try to get that price. But the difficulty with the situation is that the counties in which these lands lie can not tax them, and the result is a great loss to those communities and to the school districts in which they are located.

We have continual petitions to the State board to this effect, "Why is it that you take thousands of acres in our county"—and they have clustered those lands by lieu selection—"and have them not subject to taxation? It is crippling our school fund here. You can make from that land by reason of taxation alone a great deal more than you can possibly get from any rents that you might obtain, even if you rented it all." Inasmuch as they never rent it all, and never can rent it all, although they advertise occasionally for it and try to make as much of the land leasing as they possibly can, yet, notwithstanding that, a very small percentage on the value of the land is obtained. If this were a permanent policy of leasing in the State of Colorado it would pay the State to deed away the land as a gift to somebody, in order to make him pay taxes upon it for State, county, and school purposes.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to ask the Senator whether there is a limitation in the grant of the Colorado lands that prevents Colorado from selling them below a certain price?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, no. We can sell for any price, I think.

Mr. NORRIS. How long has Colorado had those lands?

Mr. SHAFROTH. We have had those lands ever since we were admitted to statehood, in 1876.

Mr. NORRIS. If it has been such a loss to hold them, I wish the Senator would explain why Colorado did not give them away when she first got the lands.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Because the State officials are always hoping, year after year, that they will be able to sell them, and they have sold a great deal.

Mr. NORRIS. They ought to have realized by this time the fact that they have made a mistake, and sell them very cheaply.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Not necessarily. Of course, there is an increase—there is not any doubt about that—but the increase does not equal the rate of interest that you would get. For instance, with some State lands we make the most favorable terms. The purchasers have to pay only 5 per cent for the cash payment, and then they have 17 years in which to pay the balance. But the rate of interest that we charge on the deferred payments is 7 per cent, and that 7 per cent on these lands brings a great, big income to the State. There is no doubt about that in the case of a sale. In the case of a lease they do not seem to give anything for the lease. Five cents an acre and 8 cents an acre is about all they give, and that, of course, would be an insignificant sum compared with the interest that you could get upon the amount for which the property sells.

Mr. President, this land will be segregated. It will be segregated in large tracts in some counties; and it is going to cripple those counties in their development, I have not any doubt. The State board is going to look after the matter in the most careful manner, and is going to seize the opportunity of selling for the very best price it can, and is going to refuse prices that are ridiculously low.

Those people are the ones who know the conditions. They know what is to the best interests of their State. At least, their judgment is better than that of us who are here in Washington. That being the case, it seems to me we ought to let them sell within a reasonable discretion as to what the lands are worth. If the Senator from Wisconsin would fix a little higher minimum price on the matter, I think it would be much more favorably considered than the question of exempting this land from any sales for 25 years.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to ask the senior Senator from Nevada a question.

Some two or three years ago the Senator from Nevada introduced into the Senate a bill, which was referred to the Public Lands Committee, for the purpose of acquiring water holes in the State of Nevada. If this bill passes with its provisions today and becomes a law thereafter, would it not be possible for a cattleman desiring to purchase a water hole to purchase the land and thereby have absolute control of the water upon the land? And is it not also true that the water holes of Nevada are such that the water can not be used for irrigating the lands, but used only for stock-watering places, and that the person buying the land on which the water hole is located would control thousands of acres of grazing land adjacent to the land so purchased?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I think the Senator is mistaken in saying that I introduced a bill for the acquisition of water holes in Nevada. My recollection is that there was one water hole there that was a very serious bog, into which the cattle on the free range of the country were constantly blundering, resulting in the destruction of hundreds of cattle every year; and I introduced a bill intended to provide for fencing this hole in such a way as to keep the cattle out. Some of my friends from the West, however, thought that was an unwise policy, and the bill temporarily failed. But my recollection is that ultimately that menace became so serious that that bill passed, putting the protection of this hole under the control of either the Secretary of Agriculture or the Forestry Service, or somebody else, so that it would be well administered.

As to the general question whether or not water holes will be acquired under this bill, I will state that I imagine that these water holes, as a rule, are simply springs, and my impression is that almost every water hole in the State of Nevada has already been acquired. We have a grant there of 3,000,000 acres, and it has taken about 65 years to exhaust that grant. We have in that State only 2,700,000 acres as against only 11,000,000 acres in the State of Washington, which came into the Union about 25 or 30 years later. I think that shows how slow the demand for lands in that State has been, simply because of the scarcity of water. Unless they can discover subterranean waters there or enlarge to a very great extent the use of the waters now in the State, I do not see to what use these lands can be put except for grazing, at least temporarily.

I have no doubt the energies of the State will be applied in their development under very scientific direction. They are disposed there to submit these matters to the direction of the skilled and scientific men in the university, and I have no doubt that every effort will be made for the proper development of this 7,000,000 acres of land. I have not the slightest doubt that if any legislation is necessary to protect such localities as the Senator refers to that legislation will be adopted by the State.

The Legislature of Nevada is now largely composed of young men who are graduates of the university of the State. They are disposed to make the university a great factor in the civil life of the State. I have not the slightest doubt that it will have the most intelligent direction and that there will be nothing of the profligacy that has characterized many of the older States, which were much more careless about these matters in the administration of their landed estates.

Mr. SMOOT. Is it the idea of the Senator that the land that will be sold will be fenced?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Oh, no; I think not. It would not pay to fence it. The Senator can realize that thus far we have only been able to sell in that State, with the freest land laws, providing for homesteads and desert entries and everything of that kind, 2,700,000 acres in a period of 60 years of statehood.

Mr. SMOOT. The reason why I asked the question of the Senator was that the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] said that this land would be taken up largely by farmers who were already there, and that they would fence the 640-acre tracts.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I thought the Senator asked whether the State itself would fence them.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no.

Mr. NEWLANDS. No. I imagine that there will be some cases, where a man gains 640 acres as an adjunct to some existing irrigated farm of from 40 to 100 acres that he now has, where he will endeavor to put up some kind of a fence—a cheap fence, because there is not sufficient value there to warrant a strong fence.

Mr. SMOOT. If all the water within the State has been acquired, I do not see how it is possible to use these lands for grazing purposes. There must be some water developed somewhere in order that the land may be of use even for grazing purposes.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The State has made an appropriation for developing artesian wells. In some valleys there are water developments. That is being done under the direction of a professor of the university now. All I can say is that I am sure these lands will be much better developed in the hands of the State than they will be in the hands of the Federal Government, and I look for no mistaken policy in the future regarding them.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from Utah, may I ask a question of the Senator from Nevada right here?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator understands the character of that land pretty well. With a minimum price of $1.25 an acre, I wish to ask the Senator if he is not morally certain that at least 95 per cent of that land will be still in the hands of the State 25 years from now without any restriction in the legislation.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I should hope it would not be in the possession of the State for so long a period as that, but I think it will be for a considerable period.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Nevada that, in my opinion, no such percentage of the land will be held by the State for that length of time. In my opinion these lands will be sold to individuals, and immediately the individuals will transfer the lands to cattlemen who desire to graze cattle upon the lands. That is what the lands are fit for, if they are fit for anything. That is the use that is going to be made of the lands. If the statement that has just been made by the Senator is correct, that the great majority of these lands are to be held by the State, then the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin will not hurt the State in any way, shape, or form.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Oh, I do not think they will be held for any such period as that.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not, either, as far as that is concerned; but the question is, Mr. President, whether it is the best policy for Nevada to allow these lands to be sold for $1.25 an acre.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I think that can best be left to the State of Nevada. I am sure she will exercise wise judgment regarding it.

Mr. SMOOT. If it is to be left to Nevada, then it ought to be left with no limitation whatever, and the limitation of $1.25 an acre ought to be taken off. I do not see why there should be any limitation, unless we are going to have a limitation that the Congress of the United States deems wise.

Mr. President, I am sorry to say that the school lands that were granted to my own State were in many, many cases sold for next to nothing. I know of lands that have been sold that did not bring the State 10 cents an acre after the expenses of making the examinations required under the law were paid; and I am sorry that in our enabling act there was not a limitation placed upon the granted lands to be sold within my State of $10 an acre, the same as in the case of Idaho, Montana, and several other of the Western States, and, I think, South Dakota. It is true that there would not have been as many acres sold, but it is also true that the State would have had more money in the school fund to-day, with less acres sold, by hundreds of thousands of dollars, than it has at the present time. I can not for the life of me see, if we are going to make any limitation at all, why we ought not to make a reasonable limitation instead of one that it seems to me is hardly worth considering.

This bill provides that Nevada can select the very best lands that are left in the State. It does not make any difference where they are, whether next to a farm or lands that can be irrigated by the establishment of dams. There is no restriction at all upon the State in selecting the lands. I think if there is going to be a restriction as to price there ought to be also an amount fixed that would justify Congress in acting, and that the land when sold would amount to something to the State.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, seriously, the Senator from Utah would not want the State of Utah so handicapped and circumscribed that it could not select the best lands in that State, would he?

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, the State of Utah, Mr. President, in the case of the school lands that have been granted to her, has no right whatever to select. They are in place. It is quite different in this bill.

Mr. BORAH. But the Senator from Utah knows the conditions in the State of Nevada with reference to the land, and it would be utterly useless to give this right to the State of Nevada unless it were going to have some discretion as to selecting the best lands there, because the worst lands would be utterly useless.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator must have misunderstood me if I made any statement that would lead him to such a conclusion. I simply say that under the provisions of this bill, of course, Nevada will take the very best lands; the State will select the very best lands within the State.

Mr. BORAH. And they are very poor.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, some are and some are not.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Are there 7,000,000 acres of good land there?

Mr. SMOOT. I did not say how many million acres there are that are good or how many acres that are not good, but I know that all the lands that are left in the State of Nevada that could be selected under this bill are not poor lands.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. FALL. Does not the Senator know that there are two great irrigation projects in the State of Nevada, and the Government of the United States has reserved the irrigable lands under those projects and the State could not take them? Is it not the law now that the United States can reserve lands under any project where it proposes to establish irrigation works and that the State can not take it?

Mr. SMOOT. Why, Mr. President, of course the Senator from Utah knows that there are two irrigation or reclamation projects in the State of Nevada, and the Senator knows also that the Government has withdrawn certain lands under those projects. But that is not all the land there is in the State of Nevada that is capable of irrigation, and who can tell under investigations that are at present being made in Nevada but that there will be water discovered from underground sources that will change conditions in Nevada completely.

Mr. FALL. Will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. FALL. Upon what assumption does the Senator proceed to draw the inference that the people of Nevada have not just as much intelligence as has the Senator from Utah, and that if those lands are worth more than $1.25 an acre they will not proceed to get more than $1.25 for them? They are not limited here to selling them at $1.25; they are granted the privilege of selling them at a minimum of $1.25; and they can do as the people of New Mexico are doing, they can get as much more as the purchaser will pay, and the people of New Mexico have just as much intelligence as the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am not going to discuss the question as to the intelligence of the Senator from Utah or the people of Nevada, but I do know that it has been the late practice of Congress to put a limit to the price of lands which are granted by the United States to a State, and I know there is not a State where a limit has been fixed that does not to-day believe it was the best thing possible for the State itself and for its educational institutions.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I do not agree with the Senator from Utah that that statement is correct at all. I have made some little study also of the land laws, and I have noticed that the statutes of the United States are full of special land laws for the benefit of the State of Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I made the statement, and I will ask the Senators representing States that have a minimum price named in their land grants whether they would like to have the minimum price at which the land could be sold removed and whether it has been a detriment to the State. I will ask the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] if he had his way to-day whether he would like to have the $10 minimum price removed?

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I want to say that if I had my way about it I would have no limit in the bill at all.

Mr. SMOOT. There would be consistency in that.

Mr. PITTMAN. I would have no limit there. I only placed it there because some of the Senators were very much in favor of it and thought it ought to be fixed at $1.25. I know that the people of our State made a mistake with regard to their early grant. They are perfectly conscious of that fact now. I know the people who constitute the legislature of our State to-day are enacting some of the most progressive legislation in the United States. I know that their legislature now could be trusted to devise rules and regulations governing the disposal of the land which would be based upon intelligence and a knowledge of existing conditions, and I believe they would get more for the land and more for the school fund than from anything we can do here, because we do not know the conditions sufficiently to protect them in that way. The only protection I have put in the bill is a provision that the land must be sold at public auction so as to get at the price. The legislature will place such other restrictions on it as they see fit.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] if he desires to answer my question.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I am pleased to answer the Senator from Utah. I am very glad that the limitation is in the grant, and I never would countenance any effort to remove it. It meets with universal approval in my State and no one could get a public hearing there to remove it. I am in favor of placing a limitation upon the price of the lands in the State of Nevada, but as it would be most unfortunate, to my mind, that 7,000,000 acres of land in the State of Nevada should be obtained by a private individual, who would hold it and not dispose of it for 25 years, in order that he might at the end of that time reap some profit by the transaction, I think for that and for additional reasons it would be most unfortunate to put 7,000,000 acres of land in the hands of the State of Nevada and tie it up so that it could not be disposed of during all that period.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, Mr. President, I heard the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] this afternoon speak of the minimum price for which land could be sold in his State, and he spoke of it in terms of commendation. I do not know a State, as I said before, that has a minimum that does not approve of such a limitation.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. GRONNA. It is manifest, Mr. President, that Congress, or at least the Senate, has not been able to learn what is the real value of public lands. I have had pending before the Committee on Public Lands the bill providing for the classification of all public lands, but it seems that it is impossible to have any action taken. I wish to ask the Senator from Utah if he does not think that the Government and the States might derive some benefit from legislation of that kind?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that, in my opinion, it would be a splendid step forward if all the public lands of the United States were classified.

Mr. GRONNA. That bill has been pending before the committee of which the Senator is a member, and I should be very glad to see that something is done with it.

However, I rose, Mr. President, to say that the Senator from Utah is right in his statement that when the States were admitted at the same time some years ago—North and South Dakota, Montana, and Washington—there was a limitation made in the enabling act. We provided in our State constitution that no land should be sold for less than $10 an acre. At that time nearly all the land west of the Missouri River in our State was not worth to exceed 80 cents an acre. Some of the railroad lands were sold at that time for 80 cents an acre. Only last month some of those lands were sold for $40 an acre. So it is evident it was a good thing for our State that there was at least a minimum fixed. The minimum at that time, of course, seemed to be very large.

I simply wish to say this, if the Senator will permit me. If the lands in the State of Nevada are not worth more than $1.25 an acre, I doubt if they are worth enough for anybody to go upon them, even for grazing purposes. I believe that we should fix a higher minimum than $1.25, but there is much of merit in the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

I believe, as the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] said a moment ago, that you would derive as much if the lands could be leased in large areas. I believe the State would derive as much from that source as it would by selling them at $1.25 an acre. In the course of 25 years, if the land had any value at all, the State would get all the benefit from the advance in the price of the land.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not desire to detain the Senate longer, but I wish to say that if we are going to put a limit upon these lands it ought to be a higher limit than $1.25 an acre. If we are not going to put a limit upon the lands and allow the disposition of the land to entirely rest with the State, then it seems to me that the bill ought to be amended by striking out the provision which has already been acted on by the Senate.

I know, as far as the State is concerned, its school fund will receive more money with a higher limit than $1.25 than it will if that limit is taken off. I know there will be applications made to the State for the land, and if no limit of price is provided for political pressure will be brought upon the officials of the State to sell the lands as cheaply as possible, and if not complied with there is the temptation. The school fund of Nevada should receive every dollar possible from whatever amount is granted the State.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. How does the Senator know?

Mr. SMOOT. I speak from past history of other States.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. We have waked up. If the Senator will permit me, I, for one from the West, protest against the assumption by the Senator from Utah, with my long years of acquaintance with him and my confidence in his position on the western question, to come to-day and dispute and fight a bill coming from our committee. I do not believe the Senator was there on that day, but without a dissenting voice, as far as I know, the committee reported to make Nevada equal to the States of Arizona and New Mexico, similarly situated, giving her a chance to educate her children, giving her a chance to get a school fund now. The Senator is assuming that the State is going to steal from its own school fund, when the world has already awakened. No man knows better than the Senator from Utah that you can not do to-day the things complained of that have been done there, nor can such things be done any more in any other State of the Union.

I for one want to say now and forever that, as far as the Western States are concerned, and I am fairly well acquainted with most of them, there is more safety, and a long way more safety, for a State from her own resources, used by her own people, than there is from all the red tape and the enormous expense and the time that is taken up in attempting to govern these States 3,000 miles away by a many headed monarchy. It is only giving liberty to our State; it is showing some confidence in our own legislature. We are certainly as competent to take care of Arizona in Arizona as I am here or as any other Senator on the floor.

Then, another thing, most of those States have allayed all this fear. Some of them have what is known as the referendum. How can you dispose of land if the people say you shall not, and at a price cheaper than they want?

I for one express my disappointment at the diversion from the old rule the Senator and I have so long tried to follow; that is, to liberate, as far as we could, our Western States from the domination of the Federal Government.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SMOOT. In just a moment I will yield.

Mr. President, if all the Senator from Arizona has said is true, then it is not going to hurt the State of Nevada to put a reasonable sale limit on the land. I am fully aware, Mr. President, that I have been well disposed toward the Western States in their land difficulties, in the question of protecting the lands of Western States, but whatever action is taken by Congress ought to be taken to apply to all the States and not to one particular State.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. There is one difference, and it is a wide difference. An agreement applied to Arizona would not apply to Washington at all, and no one knows it better than the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. There is nothing in this bill that would not apply to Arizona just as well as to Nevada. There is no question about that. That is the objection I have to the bill. The bill is dealing with a question that, if dealt with at all, ought to be dealt with in a general way and not apply it to any specific State. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER].

Mr. McCUMBER. Allow me to suggest to the Senator right here that he might cure one of the defects in the bill by providing for an appraisement of the lands before any of them shall be sold, and then a provision that they shall not be sold for less than the appraised value. This would cover those classes that have special value by reason of irrigation. For instance, while we have a minimum price fixed in our own State in the grant, none of our lands that I know of were sold as low as the minimum price; but the legislature provided that they should be appraised, and in nearly every instance where there has been an appraisement at all the appraisement has been considerably more than the minimum price, and nearly every sale has been above the price fixed by the appraisers.

So if the Senator felt that there was danger in some tracts being sold too cheap at this minimum price, a little provision which would require their appraisement would meet that objection. From what I have seen of a considerable quantity of these lands my own opinion is that it will be many a long year before the greater proportion of them will ever be sold for $1.25 an acre; but there are some that are more valuable.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator, of course, has passed through Nevada on the railroad, but I want to say to the Senator that there are valleys in Nevada that are very beautiful valleys. Perhaps the Senator has not visited those valleys. I do not expect that the State will ever select the lands that are adjacent to the railroad passing through Nevada.

Another thing I want to say is that if we are going to donate to Nevada 7,000,000 acres of land there ought to be every precaution that is possible made in the bill so that Nevada educational institutions will receive just as much benefit from it as is possible.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me ask the Senator, then, if he does not think there should be a provision in the bill for an appraisement and a prohibition of sale for less than the appraised value?

Mr. SMOOT. I think, Mr. President, that that would be a splendid provision to put in the bill. I have no doubt of it.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 30 minutes in executive session the doors were reopened.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 7, 1916.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite Spirit, of whom we are each an integral part, we bless Thee for that holy influence which brings us to Thee in prayer, where life meets life, faith is enhanced, hope burns brightest, and that profound and subtle quality of the soul which we call love pours itself out in all its fullness, holds us close to Thee, and makes the whole world akin. Prayer is the highest expression of our religious nature, sweeps away all creeds, all conventionalities, makes us one with Thee, and fits us, therefore, for the smallest and greatest tasks of life. Give us that religion in its full power that we may serve Thee and our fellow men with perfect fidelity. In His name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, February 5, 1916, was read and approved.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the poem "Growing Old," which was referred to in the memorial exercises in the House on Sunday, January 23.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. DILLON] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the poem entitled "Growing Old." Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CALENDAR FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT.

The SPEAKER. This is Unanimous Consent Calendar day. The Clerk will report the first bill.

PATENTS.

The first business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 900) amending sections 476, 477, and 440 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER. Who is in charge of this bill?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MORRISON] would have charge of the bill. I think he is absent because he was called away on account of an operation performed on his brother a short time ago up in Minnesota.

Mr. CLINE. His brother died, and the gentleman from Indiana is absent on that account. In his absence I desire to see his rights protected.

Mr. MANN. I should like to say to somebody on the Committee on Patents that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MORRISON] told me when he went away that probably somebody would look after this bill on Calendar Wednesday. This committee will be on call next Wednesday.

Mr. CLINE. If he has arranged for that, I have no objection.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can ask to have the bill passed without prejudice.

Mr. CLINE. I ask that this bill be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to have the bill just read passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS ST. LOUIS RIVER, MINN. AND WIS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 3032) authorizing the county of St. Louis to construct a bridge across the St. Louis River between Minnesota and Wisconsin.

The bill was read.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I ask that this bill be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] asks that this bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

NAVY YARDS AT NEW YORK AND MARE ISLAND.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was House joint resolution 98, making part of the appropriation, "Increase of the Navy, construction and machinery," in the naval act approved March 3, 1915, available for the extension of building ways and equipment at the navy yards at New York and Mare Island, Cal.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the money heretofore appropriated under the appropriation "Increase of the Navy, construction and machinery," in the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, approved March 3, 1915, the sums of not exceeding $100,000 for navy yard, New York, and not exceeding $500,000 for navy yard, Mare Island, Cal., are hereby made available for the extension of building ways and equipment necessary for the construction of battleships or battle cruisers in those yards.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, who is in charge of this bill?

The SPEAKER. It was introduced by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT], but the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] seems to be in charge of it.

Mr. MANN. I will withdraw the objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee not being present, the matter be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to pass the joint resolution without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object. No excuse is given for the absence of the gentleman. This will probably come up later.

Mr. BUTLER. The chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee has been engaged all the morning on a hearing before that committee, and has started over here from the Office Building. I have no doubt he will be here in a few moments. I am not authorized to move to suspend the rules or to ask anything.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

Mr. MANN. This is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of this joint resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House joint resolution 98, with Mr. HOWARD in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the joint resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, in the absence of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT], the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and of other members of that committee, because of a meeting of that committee, I desire to state that this bill makes available the money necessary to equip the navy yard at New York and the navy yard at Mare Island with building ways and other equipment to permit the construction of the two battleships which were authorized at the last session of Congress. When bids were opened for the construction of those battleships, the bids of the private contractors, taking into account items which they proposed to eliminate, the expense of which they proposed to place on the Government, exceeded the limit of cost. The bids submitted by the Mare Island and New York Navy Yards were within the limit of cost. Those ships are of a size in excess of any ships which have heretofore been built for the Navy. At the navy yard in New York the building ways are not sufficiently long to accommodate those ships, and it is necessary to lengthen them. At the Mare Island Navy Yard the building ways are inadequate, and the money asked for at the Mare Island Navy Yard is to equip the plant with building ways and equip it for battleship construction. The Secretary of the Navy decided, under the naval appropriation act, to assign those ships to the navy yards for construction; first, because the bids of the private contractors were in excess of the limit of cost fixed by Congress; and, secondly, because of the indefinite proposals made by private plants as to the time within which the ships could be completed. Those battleships are to be constructed as soon as possible, and this bill is to expedite their construction, and it is essential that the money be available at this time, if delay is to be eliminated. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I regret very greatly, indeed, that the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee is not here. He intended to be here, and the occasion for his absence I am unable to explain.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] has made a statement which is accurate, that the purpose of this legislation is to enable the Secretary of the Navy to take out of the funds already provided for ships of war 43 and 44, in one case that for New York to rebuild and strengthen the ways, and at the Mare Island Navy Yard the construction of the ways.

One year ago, Mr. Chairman, this Congress directed that two great ships of war should be constructed. They are unnamed, because they are unbuilt; they are unnamed, because construction is not yet begun, although they were authorized a year ago. It is true, as the gentleman from New York stated, that when the bids were submitted to the Secretary of the Navy they exceeded the limit imposed by Congress, and therefore he concluded to build the two ships in the navy yards. On the slip in the New York Navy Yard is a ship provided for two years ago, which has been named the California, one of the largest ships in the service probably in the time of any now living.

That ship is 14 per cent completed, but will not be launched until she is 64 per cent completed, and when she will be launched nobody knows. It is simply a guess. It may be next fall, it may be next winter, it may be next spring, but it is enough to know that she is now 14 per cent completed and within a year she will be 64 per cent completed.

But we are anxious by the passage of this bill to give the Secretary of the Navy authority to proceed immediately and construct and build ships, not upon paper, but ships that will sail on the water and carry guns. If we delay longer, nothing will be accomplished. The President has recommended to the world that the largest navy should be built. Therefore, in order to hasten the completion of ships 43 and 44, the two great dreadnaughts, it is hoped that Congress will authorize the Secretary of the Navy to deduct from the stipulated price of the ships, in the case of New York, $100,000, and in the case of Mare Island, $500,000. It does not add any additional cost to the ships, but it is only to hasten their construction. If we were to wait until the regular naval appropriation bill passes the House, I presume the authority he asks for would not be given until next summer. I am not authorized by the Naval Committee of the House to say when this regular appropriation bill will be reported. But even if it is two or three months in the future, it is not well to wait that time, inasmuch as we have to construct one building way and reconstruct another. The construction of a vessel in New York can be anticipated to begin soon, and certainly on the completion of the California. In the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy this is absolutely necessary to assist him to do what Congress has directed him to do to complete these two great battleships.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. I understand from the report that the estimated cost is $1,400,000 under the amount authorized by Congress.

Mr. BUTLER. The figures stated in the report of the Secretary of the Navy I have no doubt are correct. I have not read that part of the report.

Mr. BORLAND. So this amount of $600,000 will not bring the cost of the ship above the estimate?

Mr. BUTLER. No; I have stated that if the House will agree to this resolution the cost of the ships will not thereby be increased. However, I do not pretend to say that it will not cost more to build these ships in the navy yard.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BUTLER. I will.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman spoke of a ship being completed in the New York Navy Yard; it was begun how long ago?

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, to make my best effort to answer the gentleman from Illinois, I should say about one year ago. It was authorized two years ago.

Mr. CANNON. And is 14 per cent completed?

Mr. BUTLER. In answer to the question by me to the Chief Constructor, he said last week that it was 14 per cent completed; but to be absolutely accurate on this Monday morning, I will say that perhaps it may be 15 per cent.

Mr. CANNON. It is a battleship?

Mr. BUTLER. A battleship.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman have any idea how long it will take to complete it?

Mr. BUTLER. I have a decided idea.

Mr. CANNON. What is it?

Mr. BUTLER. If we have extraordinary luck in the construction of the ship, if we double up the help, we may be able to launch it in nine months. I hope it will be next fall.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How is it that in England they build a battleship so much quicker than we do?

Mr. BUTLER. Because they use the money.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Do not we appropriate the money?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; but we cut dollar bills in two and weigh nickels, while the English do not.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BUTLER. First let me answer the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], for this is something that touches me deeply. The Speaker knows and I know that if we want anything badly we have to pay the price demanded.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is true; but suppose we paid the full price, what is the reason we can not build a battleship as quickly as England can?

Mr. BUTLER. We can.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. We have never done so.

Mr. BUTLER. Let me answer the question, because I have inquired myself, officially, and the information will be in the hearings. We will be able to show this, that if we will begin to build and supply the necessary money and push aside private construction we can build 22 ships in two years and put them to sea if we can find the men to put on them.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. BUTLER. Is the gentleman from Missouri through?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am through. I was asking for information.

Mr. BUTLER. I have given the gentleman the best that I have. I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GARDNER. Is it not true that the British meaning of the word "construct" is quite different from ours; that if we would say that it would take us three years to construct we would mean three years from the time of the laying of the keel to the commissioning of the vessel, whereas the British call the last part of the process the completion and outfitting?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question?

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Do not the English build a battleship much more quickly than we do?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes; but not so much.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They do not.

Mr. GARDNER. Not so much quicker as is usually thought. For instance, the Texas and the New York, which are the last two of our dreadnaughts, were completed in about 2 years and 9 months and 2 years and 11 months from the date of the laying of the keel. The last dreadnaught before the war that was completed for Great Britain took only about two years, but when you casually hear that Great Britain can construct a dreadnaught in one year it means that they can construct the ship, but not complete and outfit it. They can do it more quickly, but not so much more quickly as is usually thought.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I am obliged to the gentleman from Massachusetts for his information. I have reached the point in my life where I want the proof. I am tired of guessing. If we are to have a fleet, let us know what we can do in the future in the way of building it. I doubt very much whether the gentleman has the information, but I hope that he will be able to give it to us later. I doubt very much whether England can build one ship in one year. We are told that since the beginning of the war England has built and has ready to put in the sea 15 additional ships of war.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How did they do it if it takes two years to build one of them?

Mr. BUTLER. Let me make an effort to answer the gentleman from Missouri. I assure him of the pleasure it will give me to make the effort. I have no doubt that those ships are built with three shifts, that the men are paid the highest wages, and the greatest premiums are given for haste in construction. We have always asked, as we should in times of peace, and even in time of war, for competition among the shipbuilders. We have given them plenty of time to build the ship—three years usually in its completion. I do not want to commit myself for the future; I do not propose to do it. I have spent too long on this subject to commit myself without knowing more, and I am looking for the light; but I believe that if we are to have a fleet, a great fleet, we will have to adopt the ways and means as we understand they have been adopted by nations that secure these fleets at a very early date.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. HILL. The gentleman stated that we could build 22 battleships in two years. What would it cost?

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I am very greatly indebted to the gentleman from Connecticut for assuming that I have so much information.

Mr. HILL. What does the gentleman think?

Mr. BUTLER. If we will duplicate ships and not take six months or nine months in which to make the plans, and spend $250,000 in the making of the plans for each battleship, but build a good ship like, say, the California, the best ship that we have ever built and which we could put against anything—if we will duplicate that ship, we can build 22 ships in less than two years, and we will show you the figures later on, and they will cost from eighteen to twenty million dollars each, I presume.

Mr. HILL. I am for the 22 ships if necessary, and will help to raise the money to pay for them. [Applause on the Republican side.] But what I would like to know now in regard to this bill, for which I intend to vote, is whether if the ways are built at Mare Island it would be then possible to take a ship of this size after she is launched and get her away from there on account of slack water?

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, please do not! I want to rest in peace for one week at least. Do not ask that question. You will never get away from it. Here sits the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss], for so long a time chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and he knows that we have worried over that subject for 20 years.

Mr. HILL. If we are going to spend half a million dollars for a set of ways so far up in the country that we can not get a ship away from them when it is built, I think we ought to know it.

Mr. BUTLER. I would ask the gentleman not to criticize me. Go to the authority, go to the source from which this authority came—the Secretary of the Navy. I have nothing at all to do about it.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I will renew my question. Is it possible now to take a ship of this size, after she is launched, from the ways that we propose to build and get her away from Mare Island?

Mr. BUTLER. Let me answer the gentleman. If the gentleman will possess his soul in patience until we can furnish him a hearing that was recently had upon this very subject, he will then have no doubt when he has read it. But if after reading it he still has a doubt, go to the gentleman from California [Mr. CURRY], who will remove it.

Mr. HILL. Is it not possible for the committee to say whether these ways are simply to be constructed for ornamental purposes or useful purposes?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BUTLER. I intend to finish——

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. I am going to answer—I think probably I will yield to nature and drop out if they do not let me alone. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BUTLER. I am not surprised at finding the suggestion of a gun stirs the blood of all of you, but I suggest that you compose yourselves, as there is something larger ahead for you to consider.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I understood the gentleman in his opening statement; but if I do, it was this, that these ships were authorized by Congress nearly a year ago.

Mr. BUTLER. These ships were authorized the 3d of March, 1915, and in three or four weeks more we will have run the year out.

Mr. FOSS. A year?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. FOSS. Now, as I understand the gentleman, this bill proposes to extend the ways at New York and also at Mare Island Navy Yards for the purpose of building these ships. There are, as I understand, at the present time ships now under construction on those ways at those two yards?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. FOSS. And, according to the gentleman, it will take nine months before the ships now on the ways will be out of the way when the keels of these two ships can be laid. Is that correct?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes. I fear the gentleman is correct in his figures; I fear he is.

Mr. FOSS. After we begin to get ready to commence to lay the keels of these ships, which were authorized a year ago, how long does the gentleman think it is going to take to build the ships?

Mr. BUTLER. Now, my good friend, you and I have worked along this line for many many years. We have not since you ceased—and we miss you a great deal—as a member of that committee; we have not progressed along this line, and the gentleman knows it will be three years.

Mr. FOSS. Then, that will make nearly five years before we get a ship. Is that right?

Mr. BUTLER. Then we will be lucky if we get it in five years, the gentleman will understand. Now, listen: If Congress will pay the bill, and give these shipbuilders three times the men at work, and keep them at work, we can build them in these two navy yards within two years. [Applause.]

Mr. FOSS. Does not the gentleman think there has been unusual delay in the construction of these ships?

Mr. BUTLER. I do not want to criticize anybody until I am sure that I am standing on a foundation from which I can not be knocked.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman had better be careful.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. BUTLER. In one minute. I intend to finish with my old chairman. It is the same delay which the gentleman from Illinois is well acquainted with, not any more, in my judgment; but the same old delay, and the same old method, and in the same old manner. I do not believe there has been any improvement in this line since the gentleman and I came to Congress 20 years ago.

Mr. FOSS. I want to say to the gentleman——

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is the fifth time——

Mr. FOSS. These ships are to be built in a navy yard——

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. FOSS. If they were built by private contract, does not the gentleman think they could be built within three years?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; I think they could.

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman permit me——

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I will yield to the gentleman from Tennessee and reserve the balance of my time. I was only endeavoring in my poor way to explain this measure until the gentleman from Tennessee could reach here.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BUTLER. Before I yield I would like to answer the question of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman said the California is 14 per cent completed. Will the gentleman state when the keel was laid?

Mr. BUTLER. I could not tell. I could if I had the book here. Somebody must have it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was laid in October.

Mr. BUTLER. I think it was earlier than that, but it may have been in October.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was in October.

Mr. BUTLER. If the gentleman says it was in October, I will accept it. Excuse me; how long will that be from the time that we appropriated for it? That is what I am thinking about.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman states that since he has been in Congress there has been no progress made in the time of the completion of ships. Does not the gentleman recall that he is in error in that statement?

Mr. BUTLER. It may be.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman know that before the Government constructed ships in navy yards no contractor, although he agreed to finish a battleship in 36 months, had ever finished one inside of double the time of contract, and that the first time they were ever built within the authorized time was when the Government yards were utilized for such construction?

Mr. BUTLER. I guess I have a little bit of time left in which to reply to that. This old bone we have chewed over for years, and we will chew over it again in a few months.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman know that the contract has already been let for materials for these ships, and the material can not be commenced to be delivered and put into them until the time that the ships that are now on the ways go overboard, some time next September?

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman answer that question?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes. Let me ask first—I am not a soloist, but I do hate to sing in concert. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. All that kind of facetiousness does not give any information. The gentleman is supposed to know, having served for 16 years on the Naval Committee, but he does not seem to have much knowledge of the situation.

Mr. BUTLER. If the gentleman will take the time to tell what he knows, which would take a long time, it would not take a long time to tell what I know.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Sure.

Mr. BUTLER. Having admitted that, there is no discussion over it.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] brings the information that on the 1st day of November, 1915, there had been no percentage of work done on the California.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I was stating a fact that I supposed the gentleman knew, because I was present when it was laid.

Mr. BUTLER. That is all right, and I suppose it was well laid if the gentleman was present. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is it not a fact that the argument of the gentleman from Pennsylvania here, as has been his whole attitude during his service on the Naval Committee, is opposed to Government construction in favor of private construction in the interest of the private manufacturers?

Mr. BUTLER. I have not a yard in my district. No; it is not so. I voted in favor of building ships in the navy yard. I voted, as I vote now, for keeping these shipyards up to the highest state of efficiency. But does not the gentleman know that we can not build two ships of war in the New York Navy Yard at one time? Does not the gentleman know the extent of our machine shops in the navy yards? It is not only necessary to have the ways, but to have the necessary machinery by which the ships can be built.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I want to ask the gentleman two questions, because it is a matter of a great deal of importance. Now, I understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania to say that the California is the best ship afloat?

Mr. FITZGERALD. She is not launched yet.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How do you know, if she is not launched, it is the best of all of them?

Mr. BUTLER. Now, that is a hard question to answer.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What I am trying to get at is this——

Mr. BUTLER. Let me answer the question.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I believe that she is the best, because she is the newest. She will have the very best and latest improvements of all kinds on her. She is one of the very heaviest, and, gaining by an answer to a question which I propounded to one of our naval officers, she is among the very best ships that could be built.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. What is her displacement?

Mr. BUTLER. Thirty-two thousand tons and more.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is there any battleship afloat that all of these naval experts agree is the best battleship?

Mr. BUTLER. It is a pleasure to answer the gentleman's question if he will allow me to go a step further. They do not agree to anything.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is there any way to expedite the building of the battleships of the United States over this slow, poky way we have been using?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What is it?

Mr. BUTLER. To put up 30 to 40 per cent more money.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What has been done with the money we have put up?

Mr. BUTLER. It has been going into ships.

Mr. Chairman, let me call the gentleman's attention to what a gentleman before the committee said—and he is one of the best men I have ever known in public life, Admiral Blue—"Heretofore we have built a Navy according to the size of the cloth." I told him I knew that, but would he tell me the "size of the cloth" for the future? He said he could not tell me about the future. But if you appropriate $1,000,000,000 you will obtain your greatest Navy within two years.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Can anyone tell which is the best battleship we have?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Who is it?

Mr. BUTLER. I do not know. In answer to the gentleman, there is some one who can tell us which is the best. There is some one who would tell us it is not the best, and therefore we will take our own guess at it. She is being built very carefully by high-skilled men. I believe it will be among the best, because it may be among the longest completed. I believe that the work on this ship will be in no way stinted. I believe this will be a fine ship, because of the place and the manner and the care taken to construct it. She is the very latest. She is the California. She is designed by the best men we have in the naval service. She is designed by men like Admiral Taylor, who has intelligence and knowledge and genius; and therefore I am ready to say she is going to be our best.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If we could just ascertain what is the best battleship, then Congress ought to pass a resolution that all the rest of these battleships should be built upon that model, and so shorten up this process six months. [Applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. Now, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; in a moment. I have repeatedly asked the question—often delaying the ordinary proceedings before our committee—I have asked repeatedly the very question which the gentleman from Missouri has in his mind: Can we not duplicate? But men hesitate, my dear Mr. Speaker, because of the improvements made every year. If you do not know—perhaps you do not—let me tell you: It is even now understood that the English propose, and even the Germans, to put on their battleships 17-inch guns, and we have 14-inch guns on ours. What shall we do?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Put on our battleships 17-inch guns. Put the biggest gun that is attainable or that ever was attainable on every one of these battleships that we build. [Applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. That we build hereafter.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. BUTLER. In a moment. The statement made in answer to my question was this, that probably in two years the size of the gun might be increased. One of the reasons, Mr. Speaker, why we build slowly, perhaps, and cautiously is that we might build wisely and as well as other nations build. Now, if we duplicate all these ships, we can build them more cheaply and more hurriedly, and it is so admitted by the constructors.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And more rapidly?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; and more rapidly. But what will we have when we have completed them? If it is necessary to make this great preparation—I do not know, and my mind is open—I would build them all alike and be ready with the fleet anyhow; but I would not be satisfied in five years after this fleet was completed that it was the best fitted for defense. I do not know that I would be willing to rely upon the character of the ships we would then have. Here comes one of the bothers that I mentioned.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. In answer to the Speaker, is not the real reason why we have been putting on 14-inch guns while Great Britain has been installing 15-inch guns that you get a greater number of 14-inch guns on that size of ship than we thought available, to wit, a 31,000 or a 32,000 ton ship? It is a question of balancing. The bigger the ship, the bigger the displacement and the bigger the heavy guns; but, on the other hand, the less rapidly it can travel through the water, so that the mere fact that we have 14-inch guns while the other countries have 15-inch guns is made up, in the opinion of the constructors, by the fact that with the same displacement we have a greater number of 14-inch guns than they have of 15-inch guns to a broadside.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I can not pretend, and do not pretend, to fully answer the inquiry of the Speaker. I can not fully reply, and can not reply intelligently, to the queries that he has in his mind. But let me make this statement, that if you put a larger gun on one of the ships already constructed, you must begin at the bottom and rebuild the ship. We can in the future put on larger guns, but right there the military men differ. Please tell me what an ordinary-day man like myself will know about it? They insist, some of them, that the gun that we should install is the 14-inch gun. I understand, and have understood, that the longer reach you have the greater the protection you would have. I do not know about all this, but I promise the Speaker that within the next few weeks we shall endeavor to work something out of it, so that when we come here with the naval appropriation bill for one I hope to be able more intelligently and definitely to answer the questions that may be propounded.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. KELLEY. Is it not true, referring to the proposition put by the Speaker, that in many cases where foreign Governments have put on the 15-inch guns they have subsequently abandoned those and returned to the 14-inch guns on their newest ships?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; and, as I am told, for the reason that they can approach closer and have better aim, and can deliver more broadsides with the lighter gun, and from the military standpoint many of them advocate the continuance of the 14-inch guns. A good many of them, however, advocate the 17-inch gun. Between the two I do not know what to do.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. BUTLER. I wanted to give our chairman [Mr. PADGETT] an opportunity.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The chairman can get an hour of his own.

Mr. BUTLER. I know; but I am embarrassed here in talking while he waits the time he should have. I will answer the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There are two sister ships of the California—the Idaho and the Mississippi. Three were authorized together?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is a fact, is it not?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Idaho and the Mississippi are being constructed by private contractors?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And the California is being constructed in a Government yard?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman has intimated that there is very serious delay in the construction of this ship—the California?

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. It was only in a general way that I was speaking. I have no reflection to cast upon the management, or on the construction of the ship, or on the delay.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The point is this, that the report shows that the ship under construction in the Government yard is six months behind the two other ships authorized at the same time, and Admiral Taylor, the Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair, stated that the delay is due to two causes: First, that the ways are occupied by the Arizona, which delayed it four months.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And that the other two months' delay was occasioned by the lack of sufficient draftsmen to get out the plans. There should be no misunderstanding that because the ship is built in a Government yard it is being delayed unnecessarily.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I have yielded around everywhere, and I now intend to yield to the chairman of the committee [Mr. PADGETT], and I apologize for having taken the floor when he was away. But I do say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] that I am in favor of building another way in the New York Navy Yard if it is thought desirable.

I do not mean to criticize the department or the management over the construction of this ship. You can not put two big ships on ways only 1,000 feet long when the ships are each over 600 feet long. We can all understand that.

Mr. CURRY. Will the gentleman yield me five minutes?

Mr. BUTLER. I will after the chairman of the committee has spoken. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania reserves 35 minutes. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] is recognized.

Mr. CURRY. Will the chairman of the committee yield me five minutes?

Mr. PADGETT. I will later, in connection with the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a statement free from interruption, and then, after I have completed my statement, I shall be glad to answer any question that I can. By the naval appropriation bill, passed on the 3d of March last, we authorized the construction of two ships. The estimated cost of the two ships complete, with armor, armament, and full equipment, is about $15,000,000.

Mr. MANN. Fifteen million dollars apiece?

Mr. PADGETT. Fifteen million dollars apiece. That was the estimate. The limit of cost fixed by the bill for the hull and machinery, which is the ship exclusive of armor and armament, is $7,800,000. The Secretary of the Navy advertised for bids, as provided by law, and the private shipyards of the country, with the exception of one yard, put in bids, and every bid that was put in by the private yards was several hundred thousand dollars above the limit of cost fixed by the act of Congress.

In addition, these bids made certain exclusions, taking out that which the Government would have had to do in its own yards in order to complete the ships, which would have still further added to the cost, so that under the law it was impossible for the Secretary to award a contract to private shipbuilders.

Another point: One of the private yards submitted in its bid 40 months for the construction of the ship. The others submitted bids, if I remember, for 36 months, but reserving the exception that they were to have an extension of time if they had any unexpected difficulties or unlooked-for delays in getting materials, or if they had labor troubles. So that meant an indefinite limit of time for the completion of the ships.

The Secretary also called upon the navy yards to submit estimates of what they could construct the ships for. The New York yard submitted an estimate, and the navy yard at Mare Island submitted an estimate, and these two estimates in the aggregate were $1,100,000 under the joint limit of cost fixed by the act of Congress. The Mare Island yard included $248,000—if I am not mistaken as to the exact figures—for the enlargement of the ways; but that money would not be available. It was appropriated and authorized by Congress for the construction of the ship, so that if you deduct the $248,000 that was included by the Mare Island yard and add it to the saving, the estimates of the two yards were something like $1,300,000 under the limit of cost.

Now, the Secretary of the Navy assigned the construction of these ships, one to the New York yard and one to the Mare Island yard. This resolution is introduced for the purpose of making available not an additional appropriation but an authorization out of the appropriation already made for the construction of the ships; $500,000 for extension of the ways at Mare Island and for equipment, and $100,000 for the New York yard; in other words, to use $600,000 of this $1,300,000 for the purpose of constructing the ways and furnishing the equipment to build the ships. So that this amount is not an additional appropriation but is a part of the amount already fixed by the previous act.

As I stated a moment ago, the yards say that they can complete these ships in less than three years from the time they get their material ready. The department has not waited for the clearing of the ways. There is a ship on the ways at New York, and there is also one on the ways at Mare Island; but the department has already undertaken to secure the materials and have them assembled, so that by the time the materials are made ready and assembled it is hoped that the department will be well prepared on the way toward begining the construction of these ships. The contracts are all under way for the steel and materials of all kinds. So that when you are counting the delay that appears, it is misleading unless you take into consideration that if a contract was awarded additional time would have to be consumed in gathering together and assembling the materials that go into the construction of the ships.

The Secretary stated to me, and I believe to the committee also, that it is his purpose, if he receives this authorization, to put on additional force early in the spring, as soon as the weather permits, so that the clearing of the ways will be in progress, and he told me that he hoped to have the ways clear in one case in September and in the other case in October, so that the keels of the new ships could be laid. But pending that apparent delay, the Secretary is proceeding to have the materials all gathered and assembled ready for that work.

The question was asked by the Speaker a moment ago as to which is the better ship. It is the aim and the ambition of the men in the department who make the plans and details of our ships to make each ship that is laid down better than the ship that was completed preceding it. In other words, we are making progress and development in the military value, in the fighting efficiency of each ship, over all ships that preceded it. Last year I had a very interesting statement from Admiral Dewey, president of the General Board. He took the Delaware, which represents our first dreadnaught. He gave that a military value of 100. The New York represented a military value of 157.65. In 1898 the Oregon was justly the pride of the American Navy, but in that table the Oregon represented in fighting value and military efficiency only 13.13, as compared with the Delaware, representing 100, and the New York, representing 157.65. That gives us an illustration of the progress that is being made in our shipbuilding.

I think it is fair to the department to make another statement; that is, that since last March, when the ships were authorized, the department has been using all the ingenuity and skill of the expert men of the department to make ships 43 and 44, which were authorized on March 3 last, superior to all other ships in the world against torpedo attack. They have been studying and taking advantage of all the information they can get and all the lessons that can be learned from the European war to make our ships as far as possible immune to torpedo attack.

Admiral Taylor, Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair, a man who has an international reputation in matters of that character, states that ships 43 and 44 will have marked advantages in methods of protection against ships now on the ways, the California, Idaho, and Mississippi, authorized two years ago. I do not believe that under all the conditions that exist the lessons that were to be learned as to what was going on in the war, the lessons that might be gathered from it, that that time has been wasted or ill spent, because they say to us that the improvements and changes in design and in internal construction, matters which properly are not disclosed, were not even told to us in detail; that the construction of these ships is such that they would be superior in a marked degree above the ships authorized the year preceding because of the lessons learned and the improvements suggested by the warfare in Europe.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman assist me in the feeble attempt which I made to reply to the question which the Speaker put to me as to why we did not duplicate the California?

Mr. PADGETT. Because if we had duplicated the California we would have left out all the improvements that are going into ships 43 and 44, gathered from the lessons we have learned during the war up to the time of these designs. Admiral Taylor stated still further that he had plans even in advance of these last two ships, 43 and 44, that would be incorporated into the ships that would be authorized at this session of Congress that would make them improvements over the ships authorized on the 3d of last March. That is the reason we do not duplicate. Whenever you duplicate you have reached the limit, and there is no hope for improvement. I do not want the time to ever come when the Navy will be satisfied in what it has accomplished, but will always have its aim and purpose, its desire and ambition, for something a little better than what it has done. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Do the naval authorities agree that any one particular ship is better than any other ship?

Mr. PADGETT. I think so.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How many have we authorized now?

Mr. PADGETT. We have 42 battleships built, building, and authorized.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How many in process of construction?

Mr. PADGETT. There are 17 of those that are dreadnaughts.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The gentleman is talking about what we already have now?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How many are there authorized to be constructed?

Mr. PADGETT. Nine that are not fully completed.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How many have not been begun?

Mr. PADGETT. Two.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why not pass a resolution through the House ordering the Navy Department to complete those two, duplicating the very best one you have got in the Navy? [Applause.]

Mr. PADGETT. Simply because the Chief of the Bureau of Construction told us that he had plans already worked out that would make decided improvements against torpedo attack, and so forth.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why do not they put those plans into operation?

Mr. PADGETT. They will do it as soon as they get authority under this resolution to proceed with the building of the ways and the repair of the ways.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. We shall all die of old age before they are completed at this rate. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Is not the gentleman's argument that we improve, and we do improve every year?

Mr. PADGETT. We do.

Mr. BUTLER. Is not that an argument itself against building too many ships at one time?

Mr. PADGETT. No; I think not, against a proper number.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield for one more question?

Mr. PADGETT. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. This is purely for information. What is the reason that these naval experts can not agree on anything?

Mr. PADGETT. They do agree on some things. They agree on substantials.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. They have kept the whole country puzzled, including myself. [Laughter.]

Mr. PADGETT. They do agree on the fundamentals pretty well.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. PADGETT. I will.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. If this money is made available for the repair and construction of the ways, will it not be of great advantage to the building of other ships hereafter?

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, of course; they are permanent ways, and when one ship is completed another will be put upon the same ways.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. And so it will be of great advantage to the building of subsequent ships after those that are now building are completed?

Mr. PADGETT. Of course. Now, another thing. After our experts have given the matter the very best consideration, we have placed twelve 14-inch guns on our ships as against eight 15-inch guns upon some of the foreign ships. Our men say that the value; that is, the military value of twelve 14-inch guns is more than eight 15-inch guns. In the first place, it gives 50 per cent increase in the opportunity of striking. You have 12 projectiles fired at a hostile ship instead of 8, and either one of them, if it lands, will be destructive.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. How much longer is the range of a 15-inch gun than the range of a 14-inch gun?

Mr. PADGETT. Practically nothing, so they tell us.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Then why do they prefer the 15-inch gun to the 14-inch gun, if it will not shoot any further?

Mr. PADGETT. It is not the distance. Our 14-inch 50-caliber guns shoot as they are placed on our ships 24,000 yards. If you will take 1,760 yards as a land mile or 2,000 yards as a sea mile, you will have 12 sea miles and nearly 14 land miles, the distance that the 14-inch 50-caliber gun will shoot, and that is away beyond where you can see or pick out a ship or anything else.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is the range of a 17-inch gun greater than that of a 14-inch gun?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know of any 17-inch guns.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But I read in the papers that the Germans are putting 17-inch guns on their new ships.

Mr. PADGETT. Well, we have not any authentic information of anything of that kind.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. Is it not a little unfair comparison to take the eight 15-inch guns on vessels that were in commission in the British navy before the war and compare them with the twelve 14-inch guns which we propose to put on vessels not yet begun? Is it not a fact that our most powerful dreadnaughts in existence to-day, in commission, are the Texas and the New York, and that they have only ten 14-inch guns?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; but we have made improvements, and we have put 12 of them on.

Mr. GARDNER. And the Oklahoma uses 50-caliber guns?

Mr. PADGETT. Forty-five caliber.

Mr. GARDNER. I know, and that makes all the difference in the range, as the gentleman knows full well.

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, I said that we were making improvements in our ships, in their design and in their armament, and that was the answer that I gave to the question before that, as against any fixed standard. We are improving right along.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. I just wanted to call to the gentleman's mind what he already knows, that the diameter of a gun is not necessarily the controlling thing in determining its power.

Mr. PADGETT. The muzzle velocity.

Mr. SHERLEY. The muzzle velocity, the weight of a projectile, the velocity with which it is fired—and that involves not only the diameter, but the powder, the charge, and the caliber.

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, certainly, all of those things enter into it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Would not all of these elements of which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] has spoken be taken into account in considering the 15-inch gun just the same as in the 14-inch gun?

Mr. PADGETT. With the 15-inch gun the muzzle velocity is less than with the 14-inch gun.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Why, then, if one will not shoot farther than the other, is not any more effective than the other, should anyone prefer the 15-inch to the 14-inch?

Mr. PADGETT. Either one will shoot beyond any needed range, so far as that is concerned. A 15-inch gun carries a projectile that weighs, in round numbers, 2,000 pounds. A 14-inch gun carries a projectile that weighs 1,400 pounds. There might be, if you made a hit, greater destruction following a 15-inch shell than a 14-inch shell, but the 14-inch shell, going with greater muzzle velocity, going, as I stated, with our most improved guns, 24,000 yards, away beyond any fighting distance or seeing distance, if it strikes a ship it produces destruction anyway; so that it is a question with our experts and our military men to say whether or not they would rather have eight 2,000-pound shells fired or twelve 1,400-pound shells. They have 50 per cent more chance of striking with the 14-inch shell than they have with the 15-inch shell, and if they strike with either it will be destructive.

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. KREIDER. I would like to know whether the experts have ever expressed an opinion as to whether it would be possible to improve or remount guns on the vessels now constructed, and thereby increase their fighting efficiency. Whether it would not be possible, if a 14-inch gun is desirable as against a 12-inch gun, so far as fighting efficiency of the battleship is concerned, to replace the 12-inch gun with the 14-inch gun, and thus increase the efficiency of the ship rather than consign it to the scrap heap.

Mr. PADGETT. We have had that up before our experts a number of times, and they have all agreed that it could not. A ship is constructed, designed, and built for certain weights and certain carrying capacity for bunker coal, for oil, and so forth; so that you can not put a 14-inch gun upon a ship that was built and designed for a 12-inch gun.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. In just a moment. Another matter I want to call attention to that was suggested by Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. The erosion of the 15-inch gun is greater than that of the 14-inch gun. In other words, the life of the 15-inch gun is less than that of the 14-inch gun, if fired at the same high muzzle velocity.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I would like to ask about the speed of our ships as compared with those of other nations.

Mr. PADGETT. Their speed is the same as ships of like character except that several years ago England went from the battleship dreadnaughts, from about 21 or 22 knots to about 26 knots, or something like that, but Admiral Taylor told us that his information was that in the later types they had abandoned that speed of battleships and had come back to the old speed of 21 or 22 knots.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Did the gentleman see that statement in the papers the other day that the Bluecher, which was sunk by the British, was 3 knots faster than the Oklahoma, the fastest boat we have?

Mr. PADGETT. The Bluecher is a cruiser and not a battleship. Cruisers are all fast ships and are lightly armored for cruising and commerce-destroying purposes, and they are not put in the first line to fight against battleships. They are intended more for commerce-destroying purposes.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. I do.

Mr. GARDNER. The gentleman does not mean to say that dreadnaught cruisers of 30-knot speed are not considered capital ships in the first line?

Mr. PADGETT. I say they are not considered as fighting ships to fight against battleships. They will fight against cruisers and they serve a capital purpose. They are very valuable ships, but a battle cruiser with armor of 6 or 7 inches would not go up against a battleship with armor of 12 or 14 inches.

Mr. GARDNER. That is assuming her guns did not have a longer range, is not that true?

Mr. PADGETT. Assuming that they have guns that will shoot as far as either one can shoot at the other. It is no farther from the battleship to the cruiser than from the cruiser to the battleship.

Mr. GARDNER. May I ask one or two questions about this bill?

Mr. PADGETT. Certainly.

Mr. GARDNER. We appropriate $600,000——

Mr. PADGETT. Not appropriate, but we make it available.

Mr. GARDNER. We make available $600,000, of which $100,000 is for the New York Navy Yard and $500,000 for the Mare Island Navy Yard?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. GARDNER. And half of the money for Mare Island is for the improvement of the ways at that yard. What is the other half for?

Mr. PADGETT. It is for additional equipment, for larger cranes, machinery, etc., to handle material.

Mr. GARDNER. Is it the same for New York?

Mr. PADGETT. At New York I think it is for equipment altogether.

Mr. GARDNER. What I want to get at is this: The Secretary of the Navy says that we have got to put on double shifts both at Mare Island and New York. Is any part——

Mr. PADGETT. Weather permitting.

Mr. GARDNER. Is any part of it for double shifts?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir; because it does not come out of this appropriation. It comes out of the appropriation for these specific ships.

Mr. GARDNER. One or two other questions on the same line. The Secretary of the Navy says that at the Mare Island Yard they will be able to get No. 44 on the ways in September.

Mr. PADGETT. That is what is expected.

Mr. GARDNER. And No. 43 in New York in the later summer. Now, assuming that he is right, how long a time does the gentleman expect to elapse from the time these vessels have their keels laid up to the time they are commissioned?

Mr. PADGETT. If I remember correctly the yard's estimate, I think, approximately it was 32 or 33 months.

Mr. BUTLER. Thirty-two months is my recollection.

Mr. GARDNER. In one case it is from the date of the assembling of the material and the other from the date of the signing of the contract for the material, but what I want to get at is the date from the actual laying of the keel, how long would it take it to be——

Mr. PADGETT. To be completed?

Mr. GARDNER. To be commissioned.

Mr. PADGETT. Around 30 or 32 months.

Mr. GARDNER. The gentleman takes it that it can be done under three years from the actual date of the laying of the keel?

Mr. PADGETT. They expect to do so.

Mr. GARDNER. They have not been doing it recently.

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir; neither have the other countries. Now it has been stated here about other countries building ships. Where we build our ships we have been building them under one shift. Of course, if we put on two shifts——

Mr. BUTLER. Or three.

Mr. PADGETT. We could build them in less time. If we put on three, we could build them in still less time, but that would add very appreciably to the cost by putting on the third shift, because that is nightwork and it is always pretty costly and is not so efficient as daywork.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. The country believes, and the President from his speeches as well, that we can not tell what may take place in a day——

Mr. FITZGERALD. And never could.

Mr. CANNON. And that it is very desirable that we should have speedy preparation. Now, the gentleman has been talking about its taking three years to build these ships.

If we be in danger within the next three years, these battleships, or dreadnaughts, are of no account. I ask the gentleman if his committee has taken into consideration, under the stress that we seem to be under now, what we can get in six months, what we can get in a year, of the different types of construction, if you please? Of course, I acknowledge that I am a tenderfoot; but it seems to me, if we are in danger from day to day, we should govern ourselves accordingly, both for the Army and the Navy. And I make this remark in the greatest of good faith.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT]?

Mr. PADGETT. I desire to make a short reply to the gentleman from Illinois at present. The Oklahoma and the Nevada and the Pennsylvania, three very valuable and efficient ships, regarded as the three best in the world at the time they were designed and keel laid, will be completed and put in commission during the present year, two of them in the early summer and one a little later, in the fall. The other ships, of course, could be expedited very much if an emergency should arise calling for putting on two shifts or three shifts. We have been making appropriations heretofore on the theory we have always proceeded upon—that we will give the amount that is estimated according to the usual procedure of one shift. If any emergency should arise, a very small resolution of Congress, carrying the necessary appropriation, could provide for the extra shifts.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me just one remark in the shape of a question?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. It seems, so far as we can ascertain, that, as an insurance policy or for defense, the emergency is now here.

Mr. PADGETT. That is for the Congress to determine when we have before us the appropriations. The committee has not yet taken up that part of the bill which relates to the increase of the Navy. Under our procedure that is the last item that we take up and pass upon and the last one we have before the committee. We have not yet taken up in the committee that part of the estimates. We have been dealing with the administration estimates.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman just pardon me one other short question?

Mr. PADGETT. With pleasure.

Mr. CANNON. I stand ready to vote for the increase of the Navy and the increase of the Army. Now, if there is no necessity for not waiting three years, no necessity for hasty action, well and good. The interrogation point is in the head of many people in this country whether this means actual preparation under the leadership of the Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee on Naval Affairs, or whether it is a "good-enough Morgan" for the next six months. [Applause.] I do not intend to criticize the President or anybody else, but as a Representative and as an American citizen I am anxious touching the matter I have referred to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman says he does not intend that as a criticism. Does the gentleman think anybody would construe it as a compliment?

Mr. CANNON. After all, I will say again, if my friend will indulge me, I am profoundly impressed with the necessity for action. If there be a necessity, I agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER]. I am ready to help furnish the money by my vote, either by an increase of taxation, by the borrowing of money, or both, and so the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] does not do himself justice, or me either, in saying that perhaps this is a criticism.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield? The gentleman wanted to know whether this was just a sham performance here for campaign purposes. That was the subject of his comment.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And then he said he did not intend it as a criticism of the President. How else can it be construced? The gentleman was trying to put in a nice way a very nice criticism of the President, but he did not get away with it.

Mr. CANNON. Right to that question here and now. The President of the United States is my President as well as your President, and if I can find out what is the proper thing to do, if it is necessary to do anything, I stand ready to help do it. [Applause.] But, as a Representative, I have the right, with the interrogation point in the heads of many men, to ask that question, and I hope I am not guilty of lese majesty when I ask it. [Applause.]

Mr. FOCHT rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT]?

Mr. PADGETT. Just a moment, first. I am not authorized yet to say what the committee is going to report, because we have not yet passed upon it, but I think I am justified in saying that the committee will act in perfect good faith with the House and with the country, and will bring in a bill that will address itself to the intelligence and patriotism of the House, and if the House wishes to do more or less than the committee recommends, there will be full opportunity to do so.

Mr. NORTON, Mr. KELLEY, Mr. STEPHENS of California, and Mr. HICKS rose.

The CHAIRMAN. To whom will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry?

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. PADGETT. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. STAFFORD. Are we to understand by the statement made by the gentleman that the department has not been expediting the finishing of the battleships now in progress by asking the navy yards or the private contractors to put on extra men, so as to have these battleships completed at an earlier date than was originally contemplated?

Mr. PADGETT. The construction of the ships in the navy yards to be expedited?

Mr. STAFFORD. You stated there were three ships that would be ready for commission this year, the Oklahoma, the Nevada, and the Pennsylvania?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; they are practically completed.

Mr. STAFFORD. And there are other ships building that could be finished much sooner if there was pressing demand for their completion. Has the department considered that such a condition existed as to hurry the completion of any of these ships, either in the navy yards or in the private building yards?

Mr. PADGETT. The Secretary of the Navy has not yet appeared before the committee, and we have received no communication on that line so far.

Mr. STAFFORD. But the gentleman stated that they could have been completed sooner. Now, has any work been undertaken to complete those ships sooner than was originally intended?

Mr. PADGETT. The ships that are being built under contract have their time limit, and I know of nothing that has changed the time limit so far.

Mr. STAFFORD. And the gentleman knows nothing that the administration has done to expedite the completion of those ships?

Mr. PADGETT. It would require an additional appropriation by Congress to increase the limit of cost that has been fixed, as shorter time of construction involves greater cost of construction.

Mr. STAFFORD. Would it require an additional act of Congress if those contracts were under an authorization previously granted by Congress?

Mr. PADGETT. But they are just within a few dollars of the appropriation.

Mr. STEPHENS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Are not some of them several hundred thousand dollars beneath the appropriation?

Mr. PADGETT. No; not when you take into account the little additions that are to be put on by the department.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the Secretary of the Navy in his estimate asked at any time, by letter or other communication, for an appropriation to expedite the completion of the ships now building?

Mr. PADGETT. I have stated that he has not thus far.

Mr. STEPHENS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. STEPHENS of California. Just for a short statement.

Mr. PADGETT. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. STEPHENS of California. Mr. Chairman, I favor a larger Navy; indeed, I favor a much larger Navy, and, in my judgment, if we are at all in need of a larger Navy we should have it as quickly as possible. I believe we should authorize every vessel necessary to the completion of an adequate Navy. We should authorize now and require the earliest possible construction.

Mr. Chairman, regarding the construction of a battleship at Mare Island, I want to say this, the Mare Island Navy Yard put in an estimate of something like $600,000 less than the bid of any private yard. Included in that estimate, which was $600,000 less than any private yard, was the sum of $248,000 for the building of additional ways at Mare Island.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. STEPHENS of California. Not at this time.

Mr. PADGETT. I yielded, Mr. Chairman, to the gentleman from California.

Mr. STEPHENS of California. I can not yield at this time. It was later discovered that this $248,000 could not legally be expended for building ways; hence this resolution for authority to use a part of the money already appropriated for battleship 44.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of California. Not at this time. Now, the Mare Island estimate of about $600,000 less than any other yard, coupled with $248,000 for ways, which sum was included in the Mare Island estimate, and a further $70,000 which the yard proposes to save, makes a total saving of over $900,000 in constructing this one battleship. And when these building ways at Mare Island are constructed out of the money saved, that yard will be forever available for the building of other battleships.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to call the attention of the House to the fact that the navy yard at Mare Island has promised to construct this ship within 31 or 32 months, and never yet in the construction of any ship at the Mare Island Navy Yard has it exceeded the estimate of time or money made to the Navy Department.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it was asked a moment ago whether or not, after the construction of a battleship at Mare Island, the ship could be floated to sea? Admiral Stanford has answered that question on pages 23, 28, 29, and 158 of the hearings. He has said—and I shall, at the end of this paragraph, include his answers to my questions—that there were hours within each 24 when the largest battleships of our Navy could be floated to sea from the Mare Island Navy Yard. He has also stated that there is no other navy yard in the United States, except the one at Puget Sound, at which there were not hours in every 24 when it is impossible to float out a battleship. Listen to this:

Mr. STEPHENS. Admiral, then it is not absolutely necessary that we have 30 or 35 feet of water in order to take in and bring out of the navy yard the war vessels of deepest draft?

Admiral STANFORD. No; for the reason that those depths are ordinarily understood to mean from low tide conditions, and by moving the vessel under more favorable tidal conditions there would be a correspondingly greater depth of water.

Mr. STEPHENS. At practically all our yards, then, Admiral, there are conditions of tide when we could not float out or float in the deepest draft battleships we have?

Admiral STANFORD. Yes, sir.

* * * * * * *

Mr. STEPHENS. It is your belief that a vessel of the greatest depth on the Pacific Ocean to-day or in the Navy could, under certain conditions of the tides——

Admiral STANFORD (interposing). And under certain conditions of loading.

Mr. STEPHENS (continuing). Could safely go up to Mare Island and depart again?

Admiral STANFORD. Yes, sir.

* * * * * * *

Mr. STEPHENS. Did you not state yesterday and is it not true that you have trouble with shoaling conditions in the channel at New York Harbor and at various other navy-yard harbors on the Atlantic coast?

Admiral STANFORD. Periodic dredging is required at the New York Navy Yard, is required at the Boston yard, and is required at the Norfolk yard.

Mr. STEPHENS. Then there are hours within each 24-hour period when it might not be safe for a vessel to approach any Atlantic coast navy yard?

Admiral STANFORD. Tidal conditions are always an important factor in the movement of the deeper-draft vessels.

Mr. STEPHENS. And there are hours——

Admiral STANFORD (interposing). There are hours when vessels can be moved to those yards.

Mr. STEPHENS. And when they can not be moved?

Admiral STANFORD. And when they can not be moved to those yards.

* * * * * * *

Mr. STEPHENS. There are certain Government yards which could be prepared to construct dreadnaughts within six months time, are there not?

Admiral STANFORD. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEPHENS. Will you please name them?

Admiral STANFORD. You mean as far as extending the slips may be concerned?

Mr. STEPHENS. I mean prepared to build dreadnaughts for the Government within six months, provided, of course, the money was at hand.

Admiral STANFORD. I hesitated an instant in replying to that question from consideration of the present condition at Mare Island and at New York, where they are building ships which are now on the ways, which might not be launched within six months. But, subject to that——

Mr. STEPHENS (interrupting). Take for granted the ways were unoccupied; then what yards could be prepared within six months to build our largest dreadnaughts?

Admiral STANFORD. The New York yard, the Philadelphia yard, the Mare Island yard, and I presume the Puget Sound yard.

Mr. STEPHENS. The Government would be perfectly safe in going ahead with such constructions, so far as getting the dreadnaughts to the ocean after they were built?

Admiral STANFORD. Yes, sir.

Now, the United States Government has authorized the War Department to dredge a channel 30 feet deep from Mare Island to the sea. That project is now under way. It has not been completed, but the engineers assure us it can be accomplished.

Mr. Chairman, not an extra dollar is called for. All we ask is that Mare Island be forever equipped for building the largest battleships out of the money saved by Mare Island in the construction of this one battleship only.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. PADGETT. I wanted to see if we could reach an agreement for general debate. There is another bill that I want to bring before the House this afternoon, under general suspension, for increasing the number of midshipmen at Annapolis.

Mr. MANN. And there are several others on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. There are several other bills on the Unanimous Consent Calendar before that, and I wanted to see if we could not reach an agreement on general debate.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MANN. Suppose we say 40 minutes on a side now?

Mr. PADGETT. That will be agreeable to me.

Mr. BUTLER. I shall not object to it, provided I have an opportunity to yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. CURRY] and to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] 10 minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I would say to my friend that I have no desire to consume further time of the House now.

Mr. PADGETT. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the general debate close in 80 minutes—40 minutes of the time to be controlled by myself and 40 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER], the ranking member of the minority on the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] asks unanimous consent that all debate close on this bill in 80 minutes—40 minutes to be controlled by himself and 40 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER]. Is there objection?

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to object, but I have been trying for some time to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will have that opportunity.

Mr. PADGETT. We will give the gentleman that opportunity.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOCHT. Now, Mr. Chairman, in order that there may be no misapprehension about the question I am about to ask the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I want to say that I am for any and every measure of preparedness sufficient and ample to maintain and preserve the integrity of this country.

Mr. GORDON. As is everybody else. [Applause.]

Mr. FOCHT. Certainly. But I want to ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] this question, Whether it is the conclusion of the experts to whom he has referred this morning, and of himself and of his committee, in the presence of the fact that nearly all of the great dreadnaughts of the belligerent nations now at war are in hiding behind fields of mines or in bays or protected by one means or another—that battleships or dreadnaughts or superdreadnaughts are ample and sufficient to protect the coasts of this country in time of attack, and what relationship in point of efficiency does the U-boat, or submarine, bear to the dreadnaught costing forty times as much?

Mr. PADGETT. In the first place, the gentleman's statement is inaccurate. While the dreadnaughts of one nation may be behind mines and in bays, the dreadnaughts of Great Britain and of France and the allies are in the open sea, commanding the sea.

Mr. FOCHT. I do not understand that to be a fact, however, and with no reference to the Appam incident.

Mr. PADGETT. That is the fact. They are not behind protections at all, and the situation is that England has absolute command of the sea to-day with her fleet, in cooperation with her allies.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss]?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; I yield for a question.

Mr. FOSS. The gentleman was speaking a moment ago about navy-yard estimates versus private bids, and he stated certain things that were excluded in the private bids. I do not know how these recent navy-yard estimates were made up, but I do know that in the past our navy yards have usually excluded things which were included in private bids. So I should like to ask the gentleman in regard to these navy-yard bids, Have they pursued the same course which has been pursued heretofore?

Mr. PADGETT. Pursuant to a provision in the naval appropriation bill, of a year ago I believe, or preceding that—I have forgotten just the date, but recently—the cost-accounting system, with reference to overhead charges, and so forth, has been revised, and the Secretary attempts to charge to the cost of the ship every item of increased cost at the navy yard caused by and incident to the construction of the ship. It must be borne in mind that there are certain costs and expenses that are maintained at a navy yard whether you build a ship or do not build a ship. If a ship is built in a navy yard, it does not bear any part of those costs, as I understand it, which are incident to the yard, which would have to be paid whether there was any ship built there or not, but all of those costs that are occasioned by the construction of the ship in the yard are charged to the cost of the ship.

Mr. FOSS. What I meant to refer to particularly was the cost of the plans. Are not those costs paid out of a separate appropriation in the naval bill, and not included as a part of the cost of the ship?

Mr. PADGETT. Very likely so. I think perhaps that cost is paid out of the administration charges.

Mr. FOSS. And the draftsmen and the pay of the officers.

Mr. PADGETT. Some of the draftsmen, perhaps, are paid out of the cost of the ship.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They are all charged in the cost of the ship under the system of cost accounting which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] helped to have installed in order to hinder the building of ships for the Navy in Government yards when he was chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee.

Mr. FOSS. Are not leave of absence and holidays paid out of a separate appropriation in the bill?

Mr. PADGETT. I think not. I was going to say this, that when ships are built in private yards, it is proper for the shipbuilding companies to insure the ships. The contract provides that the Government shall be insured against loss, so as to protect it against loss in making payments from time to time. Now, they charge that in the cost of the ship, and properly so. And private yards would pay taxes that the Government does not pay. But they have no charges to meet the leaves and holidays and half holidays, and disabilities, and things of that kind which offset those charges.

Mr. FOSS. Does the gentleman expect that the navy yards will be able to complete these ships within their estimates? He knows our experience in times past. For instance, the Florida was built in a navy yard, and her sister ship, the Utah, was built in a private yard; and the Florida cost nearly $2,000,000 more than the privately built ship. He also knows the experience we had with the New York and the Texas. The New York was built in the New York Navy Yard, and I think it was built under a provision of law which excluded the indirect charges; yet the New York cost a great deal more than the Texas. Now, does the gentleman think, in view of the experience of the past, that the navy yards will be able to complete these ships within the estimate? In every case the cost of the private-contract ship was a great deal less than the cost of the Government-built ship.

Mr. PADGETT. I will state to the gentleman that he makes his statement rather broader than the experience in the past shows. Years ago, and up until three or four years ago, the cost of navy-yard construction was materially more than that of private-yard construction; but as a result of continued work and greater experience in the navy yards they have been reducing their cost, so that they have been coming nearer and nearer together; and recently in the Mare Island Navy Yard they completed their contracts for less than their estimates and turned back some money into the Treasury.

Mr. FOSS. That was in the case of a small ship, was it not?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is it not a fact that the cost charges to which the gentleman from Illinois refers were shown to include a large number of maintenance items for the yard itself which were not properly included in the cost of the ship?

Mr. PADGETT. That was true under the old system, but was corrected in the legislation of one or two years ago.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And that accounted very largely for the discrepancy in the cost of the Florida, referred to by the gentleman.

Mr. PADGETT. That was an essential element that went into it; but the present Secretary has felt that there should not be charged against the cost of the ship those items for the maintenance and operation of the yard which would exist and be paid regardless of whether a ship was built in the yard or not. The yard is maintained for military purposes largely, as well as for industrial purposes, and the industrial work should not be charged with those items that are and would be maintained on account of the military character of the yard.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. It has appeared to me that there has not been any particular speeding up in the building of ships for the Navy during the last year. In fact, the only speeding up that appears in enlarging the Navy, as I have read the reports, is the speeding up in talk. Now, will the gentleman tell me the number of submarines that have been authorized that have not been constructed and the number of submarines authorized and under contract that are being constructed?

Mr. PADGETT. There were 18 submarines authorized in the bill we passed on the 3d of March, 1915. Sixteen of them were coast-defense submarines and two of them were large seagoing submarines. Contracts have been awarded for the 16 coast-defense submarines, and the work is supposed to be in progress.

Mr. NORTON. They are being built, are they?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know whether the contractors have started or not, but contracts have been awarded and the time has been fixed for the construction. The two seagoing submarines have not yet been awarded. It has been very difficult to find a contractor who would undertake to meet the requirements of the specifications.

Mr. NORTON. Can the gentleman tell the House whether the Secretary of the Navy or the President has done anything toward speeding up the completion of the submarines?

Mr. PADGETT. The Secretary of the Navy has got the very best terms he could make with the contractors.

Mr. DILLON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. DILLON. Can the gentleman give, for the benefit of the committee, the amount of the private bids on these two ships?

Mr. PADGETT. It was stated in the hearings; it was several hundred thousand dollars more than the limit of cost.

Mr. DILLON. Will the gentleman put it in the RECORD for the benefit of the committee?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. I will yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. REAVIS. How many ships are now being constructed and already constructed?

Mr. PADGETT. Sixty-six or 68—submarines, torpedo boats, and all.

Mr. BUTLER. Sixty-eight.

Mr. REAVIS. If these ships were all completed, what would be the comparison between our Navy and the foreign navies?

Mr. PADGETT. That is a question that will be opened up when we come to discuss the regular naval appropriation bill.

Mr. REAVIS. Would we not stand fourth?

Mr. PADGETT. My individual opinion is that we are third.

Mr. REAVIS. What would we be if all the ships were constructed, I ask?

Mr. PADGETT. I have stated that we would be third, in my opinion.

Mr. REAVIS. Provided the foreign navies were in the same condition they were at the beginning of the war.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; we have no reliable information as to what the program has been since the war began. There are newspaper reports of a substantial increase.

Mr. REAVIS. But we have some reliable information that some of them have been sunk.

Mr. PADGETT. None of their capital ships have been lost, except England lost one big, new battleship.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. I hold in my hand a document prepared by the Office of Naval Intelligence, United States Navy Department, in October, 1915. It is entitled "Information Concerning Some of the Principal Navies of the World." On page 7 I find a table showing the figures on July 1, 1914, just before the European war broke out. It appears that at that time the United States was fourth, a shade below France, in war tonnage built plus war tonnage then building. In war tonnage actually completed at that time we were third.

Mr. PADGETT. That is true, but I never believed in tonnage as a determinate factor of efficiency.

Mr. GARDNER. No; but that is the fact, is it not?

Mr. PADGETT. That is true as far as tonnage is concerned.

Mr. GARDNER. It was inferior to France, was it not?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; so far as tonnage is concerned; but, in my opinion, as far as efficiency, I found that the United States was third.

Mr. GARDNER. This was based on tonnage built and building.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; but in my statement I counted on built, building, and authorized that we were third.

Mr. GARDNER. I want to say that the Navy Department had some incomplete figures which would answer the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS]. It shows the extent to which the foreign navies have lost tonnage during the war. They are only made up from newspaper accounts.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; that is published in two or three documents. Mr. Chairman, I will reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, how much time has the gentleman from Tennessee used?

The CHAIRMAN. Fifteen minutes.

Mr. BUTLER. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY].

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I think this resolution has served a very useful purpose because it has developed two important questions, one propounded by the distinguished ex-Speaker, Mr. CANNON, and the other by the present Speaker, Mr. CLARK. The House faces this situation. The world is in a great conflict. We may be facing an immediate crisis in our international relations. Our need of defense may be an immediate one. If our need is immediate, what should we do about it? That is the first proposition in relation to this subject which, it seems to me, the House should consider. All of these questions which relate to our present needs should precede questions of what we ought to provide some five or more years hence.

The whole trouble, I think, with our Navy Department has been that we have been proceeding all along, right through this war, on the theory that we had plenty of time to do what we wanted to do, while other nations have been proceeding on the theory that they should hasten to completion all the fighting craft heretofore authorized by them. As a result of that policy Germany has undoubtedly added to her navy all the ships she had under construction when we passed the last appropriation bill. The best obtainable information is that England and France have done the same. I presume that was the information upon which the President predicated his statement that our Navy is now fourth.

Assuming that England, France, Germany, and Japan have rushed their ships to completion and that we have simply moved along in the even tenor of our way, just as though we were living in a time of profound peace, I dare say that the President's assertion is correct, that we are fourth among the nations of the world in naval strength.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. Does the gentleman say that we ought to proceed with the same speed that these nations that are engaged in war are proceeding?

Mr. KELLEY. I will say that personally all along I have not thought that we would be drawn into the great conflict across the sea. I still cling to that idea. But during the last week or two the President of the United States has made a trip out through the Middle West, in which he said it is growing daily more and more difficult to keep out of this war. He said that nearly the whole world abroad is on fire, and that sparks are dropping everywhere.

Mr. GORDON. Dropping in the water, though.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I have assumed, let me say to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON], as a Representative here, whatever my partisan view may be, that the President of the United States is telling the country what he believes to be the true situation, and if what he says is true, then the Congress of the United States is derelict in its duty in not putting into the active service of the Navy every available gun and every available craft. [Applause on the Republican side.] There is at this moment under construction for the Navy of the United States $185,000,000 worth of fighting ships, and, so far as I am concerned, if we are living in a time of great danger, and we are, the first consideration of Congress should be to get those ships completed and into commission.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the gentleman know from his service on this committee whether or not we have been asked to facilitate in any way the completion of those ships?

Mr. KELLEY. So far as I know, and the chairman will be able to answer that better than I, there has been no request for additional sums of money for the purpose of facilitating the completion of any ship now building for the Navy. We have 9 dreadnaughts under construction at the present time, and we have only 8 dreadnaughts completed; 10, if you count the Michigan and the South Carolina. So that if we had the 9 we are now building, we would double our dreadnaught strength, and yet with "sparks flying" all around us, we can not start dreadnaught No. 44, assigned to the New York Navy Yard, until the California is off the ways. I was in the New York Navy Yard the other day, and they told me there that the California would not be ready to be launched until next September, and that we can not begin dreadnaught No. 44 until late next fall. It does not seem to me that, in view of all the trouble there is in the world, that we ought to take these long chances of delaying the construction of ships months and months, when they might be completed at an earlier date.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. Are these ships being constructed under contract, these $185,000,000 worth?

Mr. KELLEY. Some of them are, and some are being constructed by the Government in Government yards.

Mr. GORDON. Does the gentleman believe in complying with our contracts?

Mr. KELLEY. I was going to tell you——

Mr. GORDON. Well, tell me about that.

Mr. KELLEY. I have just explained that some of these ships are being constructed in Government navy yards. They told me up at the New York yard that they are working only 8 hours a day out of the 24—only one shift. Can the gentleman from Ohio give me any reason why at a time like this, when the President of the United States says that we are in the midst of a great conflagration, we should not put on another shift of 8 hours or two shifts of 16 hours? [Applause on the Republican side.] In that way we could get the California off the ways and we could begin No. 44 within a reasonable time, instead of waiting until next September.

Mr. GORDON. Yes; I will tell you. Has Congress appropriated any money for that; have you introduced any bill appropriating additional money to facilitate this work?

Mr. KELLEY. Why, the chairman of the committee has explained that it would not cost any more to construct the ships working two shifts than working one, but the time would be materially reduced.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY. Yes.

Mr. PADGETT. The Secretary stated that he expected to put two shifts on the New York and the California yards.

Mr. KELLEY. I know; but with the "sparks flying all around," expectations are not what we want. We want performance. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BUTLER. And I understand that he expects to put them on as soon as the weather permits!

Mr. GORDON. Bunk! Bunk! That is all. [Laughter.]

Mr. KELLEY. So much for the dreadnaughts.

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY. Yes; I will yield, of course.

Mr. HENSLEY. The gentleman is perfectly right in supporting this proposition. It is only a business matter, and it ought to be supported. There is no question about that. But I understood the gentleman a few minutes ago to assume that these countries that are engaged in war abroad had been adding to their naval craft since the beginning of the war. My understanding from experts who appeared before the committee is that they are absolutely at sea and have no information upon which to predicate a conclusion.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that if he will consult the records he will find the date when nearly all of these ships of foreign Governments were laid down, and he will find, as I have found, that in almost every instance they have had plenty of time within which to finish the ships, even upon a peace basis.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to give me five minutes more.

Mr. BUTLER. I will try to find the time for the gentleman. I have allotted all of mine.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I will yield two minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I will yield the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. BUTLER. I thank the gentlemen very much.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, as to the submarines, we have 39 submarines now authorized, and some of them have been authorized since 1911. I do not know of any effort that has been made to speed up the construction of these small but very valuable ships. On the contrary, the Navy Department has awarded contracts for submarines to be delivered a year and a half hence.

Those that we authorized last year will not be delivered until some time in 1917. Those contracts have been awarded since the war in Europe began, and it seems to me that the part of wisdom would have been to make the contract date of delivery at the earliest time possible.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY. I would if I could, but I want to make this statement before my time expires again: The submarine concern which has been building a large number of the submarines for this country has, I am reliably informed, built 10 submarines for a foreign government. These submarines were built in Montreal, in a yard fitted up over there to do the work, the material being sent from the United States to Montreal. They constructed the 10 submarines of sufficient size, so that they went across the Atlantic Ocean under their own power. These ships were completed in a period of five months from the date of the order. Now, if that is true, it seems to me that the Government of the United States in a time of profound danger ought not to be awarding contracts for submarines to be delivered a year and a half or two years hence. [Applause.] Now, the other day I introduced a resolution, a very simple resolution (H. Res. 126), which was designed to call attention to this particular situation. The resolution in its concluding words is as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, directed to enter into such negotiations with contractors and Government yards as may be necessary to determine the earliest time within which all ships for the Navy now authorized or under construction can be completed, and report his findings to this House within 30 days from and after the adoption of this resolution, together with an estimate of any additional cost to the Government incident to the completion and delivery of ships prior to the contract date.

[Applause.]

We ought to have the information called for by this resolution, and then we can take such action as circumstances seem to warrant. I sincerely hope that none of these ships which we are building, or have built, or will build, will ever be called upon to fire a shot except in target practice, but at the same time, when the world is inflamed and the President himself says he does not know what dangers may be but a single hour away, I believe that it is the duty of Congress to put in the hands of the President and the Secretary of the Navy such authority as may be necessary to get these 68 ships heretofore authorized into the Navy at the very earliest possible moment. [Applause.]

The full text of the resolution, which I introduced a few days ago, relating to this subject follows:

Whereas the President of the United States in recent addresses in the the cities of New York, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Milwaukee, and Chicago is reported by the press of the country to have said:

"The world is on fire. * * * Sparks are likely to drop anywhere. * * * Things are getting more and more difficult to handle. * * * If all could see the dispatches I read every hour, they would know how difficult it has been to maintain peace. * * * New circumstances have arisen for which the country must prepare itself. * * * I know that we are daily treading amidst the most intricate dangers and that the dangers that we are treading amongst are not of our own making and are not under our control; and that no man in the United States knows what a single week or a single day or a single hour may bring forth. * * * These are solemn things to say to you, but I would be unworthy of my office if I did not come out and tell you with absolute frankness just exactly what I understand the situation to be"; and

Whereas the President is further reported to have said that while our Navy is our first arm of defense it ranks fourth in strength among the navies of the world; and

Whereas on March 4, 1911, Congress authorized the construction of two dreadnaughts (the Nevada and Oklahoma); on August 2, 1912, one dreadnaught (the Pennsylvania); on March 4, 1913, one dreadnaught (the Arizona); on June 30, 1914, three dreadnaughts (the California, Mississippi, and Idaho); and on March 4, 1915, two dreadnaughts (Nos. 43 and 44); and

Whereas the Nevada, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, Arizona, California, Mississippi, and Idaho are in various stages of completion, ranging from less than 10 per cent, in the case of the California, to 98 per cent, in the case of the Oklahoma; and

Whereas dreadnaughts Nos. 43 and 44, authorized nearly one year ago, have been assigned for construction to the navy yards at Brooklyn and Mare Island, respectively; and

Whereas the navy yard at Mare Island is not equipped for the construction of battleships, and no appropriation for such equipment has as yet been made by Congress, and therefore the actual work of construction on dreadnaught No. 44 can not be undertaken until late in the fall of 1916; and

Whereas the dreadnaught California is now on the ways at the Brooklyn Navy yard and dreadnaught No. 43 can not be laid down until the California is launched some months hence; and

Whereas on March 4, 1913, Congress authorized the construction of five destroyers (the Tucker, Conyngham, Porter, Jacob Jones, and Wainwright); on June 30, 1914, six destroyers (the Sampson, Rowan, Davis, Allen, Wilkes, and Shaw); and on March 3, 1915, six destroyers (Nos. 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, and 74); and

Whereas the destroyers Tucker, Conyngham, Porter, Jacob Jones, Wainwright, Sampson, Rowan, Davis, Allen, Wilkes, and Shaw are in various stages of completion, ranging from less than 20 per cent, in the case of the Shaw, to about 90 per cent, in the case of the Tucker; and

Whereas although destroyers Nos. 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, and 74 were authorized nearly a year ago, the actual work of construction has not yet begun and the contracts for same do not call for delivery until late in 1917; and

Whereas on August 22, 1912, Congress authorized the construction of the fuel ship Maumee; on March 3, 1915, the fuel ship Cuyama; on June 30, 1914, one transport; and on June 30, 1914, one supply ship, none of which is yet completed; and

Whereas on March 3, 1909, Congress authorized the construction of submarine G–3, not yet completed; on August 22, 1912, 8 submarines (L–1, L–2, L–3, L–4, L–5, L–6, L–7, and M–1); on March 4, 1913, 4 submarines (L–8, L–9, L–10, and L–11); on June 30, 1914, 8 submarines (the Schley, N–1, N–2, N–3, N–4, N–5, N–6, and N–7); on March 3, 1915, 18 submarines (O–1, O–2, O–3, O–4, O–5, O–6, O–7, O–8, O–9, O–10, O–11, O–12, O–13, O–14, O–15, O–16, and 2 seagoing submarines); and

Whereas the L and N submarines were authorized from one and one-half to three and one-half years ago, are not yet completed but are in various stages of completion, ranging from less than 40 per cent in the case of the N boats to 99 per cent in the case of L–1 and L–2, while the Schley, authorized more than a year and one-half ago, has not yet been started; and

Whereas the 16 O submarines were authorized nearly a year ago, the contracts for same have only recently been awarded, and the date of delivery fixed therein for April 15, 1917, while the 2 seagoing submarines have been authorized since March 3, 1915, bids have only recently been invited; and

Whereas it is reported upon reliable authority that an American shipbuilding company has constructed, in Canada, within a period of five months from the date of the order, 10 submarines for a foreign Government, of a type having a steaming radius sufficient to cross the Atlantic Ocean under their own power; and

Whereas 67 ships for the United States Navy are now authorized or under construction and the work on same is being carried forward as though ordinary peace conditions prevailed in the world and although "sparks are falling everywhere," no effort has been put forth since the beginning of the war in Europe to hasten the construction of any ship for the United States Navy: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, directed to enter into such negotiations with contractors and Government yards as may be necessary to determine the earliest time within which all ships for the Navy now authorized or under construction can be completed, and report his findings to this House within 30 days from and after the adoption of this resolution, together with an estimate of any additional cost to the Government incident to the completion and delivery of ships prior to the contract date.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. CURRY].

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I represent the district in which the Mare Island Navy Yard is located, but I am not a special pleader for the Government yard. I am not one of those who say that all naval construction should be in Government yards. I believe that the private yards should be given enough work so that their organization and equipment should be maintained at a point of efficiency that is almost perfect, so that if trouble should come this country could use both the public as well as the Government yards. I do, however, believe that at least 50 per cent of all new construction work should be done in Government navy yards.

Now, the proposition of the time in which these ships could be constructed has been brought before this House, and I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that Admiral Bowles a number of years ago went before the Naval Affairs Committee and stated that it would take $1,000,000 more and a year longer to construct a battleship in a Government yard than in a private yard, and the fact of the matter is, when Congress has authorized the construction of battleships in a Government yard, that the ships have been constructed for $1,000,000 less and in a year's less time.

Mr. QUIN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CURRY. I will.

Mr. QUIN. Can the gentleman tell why it is that all of these ships, submarines, and so forth, authorized have not been built? Congress put up the money to construct them.

Mr. CURRY. That is a question the gentleman ought to ask the chairman of the committee. My personal opinion is that submarines can be built cheaper in a private yard than in a public yard, because nearly all their parts are covered by patents, but the chairman of the committee can answer better than I can.

Capt. Bennett, commandant at the Mare Island Navy Yard, in a statement estimating for the construction of battleship No. 44, stated that he could lay the keel at the Mare Island Navy Yard by the 1st of August of this year, and that it would take not to exceed 32 months to complete that ship.

Now, the Mare Island (Cal.) yard has always built within the time limit and within the estimate. During the past three years new construction has been awarded to Mare Island Navy Yard under estimates of $3,623,000. It was completed for $3,134,600, a saving to the Government under the estimate of $488,400. In addition to the saving of $488,400 the Mare Island Navy Yard has thus saved the Government, you should add the difference between the estimates of the Mare Island Navy Yard and the next lowest bid to find the real saving to the Government. The money provided for in this resolution, which is not an appropriation but simply a transfer, is to purchase new machinery and to lengthen the ways. The machinery that is necessary is a boring mill, planers, lathes, cranes, and the lengthening of the ways; and all of these would have to be provided for at the Mare Island Navy Yard regardless of whether we construct a battleship or not, with the possible exception of the lengthening of the ways. Now, under the estimate for the construction of this battleship the officials of the Mare Island Navy Yard include the cost of this equipment, and it does not cost the Government anything excepting the transfer from their estimate and to make it immediately available.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CURRY. I will.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Inasmuch as the Mare Island Navy Yard is in the gentleman's district, will not he please reply to the charge made here to-day that a dreadnaught constructed in the Mare Island Navy Yard could not find its way to the sea?

Mr. CURRY. I will. The Fore River yard is one of the great shipbuilding yards of the United States. The shipbuilding yard on the Clyde at Glasgow, Scotland, is the greatest shipbuilding yard in the world. The channels to those two yards are 22 feet deep and they are not near so wide as the Mare Island channel. They are narrower and shallower than the Mare Island channel. On the Clyde they have built the greatest battleships in the British Navy and greyhounds that cross the Atlantic. There is no person on the floor of this House——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CURRY. May I have five minutes more?

Mr. BUTLER. I would like to extend it to the gentleman, but what I have not I can not dispose of.

Mr. CURRY. Will the gentleman permit me to answer this question?

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I will give the gentleman two minutes; that is all I can spare.

Mr. CURRY. None of them has ever stated for a moment that it would be against the public policy to permit those shipyards to construct battleships for the Nation.

Now, in the channel of the Mare Island Navy Yard, from the front of the ways to the sea, there is not one single spot that is not 30 feet at low tide. There are some spots in the channel above the ways that are shoaled up to 24 feet. The reason for that is there is what is known as the Pinole Shoals in San Pablo Bay that have not been kept open by the War Department. The War Department has a project adopted to maintain a channel for the purpose of commerce 600 feet wide and 30 feet deep through the Pinole Shoals.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. How much at tide rise?

Mr. CURRY. The tide rises 6 feet.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That would give 36 feet?

Mr. CURRY. Thirty-six feet. When this channel is open through the Pinole Shoals there will be a straight sweep of the tide from the bay that will help scour the Mare Island channel. At the present time the outgoing tide deposits débris against the shoals, and the incoming tide sweeps the débris from the shoals into the channel and deposits some of it in depressions, and, to a certain extent, shoals the channel above the ways.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. So that all during high tide there would be no difficulty whatever in taking any battleship from the navy yard down to the sea?

Mr. CURRY. The greatest battleship afloat draws 28 feet 5 inches.

Speaking of the channel, Commandant Bennett, of the Mare Island Navy Yard, on January 8, said:

> There is no better site in San Francisco Bay for a navy yard, which must be sufficiently inland to preclude hostile attack and destruction by shell fire in time of war. This, obviously, is impossible at Goat Island, and any other site in the bay would require as much or more dredging than Mare Island. The minimum depth from here to the Golden Gate is 30 feet, and the maximum draft of the superdreadnaughts is 29 feet. The fact that Mare Island has just been awarded the contract to build battleship No. 44 seems to dispose of all objections to it.

A suction dredge for the War Department to be used on Pinole Shoals will be completed next month. Following is a letter I received from the Chief of Engineers Office on the subject:

> WAR DEPARTMENT,
> OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
> Washington, January 12, 1916.
> Hon. CHARLES F. CURRY,
> House of Representatives.
> SIR: 1. In reply to your verbal inquiry at this office, I have the honor to inform you that the present project for the improvement of San Pablo Bay, Cal., provides for a channel 500 feet wide and 30 feet deep. The principal obstruction to navigation in this bay was a shoal known as Pinole Shoal, which before improvement had a minimum depth of 19 feet at mean lower low water. The channel has been dredged to the full project dimensions, but on the 30th of June, 1915, had shoaled at one point so that the maximum draft which could be carried through it was 24.7 feet at mean lower low water.

2. The project contemplates the construction of a seagoing suction dredge to maintain the full depth in the channel. This dredge is being built under contract and will be completed in February of this year. The dredge has ample capacity to obtain and maintain the full project depths in the channel. The commerce passing through the channel during the calendar year 1914 amounted to nearly 4,000,000 tons, valued at about $115,000,000.

3. When the project was originally considered great weight was given to the fact that the Mare Island Navy Yard was located above this shoal, and that the depth recommended would be very beneficial to naval vessels using the yard. It is somewhat doubtful whether the project would have been favorably recommended at that time had it not been for the existence of the navy yard. But since the project has been under way there has been so much development on the water front above this shoal that commercial interests are now so great that the project would have to be maintained for these interests alone.

4. There is a minimum tidal range in San Pablo Bay of 5 feet, so that at high tide there will be at least 33 feet of water throughout the channel when completed.

By direction of the Chief of Engineers.

Very respectfully,

W. KELLY,
Major, Corps of Engineers.

I am firmly of the opinion that the policy of the Secretary of the Navy to have some of the battleships built in Government yards is in the interest of the public. It will reduce the cost of battleships and the time in which they will be constructed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimouse consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN], a member of the committee.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call to the attention of the House the remarks of our distinguished President, made about one year ago, when he said that he was unalterably opposed to any material increase in the Army or in the Navy, and then to compare that statement with his statement of to-day, that the world is on fire, and that we are surrounded by all sorts of enemies, and that sparks are flying.

I wonder if he has in mind the little altercation between this Government and the then President of Mexico, Victoriana Huerta, when the two countries were practically plunged into war because the then President of Mexico refused to fire but 9 or 11 shots in salute of our flag, and our President insisted on having 21? And then it occurs to me that to-day our State Department is quibbling with Germany over the word "disavow" or "illegal" in connection with the sinking of the Lusitania. I am just a little inclined to think that the President has good reason for believing that the world is on fire and demanding this additional program of preparedness.

Now, let us see if his words and the actions of the Navy Department—and I am particularly interested in the Navy, because of my being a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs—agree. Notwithstanding that a terrible conflict has been tearing Europe asunder for a year and a half and seriously jeopardizing our peace, what has the Secretary of the Navy done toward improving the personnel or the matériel of the Navy during that time?

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. BRITTEN. No; I have only five minutes.

What has he done with reference to the recommendation of the Naval General Board more than a year ago, that indicated there was a shortage of 17,500 men in our fleet? Admiral Badger came before our committee a year ago and said there was a shortage of 18,000 enlisted men, and referring to the remark of the chairman of our committee—for whom I have the very highest regard—when he said that tonnage did not indicate the value or efficiency of a fleet. That is very true, but what is the value of tonnage if you have not the men with which to man the ships And that is the situation in the Navy to-day.

We have not had a war mobilization of the ships of our Navy, because we have not the men to put on them. What is the use of talking about having so many tons of battleships if you are going to keep them in reserve because you have no seamen? Almost a year ago the Naval General Board said that we were short 17,500 men. This year they say we need at least 15,000 men. And the Secretary of the Navy has recommended 7,500 ordinary seamen and 2,500 apprentice seamen, and this in the face of an emergency. The Atlantic Fleet, of 15 battleships, is to-day at Guantanamo, and as late as December 30 the Navy Department received a radiogram from the commander in chief stating that he was short 510 coal passers and any number of petty officers, running the list of vacancies to-day up to 1,000 men in the 15 ships down there. Now, in the name of heaven, how are we going to man the other 15 battleships while we are surrounded by fire and sparks?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. I yield half a minute more to the gentleman.

Mr. BRITTEN. I merely desire to call the attention of the House and the country to the fact that notwithstanding the terrible war going on in Europe, into which we may any day be drawn, not one single recommendation of an emergency character from the Secretary has come before our committee up to the present time and none is provided in the appropriation bill supposed to go through the House this year. The administration five-year program, so called, is not a five-year program. It is a 10-year program. It will take us 10 years to complete the ships provided in the program that will be presented to the House in the next appropriation bill. All our plans are proceeding just as they would if the world were at peace.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARDNER. I make that request for the purpose of printing a statement published in the Boston Herald at the time these contracts for battleships No. 43 and No. 44 were awarded to the Government navy yards.

Now, I agree with the gentleman from California [Mr. CURRY] that it is wise to encourage both Government navy yards and private navy yards. This Boston Herald editorial contains the best and clearest statement which I have seen, showing the difference in bookkeeping and overhead charges between the Government and the private navy yards. For that reason I am offering this statement for the information of anyone who chooses to examine into it. Here it is:

[From the Boston Herald, Saturday, Nov. 20, 1915.]

WHY THE PRIVATE YARDS LOST THE BIDS FOR NEW SHIPS.

The American public has just learned that the private shipyards, which submitted competitive bids for the construction of battleships 43 and 44, failed to offer so low prices as the Government-owned yards. This must strike our readers as odd. They see the Government do little at a less expensive rate than privately owned concerns. How, then, does it happen that Uncle Sam is so successful in shipbuilding by contrast with private enterprise?

The answer involves a little explanation. The New York Navy Yard makes up its estimate by entering $745,357 for "overhead" charges. The private yards have found by experience that they must rate this factor at approximately $2,000,000. And there is no necromancy by which the United States gets away with it for 1 cent less. It simply does not need to charge it, because it has no responsibility for making ends meet. Let us look over the items that go to overhead charges and see how the two bidders respectively regard them.

Depreciation of plant in private yards for the three years in which a battleship would be building is a factor of undoubted consequence. The private yards ordinarily estimate 5 per cent per annum of the total building and machinery value for the period the ship is under construction. The Government enters nothing for this item. But does Uncle Sam buy machinery or building material at any less than do private yards? By no means. Is there, then, any reason why his depreciation should be rated at a lower figure, or disregarded? Yes; there is one reason. Because the Government estimators do not have to come out square. They do not have to make a battleship carry all the charges of building a battleship, but may distribute the charge over the operations of sovereignty.

When a building or a machine wears out Congress appropriates money for new ones, instead of distributing the depreciation as a charge over the work as it is performed. The private yard must either maintain such a scrutiny or go into the bankruptcy court, and that is all there is to the astounding disparity which Secretary Daniels has uncovered. For it should be understood, first and last, that an entity which keeps no real accounts can always make a showing of effective competition with bidders who do comply with the hard conditions of actual business. Let us examine a few cases.

The private yard has to pay for its drawings and plans, and charges these costs direct against the ship where they belong. This with a battleship amounts of $250,000. The navy yards carry this in a separate appropriation, as one of the general charges of conducting a government, and never think of leveling it against the building of a particular ship. But we have to pay for it just the same.

The cost of clerks, timekeepers, and other minor officials comes out of this general expense of the Navy as a part of governmental sovereignty. In the case of the private shipbuilder these items amount to $125,000 during the construction of ships like those for which bids were recently invited. Government yards get their moderate bids by omitting such items altogether.

The salaries of officers detailed for duty in connection with the construction Uncle Sam charges to the Navy pay roll and not to the ship. These amount to $30,000 with Uncle Sam, and to quite a little more in private yards, which regularly utilize, as competitive rivalry compels, a higher order of business talent.

The item of insurance and indemnity bonds amounts to $100,000 to a private company. But the Government does not worry about such things. It does not insure a battleship in construction, since if anything happens to it another appropriation from Congress will build a new one. Nor does it consider the liability of loss by fire, or otherwise, as a factor in its estimates.

The Government allows all employees in the navy yards sick leave, holidays, vacation, etc., during the year, and these are charged to a separate appropriation and not to item of labor on the particular job in question. These would amount to $350,000 in the construction of the ship. But any gratuities that the private yard gives in the way of vacations, holidays, etc., must be lodged in overhead charges and borne in the cost of the ship. The private shipbuilder allows in his estimate the sum of $100,000 for trials, but the navy yard completes and commissions its ships, and after the crew has become accustomed thereto, holds the trial, but the cost of it is charged against operation and not construction. Thus the dice are loaded.

No Government yard carries any part of the burden of local taxation. The Charlestown Navy Yard, for example, makes no contribution in taxes toward the surfacing of Chelsea Street by its side, as a private establishment of the same size and value would do. And yet this street-repair cost must come out of the people in one form if not in another. Any private yard hereabouts would pay in municipal taxation in the construction of one battleship not less than $50,000. This would be the sum which would go to the municipal government for taxes on the plant and machinery thus represented during the years of construction. Even if we technically save this in building by the Government, the municipality loses it and so must take it out of the people.

The private contractor takes a ship at a fixed price and gets no more unless the purchaser orders some changes from the schedule. In the case of a Government-built ship the only limit is the total of the appropriation, and when that is gone Congress passes another appropriation to finish the job. That has been done, not once but several times. In other words, the Government yard has absolutely no responsibility to live up to. If any material change in the prices of materials or of labor comes to pass, the Government simply uses up the money at hand and then asks for more. If a Government yard, on the other hand, completed a ship, even with all these advantages, at less than the bid, such an event would be heralded broadcast as a triumph of Government ownership. But such a contingency has never arisen in the history of Government shipbuilding.

Secretary Daniels a year ago made a ruling whereby certain indirect charges which had been borne on the ship should thereafter be carried on other accounts. This served to make the competition more difficult for the private yard, but in the long run Uncle Sam must pay in one form if not in another. Why should we as a people "fool ourselves" about these things? Why should we debate over what Government ownership means, and question whether it pays or not? Only one experience ever goes on the records, in postal operations or in shipbuilding or anything else.

Another big factor in the competition is the Government's total lack of responsibility for completing a ship within a prescribed time. But a private yard must measure all these things very minutely, for every day of delay costs it a penalty. Two private bidders in the case under review offered to construct either ship in 34 months. The Mare Island yard offered to construct one in 31 months after receipt of structural material; the Philadelphia Navy Yard, in 36 months after awarding of contract for structural material; and the New York Navy Yard, in the same time as the Philadelphia. But if past performances carry any lesson, none of these Government yards has any intention of fulfilling its contract within the time limit which it proposes. These estimates by the navy yards as to time of completion are misleading, because they hinge on the delivery of structural steel, an entirely unknown quantity under present market conditions, and will result in at least a year being added to the promised time of completion.

The colliers constructed at the Government's Mare Island yard took nearly twice as long to build as did similar ships at the Maryland Steel Co. in Baltimore. The battleships California, Mississippi, and Idaho, for which contracts were let in 1914, afford examples of the contrast. The Idaho, building at the New York Shipbuilding Co., on November 1 was 45 per cent complete. The Mississippi, building at the Newport News Co., was 33.1 per cent complete. Now see the difference. The California, building at the New York Navy Yard, had not been yet begun, nor had the materials which are to go into her been assembled. And yet a year has passed.

Last December the department let contracts for six torpedo-boat destroyers. Nos. 63 and 64, building at Fore River, were, on November 1, 61.1 and 57.5 per cent, respectively, complete. Nos. 65 and 66, building at the Bath Iron Works, were at the same time 57.5 and 53.8 per cent complete. No. 67, building at Cramps, was 34.1 per cent complete. Now, listen, and No. 68, building at Uncle Sam's Mare Island, was 12.5 per cent complete.

Perhaps Boston people will recall that in the municipal election here two years ago a supply ship, which various politicians were attempting to secure for the Charlestown Navy Yard, played a prominent part. In the end, when the contract was let, Mr. Curley, then a candidate for mayor, and every other Democratic politician in Boston, at once claimed the honor of having brought it here. This ship is now but 31.1 per cent completed. At a private yard she would have been put into commission long ago. The same is true of a transport now building at the Philadelphia Navy Yard, which is only 36.1 per cent completed. Of the last four submarine contracts, three went to the Electric Boat Co. and one to the Portsmouth Navy Yard. On November 1 L–9 was 86.4 per cent complete, L–10 was 83.9 per cent complete, and L–11 was 80.3 per cent complete. Now comes the other. L–12, at Uncle Sam's Portsmouth yard, was but 56.2 per cent complete, and practically no work had been done on her engines—a long and costly undertaking. And yet in all these things time is of the highest importance.

Preparedness is in the air. Do we really want it? If so, we must abandon this Government-ownership folly and trust to the enlightened efficiency of private enterprise, under the spur of real competition. If we want a supply ship we should build her under conditions of demonstrated capacity; if we want to provide wages and contracts under the conditions that professional politics decree, we should hug to Government ownership and pretend to believe that Secretary Daniels could actually get ships built more economically in Uncle Sam's own yards. But if we want truth and reality in this world of ours we should dismiss these conclusions which Josephus reaches as the sheerest nonsense, unworthy of a moment's consideration by any intelligent being.

There are certain other facts which I want to make a matter of record, because there is so much confusion of mind as to this question of how long it takes to build dreadnaughts in England and how long it takes to build them here. If you gentlemen will get the United States Navy Yearbook for 1915, recently published by the Senate, you will find on page 524 a table showing just how long it actually takes to build dreadnaughts in England, and on page 523 you will find a table showing just how long it actually takes to build them here in the United States. So far as our records show, the last two dreadnaughts completed in England before the war were the Audacious and the Iron Duke. The Audacious took 2 years and 2 months and the Iron Duke took 2 years and 2 months to complete from the time of the laying of the keel. The last two dreadnaughts completed by the United States prior to the breaking out of the European war were the Texas and the New York. The New York took 2 years and 7 months and the Texas took 2 years and 11 months to complete from the date of the laying of the keel. So we see that in the United States we build more slowly than the British, but the difference is not so great as is ordinarily supposed. In one case it took us five months longer and in the other case it took us nine months longer between the laying of the keel and the actual commissioning of the dreadnaughts. The fact is that our amazing delay comes before the keel is laid.

As to the statements made here that Great Britain can build a dreadnaught in a year, I have talked with men who worked on the Queen Elizabeth, and they have told me that it took only a year to build her. I found when I got to the root of the matter that they referred to the time required for actual building, not counting the time for fitting the ship out. This fitting out always takes a long time. Unless I am mistaken, putting on a dreadnaught's armor and installing her armament takes a long time after she is actually built.

When you hear that Great Britain has built 16 dreadnaughts since the war broke out, that is another misleading statement which is very easily explained. Take your United States Navy Yearbook for 1915 and turn to page 525 and to page 526, and you will find that when the European war broke out Great Britain had 16 dreadnaughts then building and one battle cruiser then building. When I hear that Great Britain has built 16 dreadnaughts since the war broke out, I strongly incline to the belief that they are the very same 16 dreadnaughts which she was already building when the war began.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, there are two points I desire to make in connection with this bill. In the first place, I greatly regret that there has been so much delay in getting started the construction of these ships. They were authorized a year ago, nearly, and yet there has been very unusual delay. It would seem as though the Navy Department were extremely desirous that these ships should be built in the navy yards. After we pass this resolution the Navy Department is to get the ways in order. The ships which are now on our present ways must first be completed, and it means nine months away before we can lay the keels on ships that were authorized one year ago.

Now, I am in favor of ships, but I want ships now. I want ships just as soon as we can get them. If there is an emergency, or even if there is not an emergency, but a great necessity for building up the Navy, then I want to see it built speedily.

That is the first point I desire to make—the unnecessary delay which has been occasioned. It would be better to-day if we could give these ships to private yards and then allow those which will be authorized this session of Congress to be built at the Government yards. We would then be months ahead.

I have had more or less experience with the building of ships in Government yards. I know how much they cost. I remember that we built the Florida in the New York Navy Yard, and she cost $2,000,000 more than her sister ship Utah. I recall that we built the New York in the New York Navy Yard, and that she cost a great deal more than her sister ship the Texas; and yet we excluded by law what are known as overhead or indirect charges against the cost of the battleship New York. And while the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] says that the navy yard estimates are less than the private bids, yet I think he will find that after this ship is built the navy yard has not been able to live up to its estimates.

I recall the fact that in the case of the Florida we were obliged here in this House to raise the limit of cost, and that was a Government-built ship; and also in the case of the New York, if I remember correctly, we raised the limit of cost. And so we could here to-day raise the limit of cost and give these ships to private contractors, and, in my judgment, they would build them cheaper than they will be built in Government navy yards.

All past experience goes to prove it. And, then, if it is the policy of the administration to build ships in navy yards, those authorized this year in the naval appropriation bill could be put into the navy yards, and we would be that much further along in the construction of our Navy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, there is a practical question confronting the Navy Department and the Congress in the consideration of this bill. Private shipyards are naturally pressed to capacity with orders for building ships for the merchant marine. They are also unable to meet the original estimate placed by Congress as to the outside cost of the proposed battleships, by reason of the increased cost of materials, particularly steel, which has resulted by reason of the great and enormous demands for munitions manufactures. It is not surprising that the private contractors could not come within the original estimate of cost, in view of the price of steel mounting 20 per cent to 30 per cent; and not only that, but being unable to obtain the steel even at the increased price for early delivery. Automobile manufacturers have been kept back in their orders largely because of inability to obtain the required amount of steel. If my opinion, based on my little knowledge of conditions existing in the steel industry, is worth anything, I do not think that even these Government yards, like the Mare Island Navy Yard, not heretofore equipped for such a large building program, are going to be able to complete the ships within the estimated time, simply because they will not be able to obtain the material. There is a greater demand for fabricated steel to-day than at any time before in recent history. But it is a sane policy to equip not only the New York yard but the yard on the Pacific with ways to build a large battleship. It is a lamentable fact that on the Pacific Ocean to-day there is not one modern battleship afloat. They all belong to the second line of defense; and in case of eventualities occurring on the Pacific, with the canal blocked as it is, we would have to follow the same course as that followed by the Oregon in the Spanish-American War of sending our battleships through the Straits of Magellan.

So in that great yard out on the Pacific coast, where they have been building vessels of less capacity than battleships, it is well that, with the wonderful equipment which they have there, we should install ways so that they can build battleships. When I visited that yard last summer I was much impressed with its organization and with the man at the head of it, a thorough business man, Capt. Bennett, who had such a perfect organization that everything about the yard seemed to impress me as if it was being managed by a private business head.

There has been some questions here as to whether there is sufficient draft of water in the channel of San Pablo Bay to enable a battleship when constructed to reach the sea. I asked Capt. Bennett, the commandant of the yard, that special question, and he said that until recently they had some difficulty on occasions by reason of the accumulation of silt in the channel of navigating the larger ships down to the ocean, but that since the building of certain bulkheads, whereby the waters of the Sacramento scour the deepened channel, the largest battleship has no difficulty whatever in reaching the yard or the ocean. The location of the Mare Island yard is far superior to that of any other that I know of on the Pacific coast. It is located about 26 miles from the Golden Gate, far removed from attack and the intermediate channels favorable for receiving. The new yard at Bremerton is hampered for the lack of available land. The new foundry, only 5 years old, is backed up into a hill, where they have no capacity whatever for the depositing of stores, such as coke, pig, and rock, that are needed in operating a steel or iron foundry. The available space for new buildings is limited, unless a separate tract considerably removed from the main plant and now partly occupied as a site for a marine hospital is utilized; but at Mare Island they have a large extent of yardage, which will enable them to launch into this building program and meet the demands of the hour.

Mr. BUTLER. I will ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] to use 10 minutes of his time now, and then I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] has 18 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] has 5 minutes remaining.

Mr. PADGETT. I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CALLAWAY].

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman is running.

Mr. PADGETT. In the temporary absence of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CALLAWAY] I will yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER].

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, the resolution now before the House is one reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs without a dissenting vote. Its sole purpose is to make available at this time for permanent improvement of two of our Government navy yards a part of the amount appropriated by the last Congress for the building of battleships No. 43 and No. 44. These battleships are to be built in the two Government navy yards referred to in the resolution at a net saving to the Government from the estimated cost of more than $1,300,000. The resolution in no sense calls for a new or additional appropriation, but simply authorizes the use of funds already appropriated, so as to materially hasten the building of the two battleships, and at the same time will greatly improve these two important navy yards, so that they can more efficiently handle the present as well as future work assigned to them.

In the discussion of such a resolution it is to be regretted that there should occur a display of narrow partisanship or a desire to advertise the purely selfish and mercenary claims of private shipyards. We had been assured by Members on the other side that consideration of meritorious measures like this would be placed on a broad, patriotic plane, free from all partisanship, but the speeches of some of the Members on the other side of the aisle, to which we have just listened, do not bear out this promise.

The Secretary of the Navy and those in charge of the two navy yards are to be congratulated and warmly commended for having secured by their united action a saving of this large sum in the estimated cost of the two battleships authorized by the last Congress.

It is also gratifying to state, as a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, that the hearings before that committee have shown conclusively that this large saving to the Government has in no wise affected the fighting efficiency of these great war vessels, and that when completed each will be the equal, if not the superior, of any battleship afloat.

Mr. PADGETT. I desire to yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], but he is not here.

Mr. BUTLER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] 5 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that I am very hysterical. I have found that my main trouble in life was caused by my being too cold-blooded, and I have no hysteria now; but I believe that an emergency exists, owing to the conditions in the world, which ought to cause the United States to put itself in a condition where it can defend its shores, its people, and its property. I think the emergency exists now, and that the sooner we make preparations the cheaper and the more effective it will be in the long run.

It is doubtless true that the construction of the battleships already authorized has been somewhat delayed, but that has always been the case. The emergency did not exist before. There was no reason then for speeding up.

Now that the emergency not only exists but is seen by the President of the United States and his administration, I have no doubt that there will be speeding up as to the ships already authorized. In my opinion this is not the time for crimination or recrimination. It is not the time to find fault with that which has been. It is the time for all who foresee what may come to join hands in preparation for that which may come. [Applause.] It is easy to find fault, as we are ourselves find. Other people find fault with us. I believe that the President of the United States is thoroughly sincere and patriotic in the utterances which he has made and in the foresight which he has gained as to the possibilities of the future, and that we, represented as we are by the President in our foreign affairs, ought to aid him in preparing the country for trouble, which we all hope will not come, but which may still come in spite of us. [Applause.] I think our distinguished Committee on Naval Affairs may well speed up, along with other things, and the sooner we have a bill from that committee which will authorize additions to the Navy the better off the country will be. In these matters we may well speed up, not merely in the executive and administrative branches of the Government but in the legislative branches of the Government. I am not in favor of war. I believe in maintaining peace. I am opposed to anything which will drag us into war. But just now the sensible thing for us to do is to put our country in a state of ample preparation for defense against any other nation or people in the world. [Applause.]

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I speak my real sentiments when I say that I concur in the patriotic words and sentiments of the gentleman from Illinois, who has just taken his seat.

He stated that this is an hour of patriotism and not a time for faultfinding. I will detain the House but a moment. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] stated that Admiral Blue said that Admiral Fletcher in December had sent a radio message saying that they were 500 short in coal passers.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. I know the gentleman wants to be correct; I did not mention Admiral Blue.

Mr. PADGETT. No; but Admiral Blue's statement is in the hearings to-day that he received the message. The gentleman from Illinois should have stated also that Admiral Blue stated that when the ships went south they went with a surplus of 150 to 200 men, and this radio had relation to the allotment to the different ratings in the fleet. The men were on the ship training to fill in as coal passers, and of those they had 150 to 200 surplus men aboard.

Mr. BRITTEN. Did not Admiral Blue also state that he did not understand what training was necessary for a coal passer?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; and he said that the ordinary seaman might become a coal passer.

Mr. BRITTEN. But the radio said there was a shortage of 510 on December 30.

Mr. PADGETT. Admiral Blue said that the shortage was in the apportionment to the ratings, but there was a surplus of 150 to 200 men on the ship to make up the coal passers as they were trained.

Mr. BRITTEN. The radio did not say anything about a surplus of men.

Mr. PADGETT. No; the radio had simply a relation to the ratings.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I intend to vote for the resolution because I think it timely; but I would like to ask the gentleman if he will not explain why more navy yards than the one at New York and the one at Mare Island are not included in this resolution.

Mr. PADGETT. Because there is no other money available. In the estimates there is $150,000 submitted for extension and enlargement of the ways at the Philadelphia Navy Yard.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am very glad to hear that.

Mr. PADGETT. Now, Mr. Chairman, my good friend, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss], for whom I have a very warm personal friendship and a high regard and esteem, who was the prior chairman of the Naval Committee and rendered a distinguished service as such, stated that while he was in favor of the building of the ships and for an increase of the Navy, that it was a source of great regret to him to see the unusual delay between the date of the authorization and the time of the laying of the keel. I want to give you some ships that were authorized and keels laid while he was chairman of the committee.

I take the Georgia, that was authorized March 3, 1899, and the keel was laid August 31, 1901. The Indiana was authorized June 30, 1890, keel laid May 7, 1891; the Iowa, authorized July 19, 1892, keel laid August 5, 1893; the Kearsarge, authorized March 2, 1895, keel laid June 30, 1896; the Missouri, authorized May 4, 1898, keel laid February 7, 1900; the Nebraska, authorized March 3, 1899, keel laid July 4, 1902; the New Jersey, authorized June 7, 1900, keel laid April 2, 1902; the Rhode Island, authorized June 7, 1900, keel laid May 1, 1902; the Vermont, authorized March 3, 1903, keel laid May 31, 1904.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. No; I can not yield now. So it does not appear that from the 3d of March, 1915, to the present time there has been that great unusual delay that has characterized the building of vessels heretofore.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I shall not detain the House longer. I have stated all the essential and material facts that occur to me in the discussion. These ships have been assigned to the navy yards. The department wishes to expedite it all it can, and is asking to make available this portion of the appropriation heretofore authorized in order that it may use it for the construction of the ways and for the equipment, in order to expedite the building of the ships. I ask that the resolution be read under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That of the money heretofore appropriated under the appropriation "Increase of the Navy, construction and machinery," in the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, approved March 3, 1915, the sums of not exceeding $100,000 for navy yard, New York, and not exceeding $500,000 for navy yard, Mare Island, Cal., are hereby made available for the extension of building ways and equipment necessary for the construction of battleships or battle cruisers in those yards.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the resolution to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HOWARD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration House joint resolution 93 and had directed him to report the same back with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PADGETT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MAHONING RIVER, OHIO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 8233) granting the consent of Congress to the Republic Iron & Steel Co. to construct a bridge across the Mahoning River in the State of Ohio.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Republic Iron & Steel Co., and its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Mahoning River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near the city of Youngstown, in the county of Mahoning, in the State of Ohio, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BARKLEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

STEAMBOAT-INSPECTION SERVICE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 449) to provide for the appointment of 11 supervising inspectors, Steamboat-Inspection Service, in lieu of 10.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4404, Revised Statutes of the United States, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4404. There shall be 11 supervising inspectors, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Each of them shall be selected for his knowledge, skill, and practical experience in the uses of steam for navigation, and shall be a competent judge of the character and qualities of steam vessels and of all parts of the machinery employed in steaming. Each supervising inspector shall be entitled to a salary of $3,000 a year, and his actual and reasonable traveling expenses incurred in the performance of his duties, together with his actual and reasonable expenses for transportation of instruments, which shall be certified and sworn to under such instructions as shall be given by the Secretary of Commerce."

SEC. 2. That section 4405, Revised Statutes of the United States, be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out the following words:

"The supervising inspector of the district embracing the Pacific coast shall not be under obligation to attend the meetings of the board oftener than once in two years; but when he does not attend such meeting he shall make his communications thereto, in the way of a report, in such manner as the board shall prescribe."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CURRY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RECLAMATION EXTENSION ACT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6057) to amend section 14 of the reclamation extension act approved August 13, 1914.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 14 of an act entitled "An act extending the period of payment under reclamation projects, and for other purposes," approved August 13, 1914, be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 14. That any person whose land or entry has heretofore become subject to the reclamation law, who desires to secure the benefits of the extension of the period of payments provided by this act, shall, within six months after the issuance of the first public notice hereunder affecting his land or entry, notify the Secretary of the Interior, in the manner to be prescribed by said Secretary, of his acceptance of all the terms and conditions of this act, and thereafter his lands or entry shall be subject to all of the provisions of this act: Provided, That upon sufficient showing the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, permit notice of acceptance of all the terms and conditions of this act to be filed at any time after the time limit hereinbefore fixed for filing such acceptance shall have expired, conditioned, however, upon the construction charge affecting said lands being increased 1 per cent for each 30 days or fraction thereof which may elapse between the expiration of the time limit hereinabove fixed, and the date of filing, or making application to file, acceptance under this proviso, and thereafter the lands or entry of any such persons so filing such notice of acceptance shall be subject to all the provisions of this act."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish the gentleman from Texas would briefly explain what the effect of this bill will be and the necessity for it.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Illinois will recall, we passed an act last year changing the terms of the irrigation law, which, of course, if accepted, affected all the existing contracts between water users under the reclamation act and the Government, and it required the acceptance on the part of the water users, under the terms of the act, to make it effective. There were certain conditions in the old law that we found it was impracticable for the water users to comply with, and we put a limit of six months on the time within which they would be required to accept. The Secretary of the Interior advised our committee that a good many of the water users, not having their especial attention called to this new act, not understanding the terms of it, and perhaps overlooking the notice that had been given them, failed within the time given to take advantage of the new act; and the purpose of this bill is solely to give the Secretary of the Interior the right, upon showing, to extend further time to these water users who still want to come in and accept the new terms.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman refers to the act by which we extend the time for making payments?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Yes.

Mr. MANN. For 20 years?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. That is the act.

Mr. MANN. And they were required, if they wished to take advantage of it, to make acceptance of it within six months of the passage of the act?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. After receiving notice, as I remember it.

Mr. MANN. Did not the Interior Department notify them all, either directly or through the newspapers, or otherwise?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I do not know whether he gave notice to all. I suppose he intended to do so, but he says that a great many did not understand the advantages to be derived by acceptance of the provisions of the act, and it was possible that some of them overlooked the issuance of the public notice.

Mr. MANN. I recall that statement of the Secretary, and it seemed to me a great reflection upon these settlers out there, that a settler would not understand the advantage of taking 20 years within which to pay his bills, without interest, rather than to pay them now. A man who does not understand enough about that to appreciate it will never understand how to make crops on the soil.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. On the other hand, it seems to me that if those people had understood it they certainly would have accepted.

Mr. MANN. Possibly it ought to be forced on them anyway. I do not reserve the right to object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, can the chairman tell us about how many have taken advantage of the law and how many have not?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I am not able to state that.

Mr. BORLAND. Is not that a rather important piece of information?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. My information is that the larger portion of them have taken advantage of it, but I could not give the gentleman the exact proportion.

Mr. BORLAND. Has the gentleman any figures at all as to the number that have not yet accepted the law?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I have not. This bill is at the instance and at the request of the Secretary of the Interior. It was pretty clearly shown when the bill was under consideration—that is, the bill of last year—that it was to the interest of the Government as well as the water users that that act should be passed and that everybody under these projects should accept it; and I take it for granted that these water users, as farmers sometimes do, did not keep up with the acts of Congress, had no means of informing themselves as to the exact terms of an act of this length, and neglected within the time prescribed to take advantage of it by accepting it.

Mr. BORLAND. That being true, in another six months there would still be some who had neglected to take advantage of it.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. There is a penalty here prescribed that they must pay 1 per cent per month on the construction charges as long as they neglect to do it. From the standpoint of the Interior Department it is very desirable that these people all come in, and some of them are now desirous of doing so who did not within the time prescribed.

Mr. BORLAND. I think there are some projects out there where it is desirable they should come under the new law, and especially where the project has been formally opened and the price was satisfactory and where there was opportunity to find out the real cost of the project. In those particular cases it is better for the settler to come under the law as far as the Interior Department is concerned. These are cases in which the settler will not probably come under the law, cases where they have neglected or cases where the project has not been formally opened, and so they have never been called upon to pay anything.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I will say there is no way to compel them to come in unless we make it to their interest to do so, and we thought we had by the act of August, 1914.

Mr. BORLAND. Could not that result be accomplished by an amendment which would provide that when the project was formally opened that they must then come under the law? Now, that is the only class it is going to refer to, projects not formally opened.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I think this refers to any project.

Mr. BORLAND. The people who have not come under the law are those who never had to pay anything or were called upon to pay anything.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I do not think that is true. I think that those people who have not come in merely have not done so on account of——

Mr. BORLAND. I do not see how the Government could suffer if this was adopted in view of the 1 per cent a month penalty, but it is very doubtful to me whether it is going to bring about the result in cases where the project has been formally opened. I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Unless some gentleman desires to debate the bill the Chair will put the question.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to be recognized. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas what this bill does. It extends the time of payment for these lands referred to.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. No, sir; this only extends the time within which water users may accept the terms of the act passed last August extending the time of payment.

Mr. CANNON. That was extended for how long?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. From 10 to 20 years.

Mr. CANNON. That was without interest?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Without interest.

Mr. CANNON. Well, that act has been passed.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Yes; that act has been passed.

Mr. CANNON. And it is now the law?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. As the gentleman will recollect, the original law gave the water users 10 years without interest, and the act of last year extended the time to 20 years.

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Within which payment might be made.

Mr. CANNON. I was not familiar with the last act.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. This is intended to give the water users further time, within the discretion of the Secretary, to accept the terms of the new act.

Mr. CANNON. When it is paid it then gives a new "round robin" under the law to go back for further reclamation.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Yes, sir; exactly.

Mr. CANNON. In five minutes, Mr. Speaker, I only desire to say I was one of the men in Congress when this original act was passed who did not vote for it. It had not been a great while since the free-homes bill had been passed under the leadership of the then Delegate from Oklahoma, Representative Flynn. That extension took in desert and good lands at a very high price, and no one could go in there unless it was thrown open to homestead entry, the homesteader to pay what the Government had to pay. Well, that ran along until we paid up to forty million. Then a combination was formed to give free homes, and that thirty-five or forty million dollars did not go into the Treasury, and never will, of course, because it was released. Now, I say this not for the purpose of antagonizing this bill, because the legislation has already been had; but I want to say while they are doing some good work I have no doubt in the reclamation business that the Government will never, in my judgment, receive a cent for these lands for their improvement or the use of the water. I think we loaned $20,000,000——

Mr. SMITH of Texas. If the gentleman will permit, I will say to him we are already receiving money back every year.

Mr. CANNON. You are already receiving something from that, and I presume you intended it under the act which was passed last session and I assume that where you are giving 20 years of time without payment of interest you will not receive it. I think I was in Congress when that legislation was enacted for the reimbursement to the reclamation fund, but there are many States, 96 Senators, 434 or 435 Representatives, and in the end I think it will be equivalent to free homes again.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I rather regret that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has seen fit to express the opinion that full repayments will not be made under the reclamation projects. I said a few days ago, when a similar statement was made on this side——

Mr. CANNON. I was not present.

Mr. MONDELL (continuing). That gentlemen would not make such statements if they knew the facts and realized the effect of their words. The only suggestions we hear in the regions where these projects are located to the effect that full repayment should not be made are based on statements just such as that which my friend from Illinois makes. When our farmers see in the press that men of prominence and long service in the House express the opinion that they will never make their payments, those who are not disposed to make payments—and I suppose none of us are disposed to pay if some one will relieve us of the necessity of doing so—quote statements made here and suggest that Congress does not expect them to repay the charges.

They say distinguished gentlemen on both sides are voicing that opinion, and it is not expected we should pay. The fact is that if my good friend from Illinois and all others on this floor will stop expressing these doubts these repayments will in a very great measure be made. There is only one reclamation project in my State that is well under way, and my present information is that there are very few on that project behind in payments. They have been making payments right along for several years, and a very considerable sum has been repaid, from what was an absolutely raw desert when those people went there. Several million dollars have been repaid in all, I think something like three-quarters of a million in the last year on building charges, in addition to the very considerable repayments for maintenance and for upkeep. There will be some losses on some of these projects, because it will be developed, and it has been developed now, that we have attempted to irrigate some lands that can not be successfully irrigated. Alkali will develop in some locations where it will be impossible to get it out of the lands. We will find areas here and there on which people can not afford to pay the high cost of the building charge. There will be some loss on a number of projects, but if our good friends will let us alone and not keep sounding these doubts, I feel very confident that the major portion of all these sums will be eventually returned. Our people expect to make repayment. They are now making repayment, and the only reason why we are not getting more this year than we are is that the Interior Department has, in my opinion, been a little bit too easy and a little bit too considerate on some of the projects, has not called for or insisted on payments where they could be easily met.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

If nobody else desires to speak, the Chair will put the question. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SMITH of Texas, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK] asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

There is involved in this measure, Mr. Speaker, the name of one whose life and character have always been an inspiration to the people who live in the district which I have the honor to represent in this Congress. Long, long ago the people of Ohio learned to love and revere the name of William McKinley, and I believe that I voice the sentiment of every person of northeastern Ohio when I say that we will, indeed, be grateful to this Congress if you will pass this bill.

America feels proud of her great men, and we all feel proud of the grand, noble patriots who have so ably guided our ship of state during the greater part of the last 150 years, and their names will shine as the stars forever and ever in the history of our Nation. But we may search the history of these great men from the beginning to the end, from Washington to Wilson, and nowhere will be found any better, none greater, none nobler or more gentle, than William McKinley. [Applause.]

And so we come here to-day and ask you to pass this bill, so that the people who live in the district where he was born can have this little souvenir in memory of him, and at the same time you will be creating an endowment fund which will help to maintain this grand memorial which is being erected in the city of Niles, Ohio, in honor and commemoration of one of America's greatest and noblest men. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the coinage of a McKinley souvenir gold dollar, in commemoration of the erection of a memorial to William McKinley, late President of the United States."

LOAN OF TENTS AND COTS FOR ENCAMPMENT, UNITED CONFEDERATE VETERANS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the resolution (S. J. Res. 76) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan 1,000 tents and 1,000 cots for the use of the encampment of the United Confederate Veterans to be held at Birmingham, Ala., in May, 1916.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to loan, at his discretion, to the entertainment committee of the United Confederate Veterans, whose encampment is to be held at Birmingham, Ala., in the month of May, 1916, 1,000 tents and 1,000 cots: Provided, That no expense shall be caused the United States Government by the delivery and return of said property, the same to be delivered to said committee designated at such time prior to the holding of said encampment as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of War and the chairman of said entertainment committee: Provided further, That the Secretary of War, before delivering said tents and cots, shall take from said chairman of the entertainment committee a good and sufficient bond for the safe return of said property in good order and condition, and the whole without expense to the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I see this resolution is on the House Calendar. I do not recall and I have not examined to see whether it belongs on the House Calendar, but on its face I suppose, or should have supposed, that it would be a Union Calendar bill. Does the gentleman from Alabama happen to know?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I am unable to advise the gentleman from Illinois with any certainty on that subject, but I am rather inclined to think he is correct.

Mr. MANN. It is not a material matter, and I am not making a point of order on it.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I think the gentleman is correct.

Mr. MANN. I am making no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think we ought to have a statement from the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] in regard to it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I understand there is a general law which permits the department to lend to encampments of the Grand Army and of the United Confederate Veterans tents and cots for their temporary use during encampments. This resolution is for the purpose of enabling the Secretary of War to avail himself of that general law. The rights of the Government are amply safeguarded by the provisions of the resolution. The opinion of the Secretary of War has been taken and will be found in the report of the committee, which is an unanimous report.

I would like to call especial attention to the fact that this resolution makes the loan discretionary upon the part of the Secretary, so that if any event should transpire between this and the time the property will be required the Secretary will have power to withhold it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman refers to the report for information. I have read the report, and the only information in the report is in a letter from the Secretary of War, in which he makes this valuable statement:

If Congress so orders or directs, it is believed the property in question can be furnished at the time stated.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I concede that the gentleman's criticism, that the report is very skimpy, is well founded. But we have ample precedents for this resolution, and I trust——

Mr. MANN. This is the gentleman's district?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. It is.

Mr. MANN. Is it in the gentleman's own city?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. How extensive an encampment is it to be? Does the gentleman happen to know? Is it local or a State matter?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Oh, it will be held for the entire Confederate Veterans' Association. It is expected that the Confederate veterans from everywhere will assemble at this encampment.

Mr. MANN. I see that no large number is expected, and I regret to see we are not offering to give them more than 1,000 tents. I wish there were more of them to be there. [Applause.]

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I also regret that there is not a larger demand for this property and that there will not be a larger number of old men at that reunion. I lament they are becoming very scarce; the old men are passing away. I am sure that they will appreciate the fact that the Government is extending to them in a certain sense the recognition that they are honored citizens of the great country, and that they are beloved by the people from whom they come. They are passing away; it will be only a few years before they will be no longer among us, the brave men who wore the gray and their gallant adversaries who wore the blue. I rejoice that there is no one here who will object to extending this courtesy and this hospitality to these old soldiers of the sixties. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the resolution.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HUDDLESTON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the Senate joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS IN IOWA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 73) to amend chapter 231, known as the Judicial Code, act of March 3, 1911, volume 36, United States Statutes at Large, section 81, page 1111.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 8, after the word "Calhoun," insert the word "Carroll."
Page 3, line 8, strike out the word "Carroll."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I should like to call attention to one thing in this bill, not for the purpose of opposing it but in the hope that it may be practicable to leave out such things in future bills.

We have certain days in the House. This is the first Monday in February, which makes it unanimous consent and suspension day; yet there were various gentlemen of the House who came in this morning thinking that it was District of Columbia day. It is rather difficult for the Members of the House now to keep track of the various days, when we set apart certain Mondays and other days in the month for certain things. But if we should fix a certain day, which was the sixth Tuesday after the fourth Tuesday in February, or the eighth Tuesday after the third Tuesday in September, or the tenth Tuesday after the third Tuesday in September, or the eighth Tuesday after the fourth Tuesday in February, it would keep this House busy all the time figuring out what it was going to do on certain days. I think there is no place anywhere in the Revised Statutes or in the Judiciary Code where similar language occurs. It has been the invariable practice to fix dates for holding courts on certain days, the first or second Tuesday of a month, or whatever it was. I think it has never been proposed before that a court shall be held on the tenth Tuesday after the fourth Tuesday of a month.

I have no doubt the distinguished judge who probably prepared this bill wanted to fix the days in this way for the holding of court, in order to fix definitely the length of time between holding court at different places, a very logical and plausible reason; but which will inevitably lead to a good deal of trouble and confusion sooner or later. A lawyer out there will need to have somebody travel around with him with an almanac to advise him, so that he may know where he is at. We could not do it here. I have no doubt that the members of the legal fraternity in Iowa are exceptionally bright; yet I question the desirability of commencing the scheme of providing that you shall hold court on the forty-fourth Tuesday after the twenty-ninth Tuesday of a certain year. It would be just as feasible as this, and would be more definite in the long run, because then you could fix the number of days absolutely between holding court at one place and another. Of course, I know the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER], who introduced this bill, would not himself have proposed such a plan, and that he has undoubtedly followed the desire of the bench and bar out there, which I take it means some one who got up the scheme, one which will no doubt work very well. But I hope to goodness that other Members of Congress who bring in bills to amend these various sections of the Judicial Code for holding court will not follow this plan, which seems to me to be objectionable.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] speaks very truly when he says that while it may bother the Members of Congress, it will not bother the lawyers of Iowa to determine the times of holding court out there. In fact, this schedule was worked out, not by the judge of this district alone, but by the members of the bar. In the past a difficulty has occurred because of the fact that originally there were three divisions in the southern district of Iowa. Subsequently there were three other divisions added, so that now there are six divisions and six places in the southern district of Iowa where a United States district court is held. In these subsequent creations of divisions the terms of court were fixed by the act which created the division. Those sometimes overlapped. It was found that in some of these divisions not more than a week of court could be held. It was also found, in working out this schedule between the district judge and the members of the bar—and they all cooperated in it—that this was the only way in which it could be arranged so that in every one of these divisions a term of court could be held that should be at least two weeks long, and so this schedule was worked out. It has the approval of the judge. It has the unanimous approval of the bar, and is desired by all of them. There is no particular difficulty with regard to the times of holding court, because every year, as members of the bar know, the schedule for that particular year is made out for the year, giving definitely the dates for that particular year when each term of court is to commence. So that the difficulty which the gentleman finds inaccurately determining from this language—which I confess is new and novel and seems somewhat strange—when the terms will be held will be entirely obviated.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. NORTON. Has it occurred to the gentleman that possibly if not probably there are some people in Iowa other than lawyers who may want to know when the terms of court are to be held out there? And does the gentleman think that this language is subject to the criticism that is made of lawyers, that they usually try to employ language in the statutes that requires a lawyer to interpret?

Mr. TOWNER. I think perhaps the gentleman's observation might be true if it were not for the statement which I think he did not hear, in which I said that the terms of court were published every year, giving definitely the dates for the commencement of each term.

Mr. NORTON. Sometimes there are others than lawyers who read the statutes, and they might get confused about this.

Mr. DILLON. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. TOWNER. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. DILLON. What is the necessity of these words, appearing upon lines 8 and 9 of page 1, "the 1st day of July, 1910"? Why should not those words be stricken out? Why are they material to this bill?

Mr. TOWNER. I will say to the gentleman that in amending this statute it was thought better to reenact the words of the entire section of the Judicial Code, with such changes as are made by the proposed amendment. The only amendment proposed in this case is to fix the times of holding court in the southern district of Iowa. The rest of the section is just exactly as it is in the Judicial Code; and while, perhaps, there is no necessity for keeping those words, there is also no necessity for striking them out.

Mr. DILLON. They are certainly superfluous and immaterial. It seems to me they ought to be stricken out. This same phraseology appears in lines 4, 7, and 12.

Mr. TOWNER. The reason which I have stated is the only one I can suggest to the gentleman.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I call the attention of the gentleman to the language in line 5, page 4—

For the southern division at Creston on the fourth Tuesday after the fourth Tuesday in February and the third Tuesday in September.

Does that mean after the fourth Tuesday of September? Should it not be on the third Tuesday in September?

Mr. TOWNER. Where is the language the gentleman is speaking of?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. On page 4, line 5, after the semicolon, it says—

For the southern division at Creston on the fourth Tuesday after the fourth Tuesday in February and the third Tuesday in September.

The gentleman will notice that the language in line 11, just below, is—on the second Tuesday after the fourth Tuesday in February and the fourth Tuesday after the third Tuesday in September.

Ought not the word "on" to be inserted in line 7, so that it would read "on the third Tuesday in September"?

Mr. TOWNER. No; I think not; for the reason that it is quite clear that one term is to be held on the fourth Tuesday after the fourth Tuesday in February, while the other is to be held on the third Tuesday in September.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I think it would be almost impossible for a client to go to a lawyer and tell when the term of court is to be held; the lawyer would have to take the statutes and hunt it up.

Mr. TOWNER. That is not the case, because every year the terms of court for that year are published by order of the court. No one, not even members of the bar, go to the statutes to find out when a term of court is to be held.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. I will.

Mr. SLOAN. Is it a fact that the bar credited with the authorship of this bill arranged a schedule of fees, and in that schedule is a certain amount for advice to clients when courts are to be held? [Laughter.]

Mr. TOWNER. I will say to the gentleman from Nebraska that his doubts are entirely justified from his standpoint, being a distinguished member of the bar from Nebraska. Such a thing would never be hinted at by a member of the bar from Iowa.

Mr. SLOAN. I will say to the gentleman that the bar of Nebraska was never guilty of proposing any such bill as this.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

INCREASE OF MIDSHIPMEN AT UNITED STATES NAVAL ACADEMY.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 9224) providing for an increase in the number of midshipmen at the United States Naval Academy.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter there shall be allowed at the United States Naval Academy 3 midshipmen for each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress, 1 for Porto Rico, 2 for the District of Columbia, 10 appointed each year at large, and 15 appointed annually from enlisted men of the Navy as now authorized by law.

SEC. 2. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as I am in favor of this measure, I presume I can not demand a second.

Mr. MANN rose.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Illinois against the bill?

Mr. MANN. I shall vote for it, but there are some parts that I would like changed.

The SPEAKER. Is there any gentleman opposed to the bill who wants to demand a second? If not, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. BUTLER. I demand a second.

Mr. PADGETT. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The House divided, and the tellers reported that there were 128 in the affirmative and none in the negative.

So a second was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] has 20 minutes and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] has 20 minutes.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I shall use but a minute or two on this matter. This bill simply provides that each Senator and each Representative shall have three appointees at Annapolis instead of two, under existing law. It does not change the law in any other respect. It becomes operative as soon as it becomes a law, and if passed in time, nominations can be made for the spring examinations which are to be had in April.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does it not change the law in this particular, that under the existing law it grants the appointment of two cadets to the academy, and that provision of the law expires on a limitation?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; in 1919.

Mr. STAFFORD. Whereas this makes it permanent for all time.

Mr. PADGETT. That is true.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. Is the chairman of the committee able to state how much it costs to put a young man through the Naval Academy at Annapolis?

Mr. PADGETT. That is estimated in various ways. It has been estimated that it costs from $12,000 to $15,000 or $20,000, depending on whether you count the interest or not.

Mr. BORLAND. Take the overhead charges, the operation of the academy, the pay of the cadets, and how much does it cost?

Mr. PADGETT. That is not a great deal; the appropriations for the academy annually are only $400,00 or $500,000. But you must notice that officers are detailed for duty there, and they are paid out of the pay for officers and not out of the academy appropriations.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman's estimate is about $12,000, exclusive of interest?

Mr. PADGETT. No; it would not be that much exclusive of interest and officers' charges.

Mr. BORLAND. Counting the officers' charges and exclusive of interest, it would be $12,000 or $15,000?

Mr. PADGETT. It might be around $12,000. I have not figured it out, but I think it is much less.

Mr. BORLAND. Is not that a pretty large sum to educate an officer?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir; I think not, for the character of the education that they get there.

Mr. BORLAND. Does not the gentleman think that on an average $5,000 is enough to educate a boy?

Mr. PADGETT. The estimates that I have stated were made on a basis of an investment at the academy of $12,000,000. The total appropriation for the Naval Academy last year was $498,650, exclusive of pay of officers and pay of midshipmen.

Mr. BORLAND. And that is divided into about 900 cadets?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. Meaning about $5,000 a year a cadet?

Mr. PADGETT. Not so much as that, but that is for the maintenance of the property and the upkeep and the repairs and other expenses.

Mr. BORLAND. Oh, of course that would have to be figured in.

Mr. PADGETT. And all of those items.

Mr. BORLAND. And that does not figure the amount paid to instructors who are carried on the regular Navy pay roll?

Mr. PADGETT. Not the officers. It cares for the civilian instructors.

Mr. BORLAND. Is it not possible to have a naval academy and a military academy at which a man can be well educated at an approximate of $1,200 or $1,500 a year?

Mr. PADGETT. I think not.

Mr. BORLAND. A great many young men are educated for less than that.

Mr. PADGETT. That is true; but you do not give them the character of education, the style of education they have there—the equipment and the various kinds of work, electricity, mechanics, the academic education, the special training, the drills, everything that relates to the equipment of an officer to handle the greatest mechanism that the world ever saw, which is a modern battleship.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me——

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I have promised so much of my time that I must ask the gentleman to hurry on.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the price of educating these officers ought to be materially reduced, and I hope the gentleman's committee will be able to do something along that line.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. I want to know if the gentleman knows the maximum capacity of the Naval Academy for the reception of students?

Mr. PADGETT. The statement of the Secretary and Supt. Eberly, before our committee, was that they could conveniently care for 1,200.

Mr. HOWARD. And the very reason that the per capita cost of young men at Annapolis is so high is the fact that that plant is not run at its full capacity.

Mr. PADGETT. Of course; the more you have to divide into the total cost the more you would reduce the per capita cost.

Mr. HOWARD. It would reduce the per capita cost of those young men's education.

Mr. PADGETT. Certainly.

Mr. HOWARD. That is all.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK]. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, it so happened that on the 27th day of July last I delivered the liberty-bell speech at the Panama Exposition at San Francisco, and in that speech I touched briefly on this question of preparedness, which is so agitating the public mind. Among other things, I stated that if we ever have another war, which I do not believe we will have if we attend to our own business, as we have forced every war that we ever did have, what we will need more than anything else will be officers. We can get all of the volunteers we want in 30 days. If the fact could be ascertained, I have no sort of doubt that at least 25,000 men, the very flower of the country, died the first year of the Civil War, not by bullets but by disease, which deaths were absolutely unnecessary, because while the officers were good men in a general way, yet they did not know anything about sanitation or how to take care of themselves or to show the men how to take care of themselves. I announced in that speech and, I suppose, in something like 50 lectures throughout the land, that I intended to introduce a bill to double the number of cadets at Annapolis and another bill to double the number of cadets at West Point. Brother PADGETT was a little quicker on the trigger than I and introduced this bill; but there is no jealousy on that account. I am going to introduce one to double the number of cadets at West Point. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, even though we never have another war, the money expended on educating these cadets is not thrown away. [Applause.] Within a limited curriculum, because that is what the curricula at these two institutions are, they get as fine an education as any set of men on the face of the earth. Of course it is not a university education, but it is a valuable, practical education.

I also suggested in that speech at San Francisco that in addition to doubling the number of these cadets, if I had the ingenuity, or if I could find anyone else who had the ingenuity, if I could not do it myself, I would draft a law to the effect that outside of these cadets appointed by the President, by the Senators, and the Representatives, any boy in the United States who had the qualifications, mental, moral, physical, and educational, should be permitted to go to these institutions and get an education at exact cost. [Applause.] I am inclined to think that that would have a tendency to democratize, if you want to use that word, or popularize those institutions. There is abundance of space at Annapolis for this increased number. I was talking to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY], the able chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, the other day about the matter in respect to West Point. He does not think there is room over there for very many more. In calculating the cost, of course, if you figure in the interest charge on the plant, it runs up pretty high, but the plant is there, and it is not going to be torn down.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Certainly.

Mr. QUIN. I want to say to the gentleman that Gen. Scott, the Chief of Staff, stated before our committee, in his statement the day before yesterday that they could double up the capacity at West Point Military Academy without any cost beyond about $40,000 a year. He stated it might annoy some of them to have so many.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. They can afford to be crowded to get a good education. Mr. Speaker, if you take 12 men of the same age, substantially, and the same size, substantially, dress them all precisely alike and start them down Pennsylvania Avenue, 11 of them civilians and 1 of them a West Pointer, a man who knows anything can pick out the West Pointer by the graceful way in which he walks. [Applause.]

There is another thing. I am not in favor of bankrupting the United States about this business. I am going to make a whole speech here some day before very long and round up the whole situation. [Applause.] But I am in favor of doing those things first which do not cost much.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri may proceed without it being taken out of the time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri may proceed without it being taken out of the time under the rule. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I thank the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the House. Now, if those two bills do pass, and this one is going to pass, and I am rather inclined to think, if the statement of my friend from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN] is correct, the one as to the West Point cadets will pass, then I am in favor of making it obligatory, not optional, with the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Navy, if need be, to detail one of these officers, if we have a surplus, to any school, college, or university that will furnish a minimum of 200 boys who will volunteer to drill. [Applause.] And there is another thing it seems to me might be worked out; I do not know how to do it myself, but these military gentlemen can. There ought to be a standard fixed by the War Department for an articulation of the military schools of this country with West Point. [Applause.] Of course that would take the best ones and would soon drive the others into becoming among the best, and the War Department should make a roll of a certain number of the top students from each one of those military schools to be kept here in the War Department with a guaranty that if we had a necessity for officers in this country those men should have a commission, before taking Tom, Dick, and Harry from over the country elected by the men because they are popular men or good stump speakers. [Applause.]

There is one other thing I would do if I knew how. I am not certain whether it is feasible or not. I have been investigating it somewhat, and some say it is not and some say it is, but the trouble about this whole business seems to be that no two men agree about anything, and it puzzles me constantly. I will read what one general says, and I think he is right. I will read what another one says, and it is precisely opposite to that, and the same way about these admirals. I am a good deal in the fix of the old justice down in Texas, who said he would rather decide a case when he had only heard one side of it. [Laughter and applause.] But this other thing I was about to suggest. I thought if you cut down the term of enlistment from four years to two years or one year that you would send an annual stream of 100,000 drilled men back into the body of the people [applause], and men of that training ought to be fit to be lieutenants or captains. There is another thing. The only thing that prevents one-year enlistment generally in this country, as I understand it, is the fact that when we send soldiers to the Philippines—which, if we adopt the Senate proposition, will only be for four years more, thank the Lord [applause]—that when we send soldiers over there they go for two years; that we can not afford to ship them backward and forward, but unless somebody could differentiate the standing Army into two classes, of course the one-year business would not work. Another thing is, I would have skeleton regiments; they are somewhat that way now——

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Very much so.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No; not very much so, as I understand, they are recruited up to 60 per cent of their strength. I would have skeleton regiments, a good many more than now, with a full complement of officers. I like to read books of reminiscences, as I think they constitute the most entertaining reading in the world, and that you get really more history out of them, too. So during some of these cut sales of books down here my son bought me two very interesting books of reminiscences, one by Gen. Basil W. Duke, the second in the command of Gen. John H. Morgan's cavalry, and the other one, Senator Thomas Collier Platt's Reminiscences on an entirely different subject. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER. First in command.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. He was first in command in New York. Well, I was exceedingly interested in Duke's book because he was writing about many scenes and hundreds of men I knew, one company of his regiment having been raised in the neighborhood where I was working as a chunk of a boy. He goes more extensively into the race between Buell and Bragg from northern Georgia to Louisville than any other part of the book. They both started about the same time from northern Georgia, both of them headed for Louisville, and Duke's contention is—there is no use going into it except to state it—that if Bragg had done what he might have done he would have turned Kentucky and Tennessee both over to the Confederacy for good, and if that had happened it would have been independent to-day. Now, here is what he says. When they got to the neighborhood of Moundsville, Bragg had about 5,000 more soldiers than Buell had, and Bragg could have intervened and forced him to fight at Mumfordsville and defeated him and taken both of those States; but for some reason Bragg deflected from the line to Louisville. Then, he said, if Bragg had had all his army at Perryville—which was one of the bloodiest battles of the war; he only had half of his men there—he would have defeated Buell, and thereby have captured and held both Kentucky and Tennessee.

At Mumfordsville he would have had about 5,000 more men than Buell. At Perryville, if both had had all their armies there, all of them, Buel would have had 5,000 or 6,000 or 7,000 more than Bragg had. Here is the nub of the whole business, so far as this reminiscence is concerned. He said that Bragg's army would have won at Perryville if he had had the others there, nothwithstanding that Buell was 5,000 men numerically stronger, because Buell had picked out 20,000 greenhorns at Louisville, who were organized into greenhorn regiments, as green as a gourd, while Bragg had picked up about 7,000 Kentuckians, all greenhorns, on that route; he distributed them in little bunches among these seasoned troops, and he said that greenhorns located in that way in a seasoned regiment would learn what was to be learned by privates in the art of war in one-fourth of the time they would if they were organized into regiments as greenhorns.

Now, gentlemen, all of these things that I have mentioned can be done, every one of them, at the minimum of cost with the maximum of results. They are good things to do within themselves, and if we are going to prepare—and that is a question I am going into very shortly, some day, all about it, so far as I am concerned—if we are going to do it at all, here is an easy way of accomplishing a large part of what it is desired to accomplish.

I hope this bill will pass without a dissenting voice. [Applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I demanded a second, so that an opportunity might be given to anyone who wishes to speak on the proposition. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know why there could not be more than 10 men appointed at large. I would like to know why the President should not be allowed to appoint more than 10 for examination.

Mr. BUTLER. That is more than he used to have. He ought to have, perhaps, more, and perhaps he will have more.

Mr. PLATT. That is the present law, I know, but that gives the boy who does not get a congressional appointment a chance for appointment.

Mr. BUTLER. I am not going to detain the House but a minute, but let me answer the gentleman's question. The very subject about which you inquire we inquired about this morning, within an hour before we came into the House. Some method must be worked out, some plan, and in the near future, by which these academies can be filled and kept filled with young men. One of the plans is in your mind, and that is to permit the President to make the nomination. I had it in my mind that the regulation that is now in the department, authorized by an act of Congress, should be changed, and where these vacancies were not filled and kept filled the civil-service people might examine young men, irrespective of the districts, all over the United States, and the President appoint them after competition. However, that is a question that we will consider, and I hope we will have some plan to recommend to the House before very long.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman informed as to the correctness of the newspaper report that 200 of the boys over in Annapolis have been, or would be, plucked for failure to pass the mental examination?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; I have some information. I do not think it is as direct information as the chairman has. I have it from the chairman of the committee, but he will give it to the gentleman direct.

Mr. PADGETT. I have a letter from the Secretary, dated to-day, in which he states that the total number of young men found unsatisfactory in one or more studies was 223. Upon reconsideration of the matter and considering all of their work and the work they had done through the year the academic board has reduced that number to 82, so that the number recommended for dropping is 82.

Mr. MANN. That is about 10 per cent.

Mr. PADGETT. A little under 10 per cent. There are about 890 in the academy.

Mr. MANN. Are there that many there now?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MANN. It is about 10 per cent.

Mr. PADGETT. About 9 per cent.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I learned from another source that they will expect to reduce that number to about 40.

Mr. MANN. How often do these examinations take place?

Mr. PADGETT. The Secretary has not acted. He says this report has just been received and has not yet been acted upon, but that it will receive the department's careful consideration.

Mr. MANN. That is about 10 per cent. How often do these examinations take place?

Mr. PADGETT. Well, sir, they have daily recitations, and the young man is marked. At the end of the week he gets from those marks a weekly mark, and then at the end of the month he gets his monthly mark of the recitations, and then he has at the end of these four months, which is called the semiannual examinations, his marks, and they are all put together and the average of those examinations taken.

Mr. MANN. This plucking takes place once, twice, three, or four times a year, or what?

Mr. PADGETT. Twice a year.

Mr. MANN. Ten per cent at one time would be about 15 to 20 per cent a year. It seems to me they need reforming over at Annapolis more in the way of the professors than they do in the way of the students. [Applause.]

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN]?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if in increasing the number of midshipmen it is their intention to relax the conditions on entering the academy? We read letters that are sent to us by the preparatory or finishing schools boasting of the number they prepare. It seems to me the technical preparation required of these young men for entrance is altogether too severe.

Mr. PADGETT. I will state to the gentleman that when the present Secretary of the Navy became Secretary he sent out letters to many hundreds of the preparatory schools throughout the country——

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. And the high schools——

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; and high schools, and got from them statements as to their standards of examination, and he based his examinations upon the aggregate of the results of those reports that came from all parts of the country from these many, many high schools and preparatory schools. Now, the passing mark is 62½. That is not a high passing mark—62½ out of a possible 100. That is not a high mark. Now, then, it was disclosed that upon the average about two-thirds of the class graduates. Upon our investigation we are informed that that is about the average in the universities and the colleges.

Mr. SLOAN. What is the objection to the conditions being relaxed for the Annapolis Academy from what they are in the West Point Academy, where they take the grades, as granted, I understand, from the leading high schools and academies of the country without examination, upon certificates?

Mr. PADGETT. There are certain schools whose work and study the West Point Academy officials have examined, and they take their certificates, and admit the young men upon those certificates.

Mr. SLOAN. Yes.

Mr. PADGETT. But that does not have anything to do with the standards of the West Point school or their examinations afterwards. The young man has to make a grade and maintain the position.

Mr. SLOAN. I understand that. What is the objection to the system of taking the certification of those accredited schools at Annapolis as they do at West Point? I think it is a very proper method.

Mr. PADGETT. I suppose that might be done, but the examinations, as I said, are based upon the average of the schools, and the passing mark is 62½. It is not a severe examination.

Mr. SLOAN. Does not the suggestion I make appeal to the chairman of the committee, who doubtless has something to do and some influence with the Naval Academy authorities?

Mr. PADGETT. I think in some cases it might be well to do it, but that addresses itself to the academic board.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman answer me a question?

Mr. PADGETT. I am speaking in the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. BUTLER. I yield, Mr. Speaker, to the gentleman from Tennessee, who is best equipped to answer these questions.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The gentleman says that if a young man passes, 62½ is the standard?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. That is the standard in passing and in graduation and all.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. By that does the gentleman mean he passes on the general average of 62½, or is he plucked if he falls below 62½ on any one subject?

Mr. PADGETT. The regulations read that if he is unsatisfactory in a study—not the general average—he may be dropped.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. For instance, he may pass at 100 in all the rest, but may have only 62½ in something in particular. Would that pluck him?

Mr. PADGETT. As a matter of fact, in practice, I am informed they never dismiss a young man if he is slightly under in one study. It has got to be a good deal more than that. We have an illustration of that right here. There were 223 young men that were unsatisfactory in one or more of the studies in one of these recent examinations. There were 223 that were unsatisfactory in one or more of their studies. The academic board, upon considering their work and their course in the academy, has reduced that number to 82, and the number recommended for dismissal is 82. As I understand, 40 of those are young men who have just entered.

Mr. BUTLER. That is very clear.

Mr. PADGETT. Forty-two of them are young men who have been in one or more years, and the superintendent said to me to-day that the reason those 82 were recommended for dismissal was because the passing of judgment upon their whole work and their service while connected with the academy satisfied them that they would not be valuable men to continue in the academy.

Now, I also asked the superintendent this question. I said, "Suppose those young men were kept on for the remainder of this academic year and the question was determined at the final examination?" "Well," he said, "if they then go out, the Members of Congress will be deprived for a whole year of the opportunity of making another appointment, because in June all of the examinations have been held. They enter the 1st of July, and there will be no opportunity to hold an examination for the Senators and Representatives to supply those vacancies; but if they go out now, and Members of Congress wish to appoint them, they can be reappointed and enter the academy again in the fourth class, the new-beginning class in July, without another examination, because having once been examined for entrance that examination is credited and accepted; so that these men, if Members and Senators desire to reappoint them, can be reappointed and enter the 1st of July."

Mr. DOWELL and Mr. WINGO rose.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL].

Mr. DOWELL. Under the rule there are two examinations in one year, the last examination being in April?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; and one in February.

Mr. DOWELL. If the vacancy is not filled in April, there is a vacancy, as I understand it, during the entire year; is that true?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Is there any reason why there should not be other examinations, in order to admit young men to fill these vacancies?

Mr. PADGETT. Unless the school is filled, I presume the Secretary would hold an examination later, as was done once before, when so many young men failed and there were vacancies, and they held an examination in June. Unless the school is filled up, the Secretary could have an examination in June.

Mr. DOWELL. They are not usually called to fill vacancies?

Mr. PADGETT. No; because they have 896 young men there now.

Mr. BUTLER. They are held to prevent vacancies.

Mr. GARDNER and Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania rose.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. GARDNER. In case this bill passes, how soon does the chairman expect that these new midshipmen who are appointed in consequence of the passage of this bill will enter the academy?

Mr. PADGETT. In July, the beginning of the next session.

Mr. GARDNER. How many of them does he expect will go in?

Mr. PADGETT. Based upon the averages of past years, about 300.

Mr. GARDNER. He thinks that 300 extra ones will qualify—will go in in July.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; making a total complement of something like 1,200.

Mr. GARDNER. They will graduate in July, 1920?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; four years later.

Mr. GARDNER. How many of those 300 on an average will graduate?

Mr. PADGETT. Admiral Blue, Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, told us that taking the averages for a number of years past, about two-thirds of the class that entered graduated.

Mr. GARDNER. Therefore, we may expect to have 200 additional officers in 1920 in consequence of the passage of this law. Am I correct?

Mr. PADGETT. On the basis of the averages of the past.

Mr. GARDNER. Am I correct also in saying that in the report of the General Board of the Navy they called for twenty-seven hundred line officers, not including flag officers, which means an increase of 800 or thereabouts over the present establishment for the fiscal year 1917? Is that a correct statement?

Mr. PADGETT. I believe about that number, sir. I do not recall the exact number.

Mr. GARDNER. And is it safe to say that the Navy Department takes the ground that we need only about 650 more in the year 1919? Is that correct?

Mr. PADGETT. I believe those are the correct figures.

Mr. GARDNER. If by the lowest estimate we need about 650 more, and you get 200 out of this new legislation, where are you going to get the others?

Mr. PADGETT. We are getting them, double that number, out of the present equipment of the academy.

Mr. GARDNER. How many enlisted men do you expect you will promote and how many retired officers do you expect you will bring back into the service in that period?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know how many retired officers will be brought back. If an emergency should arise, every retired officer would be subject to active duty under the law.

Mr. BUTLER. They are all subject to active duty, then?

Mr. GARDNER. But I have not been able to make up these figures so that they fit in my own mind. I see that there is a great allowance made in your report for an increase in the officers, but meanwhile is there not a great loss going on in the actual officers at the present time?

Mr. PADGETT. But these figures set out in the report are the net increases, allowing so much for the deductions each year from the officers and then the additions under the present equipment of the academy. There are calculated to be so many net additions each year.

Mr. GARDNER. But am I not correct in saying that in making out your figures you lump together the promotions from warrant officers and the graduations from the academy?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not so understand.

Mr. GARDNER. What I want to get at is how many warrant officers they expect to promote?

Mr. PADGETT. There are some few warrant officers, but not a great many. The law provides for those.

Mr. BUTLER. Three or four every year.

Mr. PADGETT. I think last year there were about six who went from the ranks into the commissioned grades.

Mr. BUTLER. Half a dozen.

Mr. PADGETT. There is opportunity for them to go, if they qualify themselves.

Mr. GARDNER. To get it clear in my own mind, assuming that the estimate of the Secretary of the Navy is correct—that is, assuming that the general board have exaggerated the number required—is the chairman himself satisfied that by the passage of this bill we shall be supplied with sufficient officers to meet the minimum requirements for war strength asked for by the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. PADGETT. No; I do not think this would meet war conditions. The gentleman will notice that that calculation sets out the requirements for peace and war complements.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee a question.

Mr. PADGETT. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. Is the gentleman speaking in his time or in mine?

Mr. PADGETT. I am speaking in the gentleman's time.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman is doing better than I could do, but I wish he would let me have a minute or two. [Laughter.]

Mr. PADGETT. Certainly. I have only been trying to answer the questions that have been asked me.

Mr. BUTLER. There is no one more generous than the chairman, but I should like to have a minute or two of my time.

Mr. PADGETT. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, let gentlemen understand that when they vote on this measure they are in nowise committing themselves to any sort of a military program. I asked the question distinctly, and I got from the Secretary of the Navy an admission that these officers will be needed for the ships which Congress has authorized. Therefore I cheerfully vote to increase this class at Annapolis. If the program should be enlarged, it is my judgment that the American people will need another Naval Academy, because the accommodations we have there now will be largely absorbed by the appointments made within the next three or four years.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does the law permanently provide now for two cadets at Annapolis?

Mr. BUTLER. Let me understand the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. We passed a law some time ago providing for two cadets, and we recently extended the time two years. This proposes to make the appointment of three cadets permanently. Is that on account of the present war? Only last Congress we extended the appointment of two for a very short period of time. We knew then what the needs of the Navy would be, as we know now, which may not be very definite.

Mr. TILSON. I wish to ask the gentleman if there is any explanation why we do not get more officers from the ranks, and why it is not possible to get more admissions to Annapolis from the ranks.

Mr. BUTLER. If I answered that it would take more time than I have at my disposal. They can not pass this examination. It is a hard, difficult examination, and it is too much to expect of them. I am not criticizing the instructors nor the examinations. I would not vote to put anybody in command of a battleship that was not well educated in seamanship, gunnery, and navigation. Now, I would like to answer the gentleman from Illinois. The purpose of this law is to make for all time to come the appointment of three midshipmen at the academy for each congressional district. However, it will require all of this number of midshipmen to officer the ships that will have been built or which I hope we will have built—I can not promise to have them built—in 1919. I voted for the ships already authorized. I stood for them all, and therefore I am going to vote to put officers on the ships, because I am of the opinion that ships without men are valueless.

Mr. TILSON. Then I understand the gentleman to say that these officers have to pass an examination of such high requirements, to which he does not object, of course, that it is impossible for the men from the ranks, or the ordinary man, to pass.

Mr. BUTLER. I am pleased to state that I was one of the first men to advocate and encourage the appointment of enlisted men. Of course, I have nothing to do with their mental qualifications or prescribing the examinations. I wish some way could be worked out by which worthy enlisted men could be promoted, but the examination given to them is the same as that given to the young men who are appointed to the academy.

Mr. TILSON. It ought to be, of course.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM].

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I am heartily in favor of the passage of this bill providing for an increase in the number of midshipmen at the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis.

The estimated number of line officers required in time of peace by July 1, 1919, to keep in full commission and in reserve the ships of the Navy now built, building, and authorized, and to care for shore stations	2,538
Line officers available Jan. 1, 1916	1,978
Additional required by July 1, 1919 (peace complements)	560
Estimated number required to commission all of above (war complements)	3,528
Line officers available Jan. 1, 1916	1,978
Additional required by July 1, 1919 (war complements)	1,550
Required by July 1, 1921, for ships under new building program	873
Total required by July 1, 1921 (peace complements)	3,411
Total required by July 1, 1921 (war complements)	4,401
Total now in service	1,978
Additional required by July 1, 1921 (peace complements)	1,433
Additional required by July 1, 1921 (war complements)	2,423
Estimated increase by graduates of the Naval Academy and commissioning warrant officers to July 1, 1919	528
Same to July 1, 1921	792

We have heard a great deal of late about the increase of the Navy and the increase of the Army. Much has been said about building more battleships and the speeding up of work on those already under construction.

I am in favor of preparedness in both branches of our defense, but there is little use to talk about the construction of more battleships or more cruisers and submarines and all those ships which go to make up a better and greater Navy unless we provide the men to man them after they are constructed.

The Naval Academy at Annapolis has been doing wonderful work in the education and training of officers for the Navy. It has accomplished splendid results. It is a college highly equipped with magnificent buildings, every requisite, and a site unsurpassed by any in this country.

The men go from this institution not alone as line officers competent of doing good work in the Navy, but as men well educated in the various branches of knowledge, which makes them greater, better, and more efficient citizens—men competent to operate the most complicated construction and mechanism the world has ever known—the modern battleship or cruiser. The country is enriched by the graduation from this school in every way.

This bill contemplates an increase of appointments from 1,169 to 1,704, but in actual attendance it would be an increase of from 900 to 1,200.

I find upon examination of the report that in order to place in full commission ships already built, building, and authorized, we must obtain by July 1, 1919, 1,022 line officers; and if the new building program is adopted, 1,451 more line officers than allowed by existing law will be needed by July, 1921. In other words, our shortage under present law would be as follows:

By July 1, 1919 (peace complements)	32
By July 1, 1919 (war complements)	1,022
By July 1, 1921 (peace complements)	461
By July 1, 1921 (war complements)	1,451

There is no other source to obtain a supply of line officers than through the graduates of the Naval Academy and the promotions from the enlisted force. These promotions from enlisted force amount to only 12 annually, and even that full number the Navy Department has not been successful in obtaining from the enlisted men.

We can readily see, therefore, that if we would properly man the ships now built, building, and authorized a much larger number of men must be prepared at the Naval Academy. You can educate soldiers in the various schools and colleges of this country and in all localities, but you can not educate line officers for the Navy at any place other than the Naval Academy at Annapolis—there and there alone can they receive naval instruction.

There is abundant provision at the Naval Academy to take care of all the midshipmen which this bill would allow. It may be that they would have to be given about the same space for living quarters as that allowed in other colleges, but the accommodations would be ample and sufficient. Bancroft Hall at the academy can accommodate 976 students easily and can readily be arranged to accommodate 1,200, which this bill would no doubt furnish. When we realize, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that the thing essential in the construction of a larger and more adequate Navy is the men to man the ships, we can see the importance of this bill. I only wish that the bill went further and that the accommodations at the college were sufficient that a larger number of men could be educated, so that when the Navy is even further increased, as it no doubt will be, we might have sufficient line officers to man the entire equipment.

The great need of the country is officers not only for the Navy but officers for the Army. The mortality of officers in the European war has been almost twice as great as that of the private soldier, and certainly if there is one responsibility resting upon Congress and the administration, it is to provide a sufficent number of these men to officer our ships when the time arrives that we shall need them. I therefore hope, Mr. Speaker, that the bill will pass and that it may be put speedily into force. It is of imperative necessity if we would have a Navy ready for an emergency, if we would have one ready and prepared to meet the requirements of a country with a great and growing population of a hundred million souls. The National Government was delegated the duty of providing the national defense, and it up to Congress to meet its requirements in the proper manner and spirit.

Mr. PADGETT. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CONNELLY].

Mr. CONNELLY. Mr. Speaker, I am one of those who voted to favorably report this bill out of the committee, and hope to see it pass. I will not enthuse over the great preparedness program that will be brought into this House, and I reserve the right to meet that emergency when it comes. Sufficient to say at this time that there appears to be a chance here to increase the attendance at the Naval Academy at Annapolis, with what appears to me to be a very reasonable additional expense, and I want to use our national schools to their capacity for the training of our young men who seek to enter them and prepare themselves to be of use to the country should the emergency come when their services are desired. Mr. Speaker, I have dared to indulge in the hope that it will be some time before the ultra military element in the United States will be advocating that in order to be absolutely secure that a battleship shall be in readiness for the command of every boy who goes through Annapolis at the moment that he is graduated.

I know some very good men in this House, men whom I personally respect very much, but whose opinions on preparedness is much below par with me, whose ideas on the matter of an adequate Navy are done very little injustice when I suggest that they would go this far. However, I do not think that we can afford to withhold from our young men the fine educational advantage that the school at Annapolis gives and I want to train the young men in such a way that our Navy may always be efficiently and effectively handled. True, Mr. Speaker, there have been some increases of recent years that would appear to be quite adequate. It has only been a few years since the number of boys that were appointed to Annapolis were doubled, then the membership of this House was increased very materially and still we are told that we have not enough. While I am discussing the matter, however, Mr. Speaker, I want to speak about the recent announcement that comes to us through the press that there is soon to be 220 young men, some of whom have spent one year, some two years, and some who have even pursued their studies three years at the Naval Academy who are now soon to be sent back to their homes because they can not meet the test and come up to the standards that the school has set. I am sure that all want to see the standards of this school kept high, but I am also of the opinion that a course there might easily be made so impractical and so technical that but few would be able to complete it, and should they be able to finally make a passing grade it would be at the danger of impairment of health. I doubt the practical value of a school where the average young man with good health and good mind and a fair degree of industry and intelligence and application, finds that he can not make the grades or meet the requirements. What I would have is a school that has such a course that the average American boy, raised in the average American home, and endowed with an average amount of good sense can meet the requirements.

If we, at our schools of this character, are graduating only freaks and phenomena, then I am in favor of some revision of the curriculum, for I have never placed much importance on the practical side of this class of people. Another thing I have also observed, Mr. Speaker, and that is this: That these military schools fit boys for the Army and the Navy, but unfit them for about every other usefulness in life. I wish that some way could be found to obviate this. Why is it necessary to take a young fellow who has some ability, some initiative, some independence, and make out of him an automaton who spends the rest of his life strutting around as a fashion plate or a clotheshorse? Why not school him in the military tactics and lengthen the course until something could be learned that would make him of some value in the arts of peace as well as in the arts of war; make him a force to care for himself, instead of becoming a dead weight on the social fabric of a nation and only useful when the curse of war falls? The weakness of our system is that when we educate a boy for the Army or the Navy we so unfit him for any other walk or work in life. The Government finds that it must provide him a job and take care of him the balance of his life.

Mr. Speaker, I would educate him, pay for his schooling, his board, and then when he has accepted this gratis from the Government have him feel that he need not spend the rest of his life in the unproductive life of a soldier or sailor. I would have him accept this training with the understanding that when he has done so he shall go back to the useful vocations of life, ready at any time to be called to the defense of the colors in times when his country needs his services with his training.

Mr. Speaker, I do not care to enter into an extended discussion of the matter of preparedness at this time. That can wait until a later date when the various bills are being discussed that more nearly affect this subject. I want to say, however, that I do not believe that there is in the country any considerable number of men who are for peace at any price. I know, and so do you, that the question of profits to manufacturers of war munitions has played a great part in the agitation that has swept the country, and there are a very considerable class of men who claim to want to prepare for peace when they are in reality wanting to prepare for profits. I want, however, to be fair enough and charitable enough to refuse to believe that such a motive is any considerable factor in forming the opinions of those Members here who will want to go further in the matters than will I. It is always well to be fair in such matters, and it is well for the charges of ulterior motives to be left out of the discussion, for I have lived long enough to observe that men are prone to see in other people the faults that are sometimes unconsciously their own.

I have, I hope, all respect for those who are high up in the Army and the Navy, and I want to exercise that respect. I know, as a rule, that these men are a high class of individuals and that they are patriotic, even if they are at times inclined to be hysterical and impractical. I have indulged in the hope that we could look to these men to keep us serene and unexcited, and have expected them to give us such information that we could pass such practical and needed legislation as would enable us to be very well prepared without launching into the maelstrom of that preparedness which has always led to the very thing that we are wanting to avoid. I find, however, that, no matter how visionary may be the danger depicted by some of the writers who have labored to excite the country, these visionary writers have seldom been unable to have their views sanctioned by men high up in our defense organizations.

If a Bernard Walker tells of some enemies who could devastate our coasts, despoil our cities, lay waste to our country, and levy tribute upon our people, and all the time our people sit supinely by and allow all of this to be done, with scarcely a protest and with practically no resistance, I find that even this story of frenzy and fear finds an indorser in the person of one of our honored and best known admirals, who says that this very foolish and freakish thing that Mr. Walker tells about could very well happen. It is indorsements of such insane vaporings as these that causes a distrust of the opinions of some of those whose counsels would be of much value to us at this time, when the war scare has been heralded to the remotest village and hamlet in all this fair land. I say to you that the greatest impeachment that could be placed on those who have had the building of the Navy in years past is, after all the fabulous sums of money that have been spent on the Navy, that it is now so insufficient and inefficient as those who have had much to do with the spending of the money and directing this preparation declare it to be. So reluctant have some of our men high up in the Navy been to defend the efficiency of the Navy that it has only been after some layman on the Naval Committee, like that grand man, Samuel Witherspoon, whose recent death was a distinct loss to the Nation, had compelled them, with overwhelming evidence as to the efficiency of our Navy, that they have given a grudging indorsement to the facts that he marshaled before them in such an array that they thought too much of their standing as men and officials to deny.

Mr. Speaker, I am agreed with those who say that there should be no politics, no partisanship, no sectionalism in this matter. I have been accused of representing a people who reside far from the coast and who are, because of this fact, less interested in the Nation's defenses than are those who would first feel the impact of the conflict. I deny, sir, such a sentiment exists or that there is any just ground for such base insinuation.

The history of the people of Kansas and the other States of the Central West is such as to leave no room to doubt their bravery, their patriotism, or their loyalty to every section of this great Republic. Kansas sent a greater number of men to the defense of the flag in the days of sixty-one, according to her population, than any State in the Union. Again in 1898, when the call was made to repel the atrocities of Spain from the islands near our shores, the young men of Kansas dropped their working tools, and from the farms and fields and factories and mills and mines there came such a number that thousands had to be refused the chance to go to the front. The loyalty of these people of the great prairies of the West shall not be challenged and that challenge go unheeded here. They are loyal, they are generous, they are fair. They ask you, who would take advantage of this propitious time to rush this Nation off her feet onto the dangerous shoals of militarism, what have you done with the millions that have been given you through the years of the past and what assurance will you give for the future expenditure that you ask for? In the 10 years from 1901 to 1912 these United States spent on her Navy the sum of $1,331,821,032; Germany spent for that same period $354,055,078, and France spent but $789,242,168. In other words, we spent on our Navy nearly $200,000,000 more than both Germany and France, and still the men who had much to do with the spending of these fabulous sums stand idly by and allow the insinuations to go unchallenged that we have no Navy that amounts to anything and that we are a helpless people, waiting as a prize for some other nation to pounce upon and destroy. I deny the statement that we have not a good Navy, and I deny that there is any considerable people who are not willing to make it better; but what I object to is this campaign of calumny and slander, through moving pictures, subsidized press, and frenzied speakers, who alarm our people and give a false hope to those, if any there be, who would come to our shores and challenge our power.

Mr. Speaker, are we to understand that this great program of military preparation is to be used in some conflict that is now immediately pending? It can not be so, for battleships that were authorized a year ago will not be begun building until next fall, and then will not be ready to take their place in our line of defense for more than two years from that time. Certainly the ships that will be authorized at this session of Congress can not reasonably be expected to be of service to us much before the year 1920. If that is so—and I find no material difference of opinion upon this matter—why are the people led to believe that our preparation is for some emergency that is liable to come to us soon? If this Congress would authorize the building of a hundred battleships, by no plan placed before the Naval Committee by the experts of the Navy could one of these ships be ready for service in less than two years. Have those who have gone out and worked the people up to a frenzy by telling of some danger that is now upon us been careful to tell the people these very important facts? If they have, I have been unfortunate in not having been able to find such statements in their speeches.

Mr. Speaker, I know that all patriots hope that the time may never be when war will come to our shores or when the ideals that have come to us as a legacy from the martyrs of the past will ever have to be defended or preserved by the sword or battle line. I am fully convinced that preparation for war does not prevent war. I am rather of the opinion that nations, like individuals, do what they prepare to do. I have read since I was a boy about Germany's building up the greatest army of any nation in the world, and it was to preserve peace. I have heard that England had builded the greatest navy in the world, and it was to insure peace. A glimpse across the waters to these blood-drenched countries, these great nations where fire and sword scatter lives of men like the autumn winds scatter the leaves of the forest, makes me rather believe that other sentiment, that has stood the test of ages and is to-day as unchallenged as it was when the Master spoke it centuries ago. That saying is: "Be not deceived, God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CALLAWAY].

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Speaker, the question of how many officers we need in the Navy or how many we are short is a matter that bobs in and out like a shuttlecock—now you see it and now you do not see it; it is one thing to-day and another thing to-morrow. It varies according to what officers think the the Congress will stand for or the people will back them in demanding.

A year ago Admiral Blue, Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, before the Naval Affairs Committee, stated that the "following shortage in line officers exists at the present time: Required to commission all serviceable vessels, 161; to remain ashore in time of war, 160; total, 321; to be released from gunboats, survey ships, and Fish Commission, 118; net shortage to place all vessels serviceable for war purposes in commission, 203."

Mr. ROBERTS then asked this question: "Are you leaving out any battleships?" Admiral Blue answered, "All the battleships, even the very oldest, are included, as well as all the cruisers, all the destroyers, and submarines." Mr. ROBERTS then asked, "Are your figures based on the number of men required for the ships now actually in commission or the ships that would be commissioned?" Admiral Blue answered, "The ships that can be commissioned, as well as those now in commission." Mr. ROBERTS then asked, "You did not include ships under construction?" Admiral Blue answered, "I also included those that will be built during the next year."

It was at that time 203, according to his statement, for "all the ships that can be commissioned, including those that will be completed during the next year," and yet we are now confronted "during the next year" with this statement from the Secretary of the Navy. He says:

> We require at the present time 2,520 line officers. As we now have 1,978 line officers, we are short 542 for peace basis. This estimate does not include all the ships now building, but only those ships which are near completion and for which we are now assembling the officers and men.

The Naval Board says:

> The total number of line officers should number 2,700.

We have at this time, if the statement of Admiral Blue was true, a shortage of 203. We should have this year about 175 graduates from the Naval Academy. If Admiral Blue's statement was correct a year ago that to man all the ships for the service, built and building, which would be completed within a year, we should now be short only 203 less the number of graduates we have from Annapolis this year. However, if we are to follow Secretary Daniels, we will be short a different number; if we follow the Naval Board, we will still be short a different number, or 722. Now you see it, now you don't see it.

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CALLAWAY. Yes.

Mr. HENSLEY. Does the gentleman recall that last year there were eliminated by the operation of the plucking board a number of the very best and most efficient officers of the Navy?

Mr. CALLAWAY. I do not know that they eliminated the best and most efficient officers of the Navy. However, they had a plucking board which plucked 15 officers a year, provided there was not as many as 40 died or resigned within the year. They seemed to have officers up to that time they wanted to get rid of. Last year the plucking-board provision was repealed, and we also increased the membership of the House of Representatives from 391 to 435, increasing the Annapolis appointees 88. They save the plucked officers, 15, and added at Annapolis 88, because of the increased membership of the House, and continued last year the appointment of 2 which had theretofore been only 1 a year. Yet all of this increase is not sufficient to answer the present requirement. Last year it was 203; this year I do not know where it is, and you do not either. The board says one thing, the Secretary of the Navy says another, and Admiral Blue says they want all they can get.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

[By unanimous consent Mr. CALLAWAY was granted leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee has one minute remaining.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I agreed to yield that to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RAGSDALE].

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Speaker, few, if any, Members on this side of the House have shown more independence than I as to winning the approval or disapproval of the Chief Executive by their votes on the matters considered by a Democratic caucus or the Democratic platform. In all questions affecting the interests of my people on which the platform is silent or on which the party has not caucused I shall determine whether or not they are for the interests of my district, unless it be those matters growing out of our relation to foreign Governments in which the national honor or the national safety is involved. In those matters I am willing to trust our President and our Secretary of State. Mistakes they will make, for their efforts to represent this country will often find opposition from the ablest diplomats of the world and unwise interference from those in power in this country. Because a condition now exists which the President has said demands immediate relief, and because I consider this but one of the steps we should take to give that relief and to put this country on a proper footing to avert war and protect our flag, our Government, and our people in war, I shall support this bill. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 173, noes none. [Applause.]

So, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

RESIGNATIONS FROM COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following resignations from committees:

The Clerk read as follows:

FEBRUARY 7, 1916.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Having been placed upon the Committee for Flood Control, I hereby tender my resignation as a member of Committee on Elections No. 1.

Very truly, yours, JEFF: MCLEMORE.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I shall not object; but that is certainly previous.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is a little premature.

Mr. MANN. The Committee on Flood Control has not been yet elected.

The SPEAKER. In about five minutes from now it will be fixed.

Mr. MANN. I thought the members of this Committee on Flood Control were elected under the rules of the House and not appointed by will in advance.

The SPEAKER. There is no question but what the suggestion of the gentleman is correct.

Mr. CANNON. I would like to ask my colleague just a single question, and that is if he does not think that is as bad as when I tripped the other day and took Thursday for Calendar Wednesday?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair lays before the House another resignation.

The Clerk read as follows:

FEBRUARY 7, 1916.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I hereby resign my membership on the Committee on Enrolled Bills for the reason that I have been appointed on the new Committee on Flood Control.

Yours, very respectfully,

ROBERT CROSSER.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. But, Mr. Speaker, not for the reasons given.

The SPEAKER. No; the reasons are premature.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, Mr. SHOUSE was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Alice Whaley, Sixty-second Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a letter written by myself to the New York American.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The letter is as follows:

FEBRUARY 7, 1916.

EDITOR NEW YORK AMERICAN,
New York City.

SIR: My attention has been called to an alleged poll of Congress on the subject of the eight-hour law on railways, in which I am represented as having expressed myself against this measure. I have never expressed myself with reference to its merits, nor has your correspondent or any other person ever spoken to me on the subject. As a matter of fact, I am on principle in favor of an eight-hour working-day in all occupations, and unless I can be convinced that the application of this policy to railroad employees is practically impossible shall give my support to this measure.

Yours, truly, FREDERICK R. LEHLBACH.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, Tuesday, February 8, 1916, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, February 8, 1916.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, it is not by our merit but by Thy grace that we are preserved in peace and plenty amid the world's great alarm. We have come to know that human wisdom is not sufficient for human life. Our life opens out toward God and eternity, and our chief concern is in the keeping of Thy law. Teach us Thy law, not in its letter that killeth but in its spirit that maketh alive, and in the life that Thou dost impart to us through the law of life may we live and perform our duties this day and always. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Vice President being absent, the President pro tempore took the chair.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. VARDAMAN, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

SIR: The following resolutions were unanimously adopted by the eleventh annual convention of the Kansas division of the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of America:

FLOODS IN THE MISSISSIPPI VALLEY.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, I have a telegram here from the mayor of Hickman, Ky., sent to me yesterday, in regard to the flood situation. The Senate passed a bill last Friday appropriating $100,000 for the relief of the flood sufferers. It seems that an officer of the Army stationed at Memphis has made a report that no necessity exists for such an appropriation.

I desire to have this telegram read to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Such will be the order, unless there is objection. The Chair hears none.

The Secretary read the telegram, as follows:

HICKMAN, KY., February 7, 1916.

Senator OLLIE M. JAMES,
1146 K Street NW., Washington, D. C.:

We have fed 1,500 people to-day; also have clothed those that were in absolute destitute circumstances. The report sent out by Col. Markham, of Memphis, is without foundation. I have inquired and made diligent search for the author, but have been unsuccessful. Therefore it must be a misrepresentation, as Fulton, Union City, Martin, Mayfield, Paducah, and Louisville are all responding to our distress call, and it certainly stands to reason that the sister cities right close to us have investigated the situation and know more about what we need than a man 125 miles away from here that has never proffered assistance.

TOM DILLON, Sr., Mayor.

Mr. ROBINSON subsequently said: Mr. President, I desire permission to have printed in the RECORD a number of telegrams which I have received and one or two which I have sent touching the flood situation in the valleys of the Mississippi and its tributaries.

A few days ago the Senate passed a measure appropriating $100,000 and authorizing the use of Government tents and boats for relief purposes. That measure is still pending at the other end of the Capitol.

I am in receipt of information this morning from the county judge of Chicot County, State of Arkansas, who I know to be a reliable and truthful citizen, stating that at different places—and he names the places—there are hundreds, aggregating in all several thousand people, who are driven from their homes by the flood; that all able-bodied men whose services are needed are at work on the levees; and that there is great suffering and necessity for immediate relief. I hope action will be speedily taken in the other branch of Congress.

I ask that these several telegrams be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 6, 1916.

Hon. LINDLEY M. GARRISON,
Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.:

Am just in receipt of the following telegrams:

"LITTLE ROCK, ARK., February 5, 1916.

"Hon. JOE T. ROBINSON,
"Washington, D. C.:

"Clarendon levee broke to-night. Water over town by morning. Water 4 to 8 feet deep in Arkansas City. Four feet more coming.

"FRED HEISKELL.

"LAKE VILLAGE, ARK., February 5, 1916.

"Senator JOE T. ROBINSON,
"Washington, D. C.:

"Most disastrous flood in history of Chicot County is now on us. The water higher and covers greater area than ever before. Four thousand people hungry, homeless, and destitute, and need immediate aid and sustenance. Several hundred at Gaines Landing to-night shivering on the levee, without food and shelter. Unless Congress makes provision for immediate relief many will perish from cold, hunger, and neglect.

Local authorities and organizations totally unable to cope with the situation. Confer with War Department and secure requisition rations for 4,000 people for two weeks, to be delivered at Vaucluse Landing as quickly as possible. Other requisitions must necessarily follow.

"M. M. Norton, M. D., county health officer; George E. Booth, M. D., county coroner; J. B. Sims, vice president Chicot Bank & Trust Co.; William Yerger, mayor of Lake Village; Sam Epstein, manager; Percy Sanders, manager, Gaines Landing; Wilson Bros., merchants, Luna Landing; W. H. Carpenter, manager; F. O. Anders, manager, Macon Lake; Roy Johnson, planter, Sunnyside; F. H. Dantzler, planter, Red Leaf; Jones & Dunn, mills and timber, Jennie; A. L. Mills, Chicot; Harry E. Cook, county judge."

JOE T. ROBINSON,
United States Senator.

FEBRUARY 6, 1916.

Hon. HARRY COOK,
Lake Village, Ark.:

Replying to telegram signed by yourself and others, War Department insists that it has no authority to permit use of tents, and that no necessity exists for legislation. Notwithstanding the Senate passed bill Friday authorizing same and $100,000 for provisions, Engineer Markham, at Memphis, and Engineer Slattery, Vicksburg, have reported to the department that substantial citizens and representative planters of flooded community are unalterably opposed to providing free rations, and Markham says they are unalterably opposed to permitting use of tents for refugees, and that Government aid will demoralize labor. Markham urges department to oppose legislative relief, and Slattery says that it would materially help situation if all hope of free rations were squelched. Both these engineers insist that adequate relief is being given flood sufferers. Bill held up in House. Inform engineers fully. Insist upon necessary action and reports by them and wire me fully.

JOE T. ROBINSON,
United States Senator.

LAKE VILLAGE, ARK., February 7, 1916.

Senator JOE T. ROBINSON,
Washington, D. C.:

Replying to your telegram of this date, after conferring with the most representative and best-informed citizens of affected areas beg to advise that the following numbers of needy, destitute, and deserving people, rendered homeless by the present unprecedented flood now upon us, will need aid and sustenance, and that the local authorities and organizations are totally unable to render the assistance required; Gaines Landing, 500; Luna Landing, 700; Redleaf, 500; Jennie, 400; Chicot, 400; Lake Village, 800; Readland, 800; Grand Lake, 800; Portland, 600; with Eudora, Harwood, and Sunnyside unreported. Attitude of Maj. Slattery vacillating and inefficient. Every able-bodied man either on levee saving human and animal life and ready to go to front upon moment's notice. Slattery first refuses aid, then grants insufficient aid; arbitrary and dictatorial in every instance. Government rations have always been refused where anyone refuses levee or other emergency work, and Maj. Slattery can not truthfully assert the contrary. The citizens of the many counties of Arkansas and nine parishes of Louisiana deserve some consideration. Water just reached southern end of county and northern Louisiana. Unless immediate relief is granted thousands of stock and many human lives will perish. Maj. Slattery unacquainted with suffering of people and too brutal and inhuman to conserve their dire necessities. County has dispatched physicians to aid sick and exposed on levee fronts. Women and children, hundreds in number, cribbed up; over 6 to 15 feet of water; three-fourths of county submerged.

HARRY E. COOK, County Judge.

BRINKLEY, ARK., February 7, 1916.

Senator JOE T. ROBINSON,
Washington, D. C.:

Clarendon all under water and being washed away. Can you please have a portion of appropriation sent there quick?

T. C. SIMMONS,
Chairman Relief Committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

Mr. LANE. I wish to announce the necessary absence of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] on official business.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I was authorized to state that the senior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] is absent on official business.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. My colleague [Mr. TOWNSEND] is unavoidably absent from the Senate on account of illness in his family.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-one Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. PITTMAN. I offer a substitute for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, insert the following additional proviso at the end of section 3:

Provided further, That none of the lands herein granted shall be sold or disposed of until their value shall have been appraised and fixed by the "State Commission of Industry, Agriculture, and Irrigation of the State of Nevada," or such other board or commission as may hereafter be created or designated for such purposes by the Legislature of the State of Nevada; and none of said lands shall be sold for less than the price so appraised and fixed by said commission or board.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that this is not a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin. It does not come in the bill at the point where the Senator from Wisconsin has proposed an amendment. It will not affect the result, however, as the amendments may be voted upon separately.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is perfectly satisfactory. I did not have the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin before me at the time, and could not designate at what point it was moved to amend the bill.

Mr. President, I wish to invite the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin to this amendment. I thoroughly realize the interest that he has taken in this matter. I know that he is attempting to accomplish exactly the same result that I am attempting to accomplish. I am willing at any time to accept any suggestion from any Senator that will apparently accomplish that purpose better.

The Senator from Wisconsin is afraid that the public schools and the University of Nevada will not be protected under this bill. If he is right in that, then the bill should be amended. There is no question of that.

The question is as to whether or not that protection should be vested in some authority in the State or attempted to be exercised by this body. The Senator from Wisconsin has called attention to a great many wrongs that have been committed against the public lands through acts of Congress; he is afraid now that if this matter is left to the States they will commit similar wrongs. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin to the fact that this body itself has changed its methods and its views since the time of the examples recited by the Senator from Wisconsin. There was a time when the Senator from Wisconsin was complaining against the action of this very body; he was complaining that this body did not represent the best sentiments of the people of this country. Whether he was right or wrong in that, the fact is that the methods and sentiments of this body have undergone a certain change in the last 10 or 15 years; but the same sentiment that caused the change of method in this body has also affected every State legislature of which I know in the United States.

There was a time when public lands were so plentiful that their value was little realized and they were probably sacrificed. I do not think there is anyone to-day in any State but realizes the value of land. The people in our State have the same realization of that as has the Senator from Wisconsin. We received 2,000,000 acres of land a great many years ago, and those lands were not sold for a sufficient price; there was not a sufficient fund created. I know it, and the Senator from Wisconsin knows it; but we are not the only people that know it; everyone in our State who is paying taxes to-day to keep up the public schools knows it.

There may be a few big cattle concerns, as the Senator suggests, that may want to grab the public lands; but every man and woman in our State pays taxes. On one side you have five or six men trying to grab the public lands, while on the other you have our whole people who are paying taxes to support the university and the public-school system, who will be fighting those 10 or 12 men. Have you any doubt about how a fight of that character will come out? The Senator from Wisconsin smiles; I assume that he has a doubt; but I want to say that I have not any doubt. We have had our fights in our State just the same as the Senator has had in his State, and I want to tell you that the people of our State have won out. An examination of our statute books will convince you that they have won out. Our State is not dominated by any institution to-day; it is dominated by no faction; it is not controlled by any special interest.

A review of our statutes will show to the Senator from Wisconsin that the enactments of the last years in that State indicate most plainly that the people are not only awake to their own necessities, but that they have the power to legislate. As the Senator from Arizona said the other day, why should we be afraid that we are going to steal from ourselves?

The greatest part of our State tax to-day is for education; 66⅔ per cent of our State tax is for education, for the upkeep of our public schools and our university, and yet the people of that State are demanding greater facilities for education, and they have come to Congress and asked that out of this vast area of lands—sixty-seven odd million acres—that have been lying idle there for 50 years the State may be allowed to utilize some of it. Now this body wants to assume to tell them the best method of utilizing that land.

You can not classify that land as timberland, as mineral land, as agricultural land; that classification has gone as far as it can go. The timberland has been reserved; the mineral lands have been reserved; the only lands that are subject to this bill are the unappropriated, unreserved, nonmineral, nontimberlands, but the lands that are subject to this bill vary every half mile. Here you will find 640 acres that may be worth $10 an acre, and a half mile farther on you will find 640 acres that are not worth a dollar an acre. How are you going to classify that kind of land? Yet, if you are going to attempt to assist the State of Nevada in its educational purposes, you want the land to be utilized and you want it to bring the best price that can be obtained.

I have offered this amendment for this purpose: We have in our State a board that has been created by statute known as the State commission of industry, agriculture, and irrigation. That board is composed of the governor, the surveyor general, the attorney general, the State engineer, and one other member appointed by the governor. The duties of that board are to classify the lands of the State and to aid in the building up of agriculture in the State. They are qualified for that purpose; they understand it; and there is no question but it is the intent of that board to obtain just as much as possible for lands that are to benefit the State.

I have provided in the amendment that none of this land shall be sold until the value of such land has been appraised and fixed by this commission, and that it shall not be sold for less than the appraised value fixed by the commission. Is there any reason to fear that that board is going to appraise those lands at less than they are worth? Why should they? Here are the highest officers of our State on this board; here is a man appointed by the governor on this board with presumably the knowledge of the conditions of the State, who, it is proposed, shall go and examine it. Why would that board appraise this land for less than it is worth, unless we assume that the governor of our State, the attorney general, the surveyor general, and all of them are dishonest, which I can not assume, but which I would deny; which I know is untrue, and which I do not believe that any Senator here wants to insinuate? Does not that offer all the protection that can be offered for faithfully carrying out the provisions of this bill?

The Senator from Wisconsin not only attempts by the amendment which he has proposed to protect the public schools and the University of the State of Nevada, but he goes further—and this, I may say, is my objection to his amendment—he goes to the extent of proposing a different system of property tenure in our State. I can not agree to that. I want to say to the Senator that I am not fanatical on the question of leasing. I do not go to the extent of some of the western Senators with regard to that matter. Take minerals, for instance. Minerals become exhausted. A man acquires an interest in a coal mine, and it terminates; he acquires an interest in a gold mine, and it ends; he acquires an interest in an oil well, and it ends. He goes into those pursuits as a temporary matter; he goes into them solely for the profit that is in them; but it is not so with regard to land. The ownership of land in this country is the very foundation of our patriotism. Deprive a man of his home, deprive a man of the opportunity of improving it for his children; say to a man, "You are here temporarily; you are here simply at the sufferance of the State or of another individual," and what character of citizenship will you have?

I want to say to you that if this provision is imposed upon this bill I will be compelled to vote against my own bill. I would rather have the injustice that has been suffered by the State of Nevada for 50 years to continue than to place upon it a greater injustice. For 50 years since you took that State into the Union you have compelled 3,000,000 out of 70,000,000 acres of land to support the State government. You say to the 90,000 people there, "You have a State which you must upkeep, but we own the land in your State." What on earth is there to support a State except the land within the State? You grant to them the privilege of government, but at the same time you take away from them the means of government, and then you come to us and say, "We will not let the people establish homes there; we will lease the land to them; we will let them stay there as long as we want them to stay there, but no longer." That is not the kind of citizenship that we want in the West.

True, the State might make some money. I am not going to argue the financial question. I do not know whether the State would make more money by holding the lands for 25 years and leasing them or whether it would make more money by selling the lands and drawing interest on the money. That is simply a financial problem and any estimate would only be a guess. I do know that if you take 7,000,000 acres of land out of our State and say that no one shall ever establish a home on it, that no man shall ever build a house there that will descend to his children, you will be perpetuating the injustice that you have already imposed on our State.

We come here and because we ask an opportunity to develop a small fraction of the public lands in our State, to develop lands that you have failed and refused to develop, you assume that we are demanding something of you; you assume that we are asking a great boon of the Federal Government. I refuse to put it upon the ground of asking a gift from the Federal Government. We are not asking a gift of the Federal Government; we are asking the Federal Government to do that which it should do, to do that which it should have done years and years ago.

Can you not trust a State board composed of the governor, attorney general, surveyor general, and a commissioner to determine the best way of disposing of this property? I wonder if the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] would trust the governor, the attorney general, the surveyor general, and a commissioner of his own State. I wonder if the distinguished Senator from Utah has anyone in his State that he would trust to protect the public schools of his State except himself. I have not heard him say so.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, of course I hardly consider the question worthy of an answer, but inasmuch as the Senator has so referred to the Senator from Utah, the Senator from Utah is perfectly willing to answer the Senator.

In the first place, the Senator from Utah has never undertaken in any way, shape, or form to impute to the people of Nevada or the people of any other State motives of wrong. He has no other idea than that they would do the same as other people would do under similar circumstances. The Senator from Utah has stated that it has been of late the practice of Congress in granting lands to the States to establish a minimum price at which they should be sold. I believe that such provisions are wise, and I know that the States are well satisfied with them. The people of the States are well satisfied in cases where that minimum has been imposed.

Mr. PITTMAN. Is that a recent view of the Senator's? Has it been recently formed or has he had that view for some time?

Mr. SMOOT. I have had that view for some time, so far as my own State is concerned, and I have said so.

Mr. PITTMAN. The distinguished Senator on yesterday stated to the Senator from Nevada that if we were going to establish a minimum price on the lands under this bill the minimum should be a fair one, and not as low as $1.25 an acre.

Mr. SMOOT. I think so; and the Senator from Utah has not changed his mind a particle on that question.

Mr. PITTMAN. I hold in my hand a bill which the Senator from Utah introduced in this body and which is now before the Committee on Public Lands, which reads as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby granted to the State of Utah 1,000,000 acres of unappropriated nonmineral public lands within said State to aid in the construction and maintenance of public roads in the State of Utah.

SEC. 2. That such lands shall be selected under the authority of the governor of said State, and may be designated and selected from any lands that belong to the United States Government within such State, whether such lands be within or without forest reserves. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to issue patent to said State as soon as the designation thereof has been certified to his office by the governor of said State, and such designation shall be made by legal subdivisions of surveyed land and by metes and bounds of unsurveyed land.

SEC. 3. That the said land shall be sold by the proper authority of said State, at not less than $1.25 per acre, and not in greater amount than 640 acres to any one individual or corporation, and under such rules and regulations for the disposal thereof as may hereafter be provided by the legislature of the State.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will state to the Senator that similar bills have been introduced for Nevada, for Arizona, for Wyoming, and for nearly every Western State. The Senator from Utah, in that bill, followed exactly the language employed in all of the bills introduced for the Western States. The Senator from Nevada is a member of the Committee on Public Lands, and the Senator from Nevada knows that if any bill shall be reported from that committee granting lands to the Western States for the building of roads, it will be a general bill, and will not be a bill for any one particular State.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, the point which I apprehend the Senator from Nevada is making, is that the Senator from Utah on yesterday joined issue with me on the statement that pretty largely in the disposition of the public lands Congress has made no limitation as to price. He has introduced a bill himself just such as I wanted for my State, granting land to the State for public roads, without any limitation on it, just as I would give to Nevada for educational purposes the same land without a limitation on it.

It seems to me that if the Senator from Utah can vote to report from the committee without restriction a bill for public roads, there is something underneath all these bills for public education, and that is that you had better have an educated man walking through the mud than to have an ignorant man riding in an automobile.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, that is true.

Mr. PITTMAN. I decline to yield any longer, Mr. President.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator——

Mr. PITTMAN. Not in my time. I will ask the Senator to take his own time.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course the Senator can make the statement that he has just made, and I shall have to respect it, but I will say to the Senator from Nevada that I do not think it is altogether fair.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will yield to the Senator, then. I simply did not want a colloquy to break in on the consideration of the bill; that is all. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that the Senator from Utah did not break in on the consideration of the bill until the Senator himself invited it, and asked the direct question; nor would I have interrupted the Senator for a moment if it had not been that way.

I want to say to the Senator from Arizona that there is not a Senator but that will heartily agree to all he has said in relation to the education of the people. When I tell the Senate of the United States that 87 per cent of all the taxes raised in the State of Utah go to the education of her children, they will understand how the people of Utah regard the education of her citizens. I want it understood that I am not opposed to the granting of lands for educational purposes in the State of Nevada. I would vote to-day to give Nevada sections 2 and 32, the same as the State of Utah received, besides sections 16 and 36, for educational purposes; but, Mr. President, this bill is not that. This bill does not reach that point at all.

I want the Senator from Nevada and every other Senator to know that I am not here opposing the granting of lands to the State of Nevada for educational purposes. All I am trying to insist upon is that whatever we do for one State we ought to do for another, and they ought to be equal. The Senator reporting this bill knows full well that the report states that the bill is for the purpose of making Nevada equal with the other western land States; and I know, as well as I know I am alive, that if the bill passes in the shape it is now, carrying 7,000,000 acres, the balance of the public-land States of the West would not be equal to the State of Nevada in grants of land for educational purposes.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I understand the position of the Senator now. He does not oppose the principle of the bill, but he is opposing it because his State is not getting as much. That theory of argument may appeal to some, but I do not feel that it is worthy of much consideration.

On yesterday, however, the Senator took up the bill that I had presented, and he said: "Where is the protection to keep this land from falling into the hands of a few people?" I hold in my hand a bill that he introduced, proposing to grant a million acres to the State of Utah, and I ask him where is the protection in that bill to prevent that land from falling into the hands of a few people? Why did he not think at the time about his own State? He does not object to the land falling into the hands of a few people in Utah, but he is very solicitous in regard to the State of Nevada.

Oh, yes; on yesterday the Senator said: "Why not be fair with this thing? If you are going to put a minimum price in there, do not put it at $1.25 an acre. Put it in at a fair price. Make it higher." And yet why did not the Senator, who claims that the lands of Utah are better than those of Nevada, put his lands in at a higher price than $1.25 an acre? That is the price put in there. I suppose the Senator thinks he is a bad example for the Senator from Nevada to follow.

Mr. SMOOT. I have stated to the Senator why I put it in there, Mr. President.

Mr. PITTMAN. If I had copied the bill of the Senator from Utah, his argument would have been much more appropriate than the attack made upon the bill which I have here.

I have only a few more words to say with regard to this matter. I have offered here an amendment that says that none of this land shall be sold until it is appraised by the board of agriculture and industry of our State, and that it shall not be sold for a cent less than the appraised value that they put upon it. That board is composed of the governor of our State, the attorney general, the surveyor general, and the State commissioner. I have absolute confidence in the ability and integrity of the members of that board, and I defy anyone in this body to question it.

Mr. President, I have taken up more of the time of the Senate than I intended to take up. I simply ask the Senators, if they are going to assist the State of Nevada in the education of her children, to do it in a way that will accomplish something. Do not impose upon us a system of leasing. Do not take the best that is remaining of our lands now and say that no one shall ever build a home on them.

If that is what you want to do with our public land, then leave it as it is. Leave it idle. It has been idle for 50 years, and our people have suffered under the burden of taxation by reason of it; but they would rather suffer under the burdens of taxation for 50 years more than to have the settlers on 8,000,000 acres of land without a home.

That is not the class of people we want. That is not the class of legislation we want. We want to build up our university. We want to build up our public schools. We want to make them more efficient. We want to give every child in that State an opportunity to go to school. We want a part of the 67,000,000 acres of land devoted to that purpose—and it can not be devoted to any higher purpose—but we want it devoted to that purpose in an intelligent way. We want the people who are to be benefited by it, the people there who are paying the taxes to keep up those institutions, and who know the conditions of that country, to be allowed to get the very best they possibly can get out of that land.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] does not think 7,000,000 acres of land is too much. The only difference is that he thinks it should be leased instead of being sold. I am willing to submit to the Senate at any time the proposition as to whether it should be leased or whether it should be sold.

There is but one question involved in this matter now, and that is the question as to whether you are going to let the State board of agriculture in our State fix the price of this land and regulate the sale of it or whether you in this body, with your little information, with your lack of knowledge of those conditions, are going to attempt to legislate with regard to that matter.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada answer a question or two concerning this bill?

Mr. PITTMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. ROBINSON. If I remember correctly, the Senator stated that there have been heretofore granted to the State of Nevada by the Government 3,000,000 acres of public land?

Mr. PITTMAN. Practically so; a little less.

Mr. ROBINSON. When was that grant made?

Mr. PITTMAN. That grant was made in 1864 and perfected in 1866.

Mr. ROBINSON. Has that 3,000,000 acres passed into private ownership?

Mr. PITTMAN. It has.

Mr. ROBINSON. All of it?

Mr. PITTMAN. All of it.

Mr. ROBINSON. What disposition was made of it? Was it sold, or how was it disposed of by the State?

Mr. PITTMAN. An individual would go upon the public domain and find 640 acres that he considered worthy of purchase. He would then designate that land to the surveyor general of the State. The surveyor general of the State would examine it and determine whether or not it was mineral or of such character that it could not be acquired under the act, and then the State would select that land from the Government, and the title would then pass into private ownership.

Mr. ROBINSON. Can the Senator state the total amount that was received by the State of Nevada for the 3,000,000 acres that have heretofore been granted?

Mr. PITTMAN. One dollar and twenty-five cents an acre.

Mr. ROBINSON. Has that fund been invested, or what use was made of the fund?

Mr. PITTMAN. That fund was invested in bonds, and is a permanent fund, and the schools are supported from the interest.

Mr. ROBINSON. I believe the Senator stated that the total area of the land in the State of Nevada is about 70,000,000 acres?

Mr. PITTMAN. Seventy million acres.

Mr. ROBINSON. And only about 3,000,000 acres have heretofore passed into private ownership?

Mr. PITTMAN. Only about 3,000,000 acres have gone into private ownership.

Mr. ROBINSON. Is the remainder of the 70,000,000 acres that is still in public ownership open to homestead entry?

Mr. PITTMAN. It is, and has been ever since those acts were passed.

Mr. ROBINSON. Are the lands suitable for homestead entry?

Mr. PITTMAN. They are not.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is the reason why they have not been taken up, is it?

Mr. PITTMAN. That is the reason why they have not been taken up. A man could not acquire that land under the homestead act, because it requires that you go upon the land and stay there practically continuously, which is impossible on land that has no water upon it. It can not be acquired under desert-land act, because that act requires that you shall show that you have sufficient water to irrigate it, and the water is not there. There is no act applicable to this peculiar condition in our State.

Mr. ROBINSON. Then, if those remaining public lands are ever utilized by the public, there will have to be some additional legislation?

Mr. PITTMAN. Undoubtedly. That is proven by 50 years' experience.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Nevada a question?

Mr. PITTMAN. Certainly.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I am very much interested in this land question. I feel that it is a problem that confronts us. I very often feel that you gentlemen of the far West, blessed with lavish acres, are rather profligate in disposing of them, while we people in the East, in narrower and more circumscribed geography, are wonderfully solicitous about the land question.

The thing that rankles in my mind, generally, is the infinitely large holdings of public lands in a few hands. So I should like to ask the Senator whether he can tell us approximately how many owners there are of the 3,000,000 acres that have been disposed of. My point is that if it is a liberal number of owners I would feel very kindly about it, but if the ownership is confined to a very few persons then I rebel.

I feel that the land question is a very serious problem. The matter of leasing generally appeals to me. Whether or not in this particular instance it may appeal to me I do not know. I feel that the evil in our own State of New Jersey has been that with profligate hand we have literally thrown away the riparian rights on our shore front to great wealthy corporations; and to-day I am a stickler, and so are many others in my State, in favor of a system of leasing for 25 years the riparian lands on our ocean front.

So I feel solicitous in this matter. If I could be assured that this would mean granting the privilege liberally to owners to hold these lands for homes, very well; but if by some uncanny and devious methods the land finally all dribbles back into the hands of two or three wealthy operators, then I am teetotally and unqualifiedly opposed to it.

I should like to ask whether the Senator can give me an approximate idea in regard to that.

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; I think I can. There are over 2,000 people that have acquired this land.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Three million acres?

Mr. PITTMAN. And they hold it to-day. I do not believe you will find in our State to-day an individual who owns 20,000 acres of land. There are three big stock concerns, so I am informed, in the northern part of our State that have acquired more land than that, but it has been acquired by scripping. The Senator knows what that means, no doubt.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Well, I can imagine.

Mr. PITTMAN. It consists of the purchase of lieu-land scrip, and things of that kind, and placing it upon the land. But the land grant was not grabbed up in that way, because of the nature of our State.

As I tried to explain yesterday, our State is composed of mountain ranges running north and south. The valleys between the mountains are agricultural in their character. There are numerous little streams running down to the valleys. They are not large in capacity, but they are numerous. The land adjacent to these streams was the land taken up by the homesteaders in the early days of our State. It was more valuable to the man who had a ranch. He would take it up as an addition to his ranch. Probably he would not have any water for it, or not enough water for it, but he would have water in the spring that would help raise grass, and he would make a pasture out of it.

I have maps of the distribution of that land in the State. The distribution shows on the face of it that the land was not acquired by big cattle interests or big sheep interests, because when those classes of people acquire land they want it in a block, or largely so. You will find from the maps in this matter that these holdings are scattered in tracts of 640 acres from one end of the State to the other.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I am glad to know that.

Mr. PITTMAN. And the Senator will find that 90 per cent of that land is owned and used to-day by farmers in that State. I have said before, and I say now, that the men who will acquire the land under this bill will be that character of people, because it is most valuable to them, and they can afford to pay more for it than anyone else.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I am glad of that.

Mr. PITTMAN. When I ask for this grant, I ask you to throw precautions around it to the extent of taking our board of industry and agriculture, which is composed of the best men in our State—the governor, the attorney general, the surveyor general, and the commissioner—and allowing them to appraise this land. Here may be a piece of land worth $10 an acre, and half a mile from it another piece of land not worth a dollar an acre. We can not fix those prices here. It is impossible. We know nothing about it. This board has been created by statute of the State for that very purpose. The bill now provides, under my amendment, that none of this land shall be sold until it is appraised, and then not sold for less than its appraised value. It goes further, and puts it open to competitive bidding. Even after a man has made his selection of 640 acres it must be advertised, and his neighbor may bid, if he wants to, on that property. It seems to me that we have taken every precaution about the matter that we possibly can. I know of nothing else that we can do in this respect.

We only have 90,000 people there in a State as big as all the New England States. Think of that—90,000 people! The total amount of property in private ownership is only the size of Connecticut, and yet our State is as big as all the New England States. Is not that condition awful?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It is unfortunate.

Mr. PITTMAN. Do we not need a remedy? Why have we not a larger population than 90,000 in our State, which was admitted to the Union in 1864? Why is it that we have only 3,000,000 in private ownership out of 70,000,000 acres of land? I want some one to answer. It has been open to the homestead laws for 50 years. It has not been grabbed away from the homesteader in the 50 years. It has been open to desert-land entry, and yet it has not been acquired.

I submit that you have not any right to say to us that such condition shall last forever. It is not fair. We are to-day paying higher taxes for public education—higher than any other State in the Union.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I am not arguing against the Senator. I only wanted to know whether it might be surrounded by the conditions which I have portrayed.

Mr. ROBINSON. I wish to ask the Senator from Nevada one further question before he quits the floor. Is there any logical basis for the amount of 7,000,000 acres, or is it just an arbitrary figure?

Mr. PITTMAN. No; it is not an arbitrary figure. I will say to the Senator that when this matter was considered by the president of the university and by the governor and by our superintendent of public instruction they all thought that the quantity should be 10,000,000 acres. Then I advised them with regard to this matter. They made an estimate of what they thought they required, and they believed the character of the land there justified the demand for 10,000,000 acres. I said no; we will simply place it so that when the bill is passed the percentage of our own public domain will be in accordance with the prior legislation with regard to Arizona and New Mexico, where the conditions are similar. That was the reason why we fixed the quantity at 7,000,000 acres. It was designed so as not to go beyond what had been granted to them; but not meaning it was enough, because the educational officers of our State do not believe it is enough, and I doubt whether it is enough.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, generally speaking, I am in favor of a grant of public lands to States for educational purposes. Indeed, I am leaning strongly to the opinion that it might be better for the National Government to surrender its entire rights in the public domain to several States in which the lands are located. But we have not come to that time yet.

The question here is whether a donation of land such as is asked for by the Senator from Nevada should be granted in this instance. It may be that the Senator is asking something more than his State is justly entitled to when he asks for the donation of the large amount of 7,000,000 acres of land. I know something about the State of Nevada and something of its necessities. It may be that, taking the value of the land in that State, the request of the Senator is not an unreasonable one.

A comparison has been made here sometimes between the donations that have been given to the Eastern States in money and the grant of land to the Western States. Computations have been suggested here with respect to the amount that might be realized by a State if a certain amount of money were donated instead of the land.

I have here a tabulated statement of the donations that have been made to the several States. It was prepared by Mr. A. M. Fisher, a competent and reliable accountant here in the city of Washington. It is denominated "Deposits of surplus funds of the United States with the several States and Territories in the year 1837, with amounts which would be due if interest were accrued for 78 years, at 4 per cent simple and compound. (See acts of Congress as follows: June 23, 1836, sec. 13—5 Stat., p. 55; Oct. 2, 1837—5 Stat., p. 201; and June 25, 1910—36 Stat., p. 776.)"

First is given geographical division and State or Territory, next the estimated population as of 1914, next the amount of deposit originally, and then the amount of the interest if computed as I have stated. The States are classified into New England, Middle Atlantic, East North Central, West North Central, South Atlantic, East South Central, and West South Central.

It is quite an interesting and, I think, instructive document. Take, for example, without taking up the entire statement, the

New England group of States: The estimated population is 6,962,079. The amount deposited originally with these States is $4,779,188. The total amount at 4 per cent simple interest would be $19,690,252, or a per capita of $2.83. Computed at compound interest at 4 per cent the amount would be $110,157,146, and the per capita would be $15.82. The amounts deposited with the several States are set out separately and carried out in totals.

I ask, Mr. President, to submit this tabulated statement as a part of my remarks, and that it be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement referred to is as follows:

Deposits of surplus funds of the United States with the several States and Territories in the year 1837, with amounts which would be due if interest were accrued for 78 years at 4 per cent simple and compound.

[See acts of Congress as follows: June 23, 1836, sec. 13 (5 Stat., p. 55); Oct. 2, 1837 (5 Stat., p. 201); and June 25, 1910 (36 Stat., p. 776).]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it. The noes have it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. May the amendment be stated?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask for a division on the request for the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not recognize any such parliamentary practice as that. The amendment is lost. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN].

Mr. CHILTON. Let that be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Was the amendment submitted to the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was, and no one voted in the affirmative and there was but one vote in the negative.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Chair is mistaken about that, because I myself voted in the affirmative.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair could not hear it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator from Wisconsin who proposed the amendment is not present. I make the point of no quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names.

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. SHIVELY], who is paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH]. This announcement may stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN].

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I would like to have the attention of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN]. The Senator from Nevada has lived in the West. He has been in Alaska. That is one bond of affection between us, for I have been there, too. The Senator knows as well as I do that when they strike a good pay streak a man or a coterie of men will go out and by power of attorney, assumed or genuine, stake that strike and that pay streak and all the good ground around it for 50 miles, excluding every honest miner who wants to mine it, and hold it until the day that they want to operate it.

The State of Oregon had land granted to it for school purposes. It is a good State, and I think the citizens of it are as intelligent as any in the Union. Yet they lost most of it. They lost it by one scheme or another, and it went into the hands of people who made profit out of it, who pursued it as a profession and profited by the ignorance of the people concerning it.

I wish to see Nevada get this land. I am in hearty sympathy with the Senator. I should like to see the people of Nevada have it for the purposes for which he has drawn this bill, but I want to ask him if he would not consent to have the people of Nevada allowed to sell it in parcels, dividing the sales into periods of five or six years or four or five years, so that in the second sale and the third and fourth and the fifth, if necessary, they might profit by their experience in selling the other installments.

The Senator knows as well as I do that land which to-day is considered the least valuable may in the course of time prove to be the most valuable. It was so with us. The land which my ancestors settled on in 1849 proved to be in some respects the least valuable land they could have taken. They could have gone to what was then considered the poorer lands and profited a thousandfold more than they did.

Mr. PITTMAN. Will the Senator state his amendment?

Mr. LANE. Yes. I think the Senator will best serve the interests of the people whom he represents by giving them an opportunity to take advantage of the experience which they will obtain in the disposition of this land.

If the Senator will permit me—and I hope he will consent to it for the benefit of his own people and to his own credit in the future when time shows what has happened—I will offer an amendment providing—

That not more than one-fourth part of said lands shall be disposed of by said State until after a period of 5 years, not more than one-fourth part until after a period of 10 years, not more than one-fourth part until after a period of 15 years, and the remainder of said grant shall not be disposed of until after a period of 20 years from and after the passage and approval of this act.

If the Senator will accept that amendment, it will be of value to Nevada. He will, by its adoption, gain millions of dollars for the educational fund which he wishes to provide.

Mr. PITTMAN. I should like to have the amendment again read, at least.

Mr. LANE. As the Secretary has a better voice than mine, I will ask that the amendment be read from the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That not more than one-fourth part of said lands shall be disposed of by said State until after a period of 5 years, not more than one-fourth part until after a period of 10 years, not more than one-fourth part until after a period of 15 years, and the remainder of said grant shall not be disposed of until after a period of 20 years from and after the passage and approval of this act.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator from Oregon does not want to have the amendment read "after the passage and approval of this act." They might be on different dates. It should read "after the approval of this act."

Mr. LANE. I will accept that modification, if it makes the amendment any clearer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the first question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN].

Mr. STONE. Let it be stated, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 12, at the end of section 3, it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided further, That none of the lands herein granted shall be sold or disposed of until their value shall have been appraised and fixed by the "State Commission of Industry, Agriculture, and Irrigation of the State of Nevada," or such other board or commission as may hereafter be created or designated for such purposes by the Legislature of the State of Nevada; and none of said lands shall be sold for less than the price so appraised and fixed by said commission or board.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I thought the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE] had offered an amendment to that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has done so, and his amendment will now be stated. The amendment of the Senator from Nevada is adopted. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, with the consent of the author of the bill, I will modify my amendment so as to provide that not more than half a million acres shall be sold each year. To that I think the Senator from Nevada will agree.

Mr. PITTMAN. I accept that amendment.

Mr. LANE. That will give the people of Nevada time to look into the matter and protect themselves.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 9, after the word "herewith," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That not more than one-half million acres of said lands so granted shall be disposed of each year by said State.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE].

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I desire to suggest an amendment to the bill. In reference to the investment of the funds that arise from these grants section 5 of the bill provides:

SEC. 5. That the proceeds of such sale shall be placed in a special fund for the sole use and benefit of the public schools of Nevada and the State University of the State of Nevada, and whenever there are $20,000 in the fund such moneys shall be immediately invested in interest-bearing bonds, notes, or securities of the United States, the State of Nevada, or any other State of the Union, or of any county in the State of Nevada—

I want to add after the word "Nevada" the words:

or in notes secured by first mortgage upon farm lands in sums not greater than one-third of the actual value thereof, exclusive of improvements thereon, with interest at the current legal rate.

The reason for that suggestion is this: My colleague [Mr. LANE] has spoken of the moneys which Oregon has realized from the sale of her school lands. Many of the lands of the State have been squandered, but the moneys that have been received from them have been absolutely conserved and taken care of. We have over $6,000,000 in the irreducible school fund of the State, and every dollar of it is invested in farm securities. There never has been a loss in all the years that that fund has been so invested, nor an occasion when the men who have borrowed it have not paid back the money to the State. It not only brings a better rate of interest ordinarily than can be obtained from the bonds that are mentioned in the bill, but it assists likewise in building up the State, because the money is loaned right there at home; the current legal rates are usually fair, and the security offered is perfectly safe. That is my reason for suggesting the amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I accept that amendment. I see no objection to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 4, it is proposed to strike out "7,000,000 acres" and insert "4,000,000 acres."

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Is that the amendment which has been heretofore offered by the Senator?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is not.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from Washington yesterday proposed to reduce the amount to 3,000,000 acres. The amendment now offered proposes to reduce it to 4,000,000 acres. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Washington. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CATRON (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. CLAPP (when his name was called). In the absence of my general pair I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. As I see he is not present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], which I transfer to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] and I vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I ask if the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. MYERS. I have a pair with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. In his absence I withhold my vote. I should vote "nay" if I were at liberty to vote.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF], who is detained from the Senate on account of illness. In his absence I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote I should vote "nay."

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING]. If he were present, I should vote "nay." In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT]. I transfer that pair, in his absence, to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], and vote "nay."

Mr. WEEKS (when his name was called). I inquire if the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. WEEKS. I have a general pair with that Senator. If he were present and voting, I should vote "yea." In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I wish to inquire whether the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have a pair with that Senator. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SAULSBURY (after having voted in the negative). I inadvertently voted, not observing that the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT], with whom I have a general pair, had not voted. I will, however, transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. MYERS. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] and vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] to the senor Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and vote "nay."

Mr. BRYAN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. PAGE. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. DILLINGHAM] and to state that he is paired with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. CATRON. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] to the senior Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] and vote "nay."

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I desire again to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] on official business of the Senate.

Mr. CHILTON. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. GOFF] on account of illness. I ask that this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. GALLINGER (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to withdraw the announcement I made of the transfer of my pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], the Senator from Michigan having been paired with another Senator, and I withdraw my vote.

I am requested to announce that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE]; that the Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY]; and that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] is paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, I think I am in favor of this bill, but I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada a question or two with reference to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Debate is not in order at this time.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Then, Mr. President, I shall withhold my vote on the pending amendment and repeat the question later.

The result was announced—yeas 12, nays 40, as follows:

So Mr. POINDEXTER's amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there be no further amendments to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I understood that an amendment was offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], in charge of the bill—it was quite early in the discussion yesterday, according to my recollection—by the terms of which a minimum price of $1.25 an acre is placed upon this land. I will inquire of the Senator from Nevada whether I am right about that?

Mr. PITTMAN. That is correct.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. And that provision is now in the bill?

Mr. PITTMAN. It is.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I move to strike out "$1.25" and insert "$3," so that the minimum price at which this land is to be sold shall be $3 an acre.

Mr. PITTMAN. I sincerely hope the Senator will not do that.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, if the amendment has been stated I should like to address myself to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. In the amendment proposed by the junior Senator from Nevada, in line 7, page 2, it is proposed to strike out "$1.25" and insert "$3," so that, if amended, it will read:

That the land herein granted shall be disposed of to citizens of the United States by sale to the highest bidder at public auction upon due notice, and at not less than $3 per acre.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I am satisfied that many of the Senators upon this floor do not understand the terms of this bill. That is not strange, because during much of the time the bill has been under discussion the attendance upon the Senate has been very light, as it often is at the lunch hour of the day.

I make that statement because, as I offered my amendment and it was being read by the Clerk, one of the Senators suggested to me that much of this land would be worth a very great deal less than $1.25 an acre. I am sure that the Senator who made that suggestion to me, and perhaps many other Senators, do not understand that the 7,000,000 acres of land set aside from the public domain for the benefit of the school fund of Nevada will be selected land. The very best Government lands that can be found by the State will thus be selected and constitute the 7,000,000 acres within this grant.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a suggestion right there?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I know there is no man who is fairer than the Senator from Wisconsin in his deliberations here. Does not the Senator know that the first lands in all these States were taken up by the Federal Government, and that when the people came to make homes there they were left in the position of the third-table banquet, and that that is about the condition of these Western States where the lands are now left? I know that the Senator would not want to cripple any of these States.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I certainly do not desire to cripple this grant or the State in the enjoyment of this donation to its school fund.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I know that; and that is the reason I am making the suggestion.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The suggestion is not very timely from the Senator, however, in view of the fact that the Senator from Nevada—who must know the values of land in Nevada—stated, in the course of the debate, that much of this land is worth at least $10 per acre. Now, in fixing a minimum price of $3 per acre——

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I resent the suggestion of the Senator. I approached him in perfectly good humor and with proper consideration; and I do not like to be taken from the floor by the suggestion of impropriety on the part of a man who probably knows as much about that particular country as the Senator from Wisconsin can possibly know. So I hope he will not feel the least resentment toward a proper approach in a very proper manner.

I am suggesting to the Senator that, in my judgment, he does not know what he is talking about; that is all. I was trying to do it in a most parliamentary and appropriate way.

I do know what I am talking about, for I live there. I am a close neighbor to the Senator from Nevada, and I know the conditions of that country as well as I do those of my own State. The conditions in Wisconsin, if the Senator will permit me, without making any criticism, never were the same; and I have no fear now but that the Wisconsin school funds have gotten full payment for all the lands would be worth if the State had held them to this day from the taxation of the people who have settled upon those lands and made that great State.

That is all I was suggesting to the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator has assumed to himself, not only a knowledge of all the lands of the State of Arizona and of the State of Nevada, but a better knowledge of the conditions of Wisconsin than anybody else.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. If the Senator will permit me right there——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; I do not yield just now.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That is not courteous. The Senator has that right, of course; but I will take the floor later.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will give the Senator the opportunity in a very few moments, Mr. President.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I am entitled to the opportunity, and I will get it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I only wish to say, Mr. President, that it has been the experience of every one of the States of the Union down to the present time, where limitations have not been fixed by Congress upon the sale of lands, that the school funds in the name of which the donation is made have suffered by the lands being sold at a very low price to speculators. That that is so, Mr. President, is attested by the fact that some 10 or 15 or 20 years ago Congress recognized it, and began to put into these grants a minimum price below which the lands should not be sold. You can not otherwise account for the fact that when the grants were made to North and South Dakota, and when the grants were made to Wyoming and to Colorado and to Montana and to Utah, I think, as well, there was a minimum price fixed below which the State, in carrying out the grant that was made to it by the Federal Government, should not sell those lands.

Mr. President, while I have no doubt that there is a progressive population in Nevada and that there is in that State to-day a recognition of public rights as against special privileges, yet I know also that these movements have their lapses; that periods of reaction overtake periods of progress. Whatever may be the conditions in Nevada at this particular moment, no one can foretell what the conditions may be two years or four years or six years hence.

Mr. President, I think that uniformly for the last twenty-odd years every grant of this character made by Congress to any State in the Union for educational purposes has had imposed upon it a minimum price—and I doubt if it would be found from an examination of the records that the minimum had been below the price of $10 an acre. But, sir, I recognize the fact that this is a different soil and that there is a larger measure of aridity in this section of the country than in the Middle West; I do think that the minimum price should be less than $10 per acre. But the Senator in charge of the bill himself stated on yesterday that he thought the minimum price fixed in the bill should be more than $1.25 an acre.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will yield to the Senator in just a moment. Since that statement was made by the Senator, if I am correct in my recollection of his admission——

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator is mistaken. That is what I rose to say.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Very well. It was my recollection, however, that in a colloquy which occurred between the Senator from Nevada and the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], that the Senator from Nevada agreed with the Senator from Utah that the minimum price of $1.25 named in this bill was too low. But whether he did or not, Mr. President, so long as we keep in mind the particular language of section 2, contained in lines 1 and 2 of that section—

That the lands herein granted shall be selected by the State authorities of said State from any unappropriated and unreserved nonmineral public land in said State—

In the execution of this provision of the bill the choicest lands that can be found by the agents of the State will be taken out of the public lands of that State. I do think it worthy of the very serious consideration of the Senate at this time in the discharge of its obligation to its own broad constituency. This is a part of the public domain, and it is given upon the principle, I suppose, that the entire country is interested, as we all are, in the promotion of education in each of the States of the Union, and that this is a proper grant for that purpose. I say that in donating this public land, that belongs to all the people of this Union, for a specific purpose, it behooves us to see to it that this trust is made as highly beneficial as it can be, not only to that State but to the whole country, by imposing a reasonable minimum price below which the land should not be sold.

I think that the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada this morning, providing for an appraisal of these lands, with a provision added that there should be no sale of the lands below the appraised value, emphasizes the necessity of putting on a reasonable minimum price here. It has been the experience of this country in the administration of the public-land laws that a minimum price so fixed in the law has been construed as though the provision read that the lands should not be sold for more than the minimum price. I think the records of the sale of the mineral lands through the Interior Department down to about the year 1908 will show that those lands which were sold under a similar provision were not sold for a price above the minimum fixed. Then, through the administrative arm of the Government, responding to public sentiment, there having been considerable agitation upon that question, and evidence having been submitted to the Interior Department that lands were being sold at $2.50 an acre—the minimum fixed in the law—that were worth $100 and $150 per acre, a different policy was adopted; and vastly more has been realized, I think, from the sale of those lands under that provision, since that time than before.

Mr. President, if the amount that I have named here, $3 per acre, as a minimum price to be fixed in this bill, is not a proper amount—and I do not assume to know the value of those lands—then I would be very willing to accept an amendment as to the minimum price.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I want to say that the Senator is mistaken, as I said before, with regard to a statement attributed to me. The RECORD will not disclose that statement. We have this provision in the bill, however:

Provided further, That none of the lands herein granted shall be sold or disposed of until their value shall have been appraised and fixed by the State Commission of Industry, Agriculture, and Irrigation of the State of Nevada, or such other board or commission as may hereafter be created or designated for such purposes by the Legislature of the State of Nevada; and none of said lands shall be sold for less than the price so appraised and fixed by said commission or board.

That commission or board consists of the governor, the surveyor general, the attorney general, the State engineer, and one other member appointed by the governor. It is a large board, and quite a dignified board. I think that what I said yesterday, as the Senator will find out, in my colloquy with the Senator from Utah, was that the price of $1.25 an acre would be too much for some of the land and not enough for other parts of it; but the $1.25 was simply a minimum. I meant that the State undoubtedly would ask more for some of the land. I think it will. I am not prepared to say, however, that the great majority of that land would be worth $3 an acre, and, in fact, I am afraid it would not.

The Senator is afraid of a lapse in the progressiveness of the people of the State. There is another provision in this bill, and that is that not to exceed half a million acres of this land shall be sold in any one year. That means that it is continued over a period of 14 years. Therefore there is ample opportunity to protect against any wrong step. We have separate, successive legislatures to view this matter. We have the initiative and referendum in our State, whereby they can initiate and inquire into a matter of this kind if the legislature itself will not do so.

It seems to me that we have thrown every protection around this measure that we can throw around it without practically nullifying what we are attempting to accomplish.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I believe the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin will defeat the very purpose which he has in view. He said a very true thing while he was on his feet a moment ago, that wherever you fix a minimum it has been construed to mean a maximum as well as a minimum.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3331) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906, as amended by the act approved June 23, 1910, and to provide for the improvement and development of waterways for the uses of interstate and foreign commerce.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; for a question.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Then I take it the Senator from Mississippi would readily agree that the minimum of $1.25 an acre named in the bill as it now stands, for which I have offered a substitute, ought to be stricken out.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, that is just what I think, for I do not believe that any minimum ought to be named at all. If we have gotten to a point where the authorities of a sovereign State can not be trusted to do an honest thing, then the naming of any minimum would amount to naming a minimum which would also be a maximum. If you name $3, let us say, some of those lands are worth more, and all the land which is worth $3 or worth more would be disposed of at some price, and most of it, if we are to judge human nature in the future by what human nature has done in the past, would be sold at $3.

I know nothing very much about the lands in Nevada, except in just passing through the State and looking at them from the car window. It seemed to me I saw more land proportionately in the State of Nevada that looked like it was not worth 50 cents an acre than I ever saw in any other State of the Union. No one would give that for it unless he wanted to make a show place of it, and some of it was right spectacular and picturesque; but that was about all.

I think it would be wiser to strike out all the minimum and leave the State board, men who have the best interests of the people of Nevada at heart, and who have at heart also the honor of the State of Nevada, or if they have not it must be a queer sort of State board, do just what this bill says in another part of it, appraise these lands and set a value upon them and not sell them at less than the value itself. Those of them that are worth $10 should be valued at $10; those that are worth $15, if any there be, at $15; those worth $3 at $3; those worth $1.25 at $1.25. Meanwhile the lands that will be worth less than $3 could be sold. Under the Senator's amendment all lands worth less than $3 would never be sold, would never be converted to the public use, but under this the lands could be sold for the purposes of production of some sort, I do not know what. Some of those that I saw could not be converted to any purpose of production, if I could judge by the way they looked to me. Of course, if you could put water on them they would be valuable.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Those would not be likely to be selected.

Mr. WILLIAMS. How much public land have they to select from?

Mr. GALLINGER. Seventy million acres.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the bill is open for amendment, Mr. President, I am going to move as a substitute for the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin to strike out the minimum altogether and leave it to the State board to appraise these lands and sell them upon their merits at what they are worth. Does not the Senator from Wisconsin himself think that that would be wiser?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think it would be very much wiser than to leave it standing at $1.25 an acre.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I shall move that as a substitute.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will yield in one moment. I shall move as a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin that the words on page 2, line 7, fixing the minimum at $1.25 be stricken out.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHILTON in the chair). The Senator from New Hampshire will state his inquiry.

Mr. GALLINGER. As I understand the matter, the unfinished business is before the Senate and has not been laid aside. Can we proceed to consider another bill and act upon amendments under those conditions?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. We can not if the point is raised.

Mr. GALLINGER. I make the point.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. SHIELDS. I will offer no objections to unanimous consent, provided the vote is to be had on this measure, and it is not going to take all the afternoon, the unfinished business to be taken up again immediately after the vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course that is what I mean.

Mr. SHIELDS. I understand it is expected that a vote will be reached in the next few minutes. With that understanding, I have no objection to the unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has no way of gauging how long "temporary" means, of course. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi? The Chair hears none, and the unfinished business is temporarily laid aside.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now I yield for a question to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. FALL. I think that the minimum price of $1.25 an acre was fixed possibly in this bill because that is the minimum price fixed by the United States Government upon its public lands.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no doubt that is the case. I think the whole principle of it is wrong, or unwise, rather.

Mr. FALL. I agree with the Senator. The Senator yields the floor, I understand.

Mr. President, the remark has been made here that there are periods of progression and retrogression in legislation when dealing with matters of this kind. I want to say, sir, for the great number, at least, of the people of the western countries that they are not consciously guilty of retrogression in the matter of dealing with the public lands and with other questions also. However, Mr. President, some gentlemen come into the Congress of the United States or in the press or into office and imagine that they discover some new theory. The land policy, with the mining policy of the United States, was discussed years and years ago and definitely decided by the Congress of the United States. Some of the greatest debates that have ever been listened to in the Congress of the United States have arisen over just such questions as are presented here now.

I call the attention of the Senator from Mississippi to the fact that some Senators and some Congressmen and other public men imagine that they have discovered new theories. Every generation apparently forgets to some extent what the former generation has done; that these land matters and the land policy of the United States have been discussed here in former years time and time again and a policy fixed; that we started out upon the policy of the reservation of the natural resources, of attempting to hold even the mines of this great country as a treasure for the people of the United States rather than to dispose of them for the benefit of those who might acquire them and assist in building up the States of the Union.

Sir, one of the most noted debates that was ever heard in these Halls was that known as the Webster-Hayne debate, originating over exactly the same subject which is now under discussion. Although in that magnificent speech made by the greatest orator possibly ever known as a Member of this body, Mr. Webster maintained as against Hayne's insistence the rights of the Union as a trustee for this great estate that these lands should remain as the property of the United States to be administered by them; yet, sir, he announced that it had always been his policy by his vote and by his voice, and it would continue to be his policy, to see that they were so disposed of as to build up the States in which they were situated.

The entire policy of reservation was overthrown in 1836 and 1837, after due consideration by the Congress of the United States, and the system adopted under which we have progressed to a population of 110,000,000 people, making homesteads where it was claimed that no one could subsist and support a family. This great western country has been developed under the system established after due consideration in overturning all the former systems back in the year 1836.

Now, we have had recently in the last few years a new discovery—conservation of our national resources. We do not object to it in the West. I want to say now that I, for one, do not object to conservation, but I do object to reservation. I insist that the people of the State of Nevada and of other States should have the same opportunity to develop their resources that the people of the other States of the Union have enjoyed and through which they have been enabled to build up their States.

We do not object to the reservation of the forests, but we object to the administration of the forest reserves by which now timber under 6 inches in diameter is being cut and thrown upon the market, wastefully dissipating the inheritance of this great people which some are so anxious to conserve upon every occasion.

But more than all, Mr. President, the people of the West object to the guardianship of self-appointed guardians from other States. Just as has been remarked by the Senator from Mississippi, it is a violent presumption to suppose that the people of Nevada will not get for their public schools all that it is possible for them to realize from the proceeds of the sale or the disposition of these lands. It is preposterous to advance such an argument.

In respect to the donation of land to my State of New Mexico, there was a limitation that a certain character of land which might be considered to be irrigable land, or thereafter subject to irrigation, should be appraised and not disposed of for less than $25 per acre. Of all the lands which we have had in New Mexico, of all the lands given to us by the State, not one acre of such land has been disposed of. It has been impossible for it to receive any such price; yet those are the lands referred to in speeches here yesterday as land worth $25 and $50 per acre.

On the other hand, the very land, such as has been referred to in the bill now pending, we have sold in New Mexico without any direction of Congress and derived a price as high as $90 per acre—some lands which were situated in the outskirts of a city, for example, where such a price could be derived from the land.

We invariably sell the land at public auction to the highest bidder after advertisement. We have a board in New Mexico whose business it is to call the attention of the people of the different States of the Union to the advantages of New Mexico as a place of residence and the advantages offered by these lands as an investment. We spend $15,000 a year in advertising these lands for the very purpose of securing the best price possible.

Mr. President, we are building that country. We will want all the money from this land that we can possibly receive.

It is provided here—and it is already provided in New Mexico, without the insistence of Congress upon it—that land shall be appraised and sold to the highest bidder upon such terms as the legislature may prescribe. I think if a Senator proposes to give lands to the State for State purposes, it is rather presumptuous that that Senator should say that the people of the State of Nevada do not know how to dispose of the gift. If they do not, then do not give it to them, but handle it yourself; and if you choose, in your charity, give them the proceeds. But if you are going to give them the land, the people of Nevada are just as shrewd, just as good financiers, just as good managers, just as honest, just as conscientious as the people of any other State in the Union. If the Senate is going to give those people lands for these purposes, do not accompany the gift with a sneer or an insult by providing that the State shall realize a certain price from the sale.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

H. J. Res. 98. Joint resolution making part of the appropriation, "Construction and machinery, increase of the Navy," in the naval act, approved March 3, 1915, available for the extension of building ways and equipment at the navy yards at New York and Mare Island, Cal.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 4954) directing the Secretary of War to reconvey a parcel of land to the Anshe Chesed Congregation, Vicksburg, Miss., and it was signed by the Vice President.

NAVY YARDS AT NEW YORK AND MARE ISLAND.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHILTON in the chair). The Chair lays before the Senate a joint resolution from the House of Representatives.

H. J. Res. 98. Joint resolution making part of the appropriation, "Construction and machinery, increase of the Navy," in the naval act approved March 3, 1915, available for the extension of building ways and equipment at the navy yards at New York and Mare Island, Cal., was read the first time by its title.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senate Committee on Naval Affairs this morning considered the joint resolution, and I ask for its immediate consideration and passage. I hope the Senate will give permission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator reports it from the Committee on Naval Affairs, I understand?

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes, sir. The Committee on Naval Affairs unanimously agreed to the passage of the joint resolution. It is a very important measure.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That of the money heretofore appropriated under the appropriation "Increase of the Navy, construction and machinery," in the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, approved March 3, 1915, the sums of not exceeding $100,000 for navy yard, New York, and not exceeding $500,000 for navy yard, Mare Island, Cal., are hereby made available for the extension of building ways and equipment necessary for the construction of battleships or battle cruisers in those yards.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. SMOOT. That the RECORD may be correctly understood, I will state that I asked the Senator from South Carolina if this particular measure was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. He assures me that it was. Therefore I have no objection to its consideration, but I should object if it had just come from the House and had not been considered by the committee. Without a reference to the committee, I would object, of course.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator is in error as to its being formally referred. I said the committee considered it. The committee, knowing it had passed the House yesterday, considered it without having had it referred.

Mr. SMOOT. The committee instructed the Senator from South Carolina to report the joint resolution?

Mr. TILLMAN. The committee instructed me to do just what I am doing now—to ask for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution and that it be passed.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection.

Mr. GALLINGER. I raised that question.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not hear the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I think it is a matter of such importance that it ought to be accompanied by a report——

Mr. TILLMAN. There is a report here.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. And there ought to be some opportunity to examine the joint resolution and its provisions and the report before it is taken up for consideration. Therefore I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is objection, and the joint resolution will be placed on the calendar.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

LANDS IN NEVADA.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business was laid aside but Senate bill 2520 has never been formally laid before the Senate. This is the first opportunity the Chair has had to do it, and he now lays before the Senate the pending bill.

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (S. 2520) granting to the State of Nevada 7,000,000 acres of land in said State for the use and benefit of the public schools of Nevada and the State University of the State of Nevada.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin has been recognized.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will yield in just a moment. I rose to say, regarding the colloquy which I had with the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH], that I think I trenched upon the courtesies of proper discussion in my references to his personal deportment in debate, and I wish to withdraw that portion of my remarks, although I submit that the Senator in a measure provoked me to say what I did.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I can understand the solicitude of Senators like the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] with reference to the ultimate realization by the people of the benefit of this grant. I am quite prepared to admit that in the past some of the grants to the States, particularly the swamp-land grants, have been improvidently administered. All I contend is that there has been a growing watchfulness in the various States in reference to these grants and that this bill affords all the guards that are necessary in the fixing of the price at which they are to be sold by a board organized under the law, and in its provision that no more than half a million acres in each year shall be sold, thus providing a period of 14 years for their ultimate disposition. If during that time wastefulness or lack of vigilance is displayed we can rest assured that the watchfulness of the people will be aroused.

The period of controlled legislatures has practically passed in the far West. The initiative and the referendum and the recall place weapons in the hands of the people which enable them to protect themselves against spoliators should they by chance be put into power.

I should regret any high limitation upon the price to be required, because experience has shown us that it is exceedingly difficult to dispose of these lands. Over 60 years ago a land grant of over 3,000,000 acres was made to the State of Nevada, and though liberal terms of sale were made, the State has not been able to complete the disposal of its lands until recently. So it has taken a period of over 50 years to dispose of a grant of 3,000,000 acres. It is therefore apparent that inasmuch as the State of Nevada had the choice of selection in the past and has been able during that period to dispose of only 3,000,000 acres at $1.25 an acre, there will be no rush for this land at the price limited in the bill. It seems to me we should not put the State in a strait-jacket, but we should give the officials and the boards of the State the opportunity of exercising their best business judgment with reference to the situation, whatever it may be.

We can rest assured that the university of that State will be on watch to see that every dollar possible is realized. The regents of that university will be watchful, the professors of the university will be watchful, the friends of the entire public-school system of the State will be watchful; and if there is any weakness shown in the administration of these lands by any official connected with them it will be the subject of an immediate and active political agitation, which will result in the rectification of any injudicious course.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, when this bill was first presented to the Senate it did not commend itself to me, as I thought it was very loosely drawn and that it was rather a wasteful way in which to dispose of the public lands of the United States. The debate has been very interesting and instructive, illuminating, I will say, and I am very much gratified that amendments have been made to the bill which have entirely changed the view I held concerning it.

I think as it has been amended the provision for valuing the lands and the care that will necessarily be exercised as a result of that procedure safeguards it in such a way that the money which will be received from the sale of the lands will be used for the laudable purposes of educating the children of the State of Nevada, which I trust some day will be one of the great States of the American Union.

I still think that the quantity of land granted is larger than is necessary, but that has been tested by two votes, and the majority of the Senate has voted down the amendments. Therefore, Mr. President, having withheld any factious opposition to the bill, it will give me pleasure to give my vote in favor of it when the question comes on the passage of the bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I understand there have been several amendments offered and some adopted. I should like to have the amendments which have been adopted read before voting on the measure. May I ask the Chair if there is an amendment now pending?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is an amendment pending.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will defer, then, my request until that is voted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] proposes to strike out of the amendment heretofore agreed to on page 2, line 7, "$1.25" and insert "$3." The senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] proposes as a substitute to that amendment to strike out of the amendment heretofore agreed to the following words: "and at not less than $1.25 per acre."

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it seems to me that the question ought first to be put upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin. The amendment to that amendment is rather incongruous, it appears to me. I submit it to the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It seems to the Chair that that would be the logical way. Without objection, the Chair will put the question first on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. McCUMBER. Now let us have that amendment read.

Mr. GALLINGER. It fixes a minimum of $3.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 7, in the amendment, which is as follows:

That the land herein granted shall be disposed of to citizens of the United States by sale to the highest bidder at public auction upon due notice and at not less than $1.25 per acre.

The Senator from Wisconsin proposes to strike out "$1.25 per acre" and to insert "$3 per acre."

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move to strike out the entire limitation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair suggests that the logical way would be first to vote on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin, and then upon the Senator's motion to strike out.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well.

Mr. McCUMBER. Before the matter is voted upon, I judge by the statement made by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] that there has been adopted an amendment providing for the appraisement of the land.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. If there is such an amendment, I should like to hear it read, for I think it might govern my vote upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. For the information of the Senate, the Secretary will read the portion of the bill to which the Senator from North Dakota refers.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 12, after the word "land," there has been inserted an amendment which reads "under the terms and in the manner provided in this bill." Following that, an amendment has been agreed to, as follows:

Provided further, That none of the lands herein granted shall be sold or disposed of until their value shall have been appraised and fixed by the State Commission of Industry, Agriculture, and Irrigation of the State of Nevada, or such other board or commission as may hereafter be created or designated for such purposes by the Legislature of the State of Nevada; and none of said lands shall be sold for less than the price so appraised and fixed by said commission or board.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, upon that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]. For that reason I withhold my vote.

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Having a general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], who is absent, I am unable to get a transfer and must, therefore, withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. My colleague [Mr. TOWNSEND] is unavoidably absent from the Chamber on account of illness in his family. I wish this announcement to stand for the day.

Mr. CATRON. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] to the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] and vote "nay."

Mr. MYERS. Has the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that he has not.

Mr. MYERS. I have a pair with that Senator, but I transfer that pair to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (after having voted in the affirmative). I observe, upon the recapitulation of the vote, that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] has not voted. I have a general pair with that Senator and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], but I see that he has not voted. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] and will let my vote stand.

The result was announced—yeas 16, nays 47, as follows:

So Mr. LA FOLLETTE's amendment was rejected.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is an amendment pending which was offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the words "and at not less than $1.25 per acre."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let us have the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, on page 2, line 9, after the word "Provided," I move to insert the word "further."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, I rose a moment ago to say that I have felt favorably disposed toward the bill, but I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada a question or two, to see that I fully understand it. I should like to ask the Senator about how many acres of unappropriated land will remain in Nevada after this grant has been made?

Mr. PITTMAN. About 60,000,000 acres.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. And is the remaining unappropriated land practically all desert land with no water supply?

Mr. PITTMAN. That is true.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

REPORT ON ELECTRIC POWER DEVELOPMENT (S. DOC. NO. 316).

Mr. FLETCHER, Mr. LA FOLLETTE, and Mr. SHIELDS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks he ought to recognize the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS]. The Senator from Tennessee was on the floor and is in charge of the bill which was laid aside.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Chair ought to recognize whoever addressed the Chair first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the Chair ought to recognize the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I want to move to take up the resolution providing for the printing of the report entitled "Electric power development in the United States and concentration in its ownership and control." I think we can probably dispose of it in a short time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that that can not be done unless the unfinished business is laid aside. The unfinished business was laid aside temporarily, with the understanding that it should be resumed on the passage of the bill advocated by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN].

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the unanimous consent was, I think, that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside until the bill of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] was disposed of. Under that unanimous consent, the bill of the Senator from Nevada having been disposed of, the unfinished business is before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is what the Chair stated.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, is it not in order at any time, even though the unfinished business is before the Senate, to move to take up any other bill on the calendar? I understood such a motion was always in order. If it is not, there is no way, except by unanimous consent, to get the unfinished business out of the way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair presumes that is right. The Chair does not know anything to the contrary.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the fact is the motion of the Senator from Florida is perfectly in order. The effect of it would be, however, to displace the unfinished business.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Exactly.

Mr. NORRIS. That would only be temporary. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Tennessee whether he has any objection to that?

Mr. SHIELDS. I can not give consent to take up any other subject.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is not a question of the Senator's consenting. It is a question of whether the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the resolution which I have indicated. I will say to the Senator that I am not antagonistic to this bill; I want to proceed with it; but this is a matter which I am sure will take only a very few minutes. I myself will not take two minutes to present it, and it is a matter that ought to be disposed of. It is immaterial to me whether it is disposed of in one way or the other. My motion is to proceed to the consideration of Senate resolution 87.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the resolution be stated.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Florida that the best way would be to ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. The Senator can then ask the Senate to consider his resolution without interfering with the unfinished business, but leaving it with that status.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will say to the Senator that there was objection to that course.

Mr. NELSON. But if the resolution to which the Senator referred is taken up by motion, it will displace the unfinished business.

Mr. FLETCHER. There was objection to laying aside the unfinished business.

Mr. NELSON. I suggest to the Senator that he ask to have the unfinished business temporarily laid aside in order to consider the resolution to which he has referred. If that is agreed to, then it leaves the bill of the Senator from Tennessee the unfinished business, and the Senator from Florida can proceed with his resolution.

Mr. FLETCHER. That has been asked, and that request has been denied.

Mr. NELSON. I was not aware of that fact.

Mr. FLETCHER. So that there is nothing for me to do but to make this motion.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida has the floor. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I should like to inquire if the motion of the Senator from Florida prevailed, would it not displace the unfinished business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks it would.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then I hope the motion will not prevail.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield to me just for a moment without giving up the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do. I will say, however, before yielding that while the statement of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] is true, I do not think the displacement will last very long, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. MYERS. With the consent of the Senator from Florida, and thanking him for giving me the opportunity, I now give notice that when the unfinished business of the Senate, Senate bill 3331, shall have been finally disposed of, I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 408) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes, and that it be made then the unfinished business of the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I want, in reply, to say that I trust the Senate will not agree to any such motion. I think we are entitled to dispose of our business as it stands on the calendar. I gave notice on yesterday that I should urge, immediately after the disposition of the present unfinished business, that the Senate take up Calendar No. 18, which is the next bill following the bill which we have just disposed of relating to the State of Nevada.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will my colleague permit me?

Mr. JONES. I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is the unfinished business, but there is a motion pending to take up Senate resolution No. 87.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. MYERS. With the consent of the Senator from Florida——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida has the floor.

Mr. MYERS. If the Senator from Florida will permit me one more word, I give notice that at the proper time I shall make the motion I have indicated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be for the Senate to determine what effect it may give to the notice when the time comes.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I have no objection to including in my motion, if the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] thinks that preferable, that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate resolution 87.

Mr. JONES. I ask for the regular order, Mr. President.

Mr. FLETCHER. This is the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is the motion of the Senator from Florida to take up Senate resolution No. 87. The question is on that motion. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask for a division.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the demand for the yeas and nays sustained?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the motion of the Senator from Florida prevails and his resolution is taken up for consideration by the Senate, does it not displace the unfinished business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not think there is any doubt about that. There is not any doubt in the mind of the Chair. The Chair may be wrong, but that is his judgment.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, that is the second time that question has been submitted. I want to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. NORRIS. If this motion prevails and the resolution to print the document pertaining to the concentration in the ownership and control of electric power, which concerns the bill that is now the unfinished business, is discussed and passed this afternoon, will it not then be in order to take up the water-power bill?

Mr. GALLINGER. On motion.

Mr. NORRIS. On motion; and will that not be the unfinished business to-morrow under those conditions?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no doubt that it will be the unfinished business when the Senate makes it such.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will say, Mr. President, in that connection, and in reply to the remark of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], that the reason for presenting this request is because it has to do with a subject which has a bearing upon the pending bill. I do not say that the bill ought to wait until all the material is printed, but certain material here has an important bearing on that bill, and for that reason I think it ought to be printed now.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH. With the permission of the Senator from Florida, I desire to inquire of the Senator whether it would not be possible to secure unanimous consent that the document referred to in the resolution be printed in the manner which the chairman has indicated?

Mr. FLETCHER. I should be very glad to pursue that course, and, if there is no objection, I will prefer that request. The suggestion is made that I ask unanimous consent to have the material referred to in the resolution printed. It is in three parts—part 1, part 2, and part 3. Part 1, which is the real report, could be printed in 24 hours, and parts 2 and 3 could be printed probably in a short time thereafter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state the request. The Senator from Florida now asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for the purpose of taking up Senate resolution 87.

Mr. FLETCHER. No; I did not ask that, Mr. President. The motion is pending; but I ask unanimous consent that the document covered by the resolution be printed, as I have stated.

Mr. GALLINGER. The resolution is on the calendar. The Senator can not well ask that the document shall be printed. The Senator can ask unanimous consent to have it considered; that is all.

Mr. FLETCHER. Very well.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I object to unanimous consent to take up the resolution because it would displace the unfinished business. I have no objection to the resolution; on the contrary, I favor it. If unanimous consent can be given for a motion to order it printed, so as not to displace the pending unfinished business, I have no objection to it; but, on the contrary, as I have said, I favor it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Then I ask unanimous consent to temporarily lay aside the unfinished business, and then to take up Senate resolution 87, and agree to it.

Mr. SHIELDS. I understood the Senator's proposition was to ask unanimous consent for an order that the material covered by the resolution be printed.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] raised the point that there is a resolution reported by the committee providing for the printing of this document, and therefore we have to act upon the resolution. I have no objection to taking either course.

Mr. SHIELDS. Unanimous consent would obviate that, would it not?

Mr. GALLINGER. No; it would not.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; if the unanimous consent to pass the resolution included unanimous consent to print the document.

Mr. SHIELDS. Then I suggest to the Senator to withdraw that request and make a motion to take up the resolution, laying aside the unfinished business temporarily.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, there is not any difficulty about the situation presented by the request of the Senator from Florida. Of course the first action of the Senate would be to temporarily lay aside the unfinished business. An unconditional request to lay it aside would carry it over until to-morrow at 2 o'clock; but if it is laid aside subject to a specific condition, such, for instance, as the right to consider Senate resolution 87, upon the conclusion of that I think the unfinished business would automatically come before the Senate. It would be necessary for the Senator to make a request that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for the consideration of the resolution. I doubt if he could make a compound motion that the unfinished business be laid aside and that the other resolution be passed. So I think our difficulty is more of form than of substance. If the Senator from Tennessee is of the opinion that I inferred him to be from the statements made by him, there is no difficulty in making the two requests—first, to temporarily lay aside the unfinished business, and then to consider the resolution referred to by the Senator from Florida.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the usual way.

Mr. FLETCHER. I make that request, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida asks unanimous consent to lay aside the unfinished business temporarily for the purpose of taking up and considering Senate resolution 87. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Chair lays before the Senate Senate resolution 87, which the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 87), as follows:

Resolved, That the report entitled "Electric power development in the United States and concentration in its ownership and control," transmitted to the Senate by the Secretary of Agriculture on January 20, 1916, in response to Senate resolution No. 544, Sixty-third Congress, be printed as a Senate document, together with accompanying tables and illustrations.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, in reference to the resolution I will state very briefly that when we had it up several days ago there were some objections raised to printing the report on the idea that the material was not at all new and that it had been previously printed. I do not care to debate the matter, but I should like to state that the Forester, Mr. Graves, who submitted the report to the Secretary of Agriculture, states that it is substantially new and is based upon much data that was not available when previous statements were made to the Public Lands Committees of the Senate and the House. The report has never been printed in the form now submitted to the Senate and only fragmentary portions of it have been printed in any other form. The entire report was prepared and completed after the resolution adopted by the Senate calling for such a report. Of course a portion of the report was based upon data already in the possession of the Forest Service, but, in addition thereto, much new information was gathered especially for this report. The Forester believes it is highly important that the entire report should be printed, that the public may have the benefit of the full information upon which the conclusions contained in part 1 are based. There are innumerable references in part 1 to the text, maps, charts, and diagrams printed in the two other parts, and to print part 1 separately would make public only the conclusions of the report, which contain frequent specific references to the other parts that would be called to the attention of the public but would thus be withheld from its consideration.

The following paragraph is from the introduction to the report:

In order that anyone who may not agree with the conclusions reached in this report may have the information from which to draw his independent conclusions, the entire data upon which the report is based are presented in detail in part 2 and part 3.

So that part 1, which is now available and which can be printed, as I have said, within 24 hours, or within a short time at any rate, would cover practically the real and the immediate needs of the report, and parts 2 and 3 could come along as it might be possible to complete them. Therefore I ask that the resolution be adopted as it has been reported.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, is there not pending an amendment offered by the Senator from Montana?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, it seems to me that the amendment ought to be discussed I am heartily in favor of the proposition to print the manuscript portion of the report, and then, after examination of that part by Senators, I am perfectly willing to take a vote on the question as to whether the illustrations should be printed. I may say that I earnestly want the manuscript part of the report before the Senate, but I am opposed to printing the illustrations, involving an expenditure of $13,000, until we can examine the report and see whether it is necessary to print the illustrations.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, lines 7 and 8, it is proposed to strike out the words "together with accompanying tables and illustrations," and insert "without accompanying illustrations."

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, a day or two ago I objected to a request for unanimous consent for the publication of this report. It seemed to me, at that time, that it was a useless expenditure of the public money. I am not quite sure yet that it is not a useless expenditure of the public money. I am satisfied that so far as the purposes of this debate are concerned the printing of the report in the shape suggested a day or two ago will not be worth the money that we will have to pay for it. Some suggestion has been made, however, to the effect that the document will be of great value in itself.

I am animated simply by a desire to save the public money. I understand that is not a popular pastime, and not one very largely engaged in by the Members of this body. In conversations I have had with the chairman of the Printing Committee, the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], the man who is charged with the responsibility in these matters, he has stated to me that in his opinion it is vitally important to have this document printed. Therefore I did not object to the request for unanimous consent.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I think when this matter was under discussion the other day, and at the time when the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] offered his amendment, the pending amendment, the desire was expressed that part 1, or the printed portion of the report, should be printed; and I think the amendment of the Senator from Montana was offered with that in view, and not because he objected to the printing of the entire report. To my mind, the entire report will be a very valuable report, and will not only serve us in this discussion on the pending bill, or the bill relating to water power derived from navigable waters or streams, but will also serve us when we come to the discussion of the other pending water-power bill. Besides that, I think it will be a work of great value in the future, and for other purposes, as a reference work. Where a sum amounting to $20,000, with so much labor, has been expended in a work of this kind, I think it highly fitting that that work should be published, not only for the use of the Senate but for the public generally.

In view of what I have said in regard to the intent of the Senator from Montana in offering his amendment the other day, I offer as a substitute the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). The Senator from South Dakota offers an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Montana, which the Secretary will state.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, upon a more careful examination of this matter made by myself I am satisfied that the report without the illustrations, at least in part 1, would be of comparatively little value. Upon reflection, I am satisfied that the amendment which I offered ought not to be adopted.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the Chair understand: Does the Senator ask leave to withdraw his amendment?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Without objection, that may be done.

Mr. STERLING. Then I offer my amendment as an original amendment. It is applicable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota offers an amendment, which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 8, after the word "illustrations" and before the period, it is proposed to insert a colon and the following:

Provided, That Part I of said report be first printed and furnished to the Senate at the earliest practicable day.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have no objection to that, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota does not change in any particular the cost of printing the document. If the amendment offered by the Senator is agreed to, it simply means that the first part will be printed as soon as possible, and the second part the same way, and the third part the same way. The cost to the Government will be $21,000, with the amendment that has been offered now by the Senator from South Dakota, just the same as it would have been if the original resolution was agreed to. It does not in any way change the original resolution, because that program would have been followed no matter whether this amendment is agreed to or not.

If the Senate wants to print Part I for the use of the Senate, without the great bulk of illustrations that constitutes the real cost, then that can be accomplished by a simple amendment offered to this resolution, and will not exclude the illustrations in Part I; or, in other words, it can be accomplished by offering an amendment, after the word "That" on line 1 of the resolution, to insert the words "Part I of," so as to read:

That Part I of the report entitled "Electric power development in the United States and concentration of its ownership and control"—

And so on; but leaving in the words "together with accompanying tables and illustrations."

As I understand, in Part I there are tables and illustrations that are necessary to explain the report itself; that is, the meaning of the report. The other illustrations are entirely different from the illustrations that are in Part I. That would be the amendment which the Senate ought to adopt, if they are going to simply print Part I of the report, with illustrations in that report to explain, perhaps, some of the questions in that particular part of the report.

Mr. President, the Senator says he has a letter from the Forester, in which the Forester states that this matter never has been printed in the form now presented. Nobody has ever claimed that it has been; but I do claim that the great bulk of the testimony has been printed in the form of committee hearings. All the information that ever will be needed in the discussion of any bill that is before Congress affecting the water powers of this country, whether it be the Shields dam bill or the so-called Ferris water-power bill, can be found in the three volumes of the printed hearings. Senators have asked if information has been printed covering the following questions: "We would like to know where the water powers of the country are located, and how much of the power is developed and how much undeveloped." All any Senator has to do to secure that information is to turn to page 891 of the volume of hearings and he will find it complete, as reported by Mr. Merrill, the author of the report that we are now asked to have printed.

And so I could go on and take the time of the Senate, if I wanted to, and point to the testimony that has been given and printed by the Senate upon every question that is involved in the bill. In these printed hearings are illustrations, though not as many as are now asked to be printed; and any Senator who is at all interested in the questions involved, and wants to get at the very meat of them, is not going to wade through a lot of diagrams, tables, and pictures that will be printed if this resolution passes, and will cost the Government some $14,000.

Mr. President, I want the Senate to understand distinctly that this $21,000 is only the beginning of the cost. There is no question but that just as soon as this report is printed as a public document there will be a request for the printing of additional copies, and they will not be for the information of the Members of the Senate or the House; not at all. They will make rather an elegant set of books when printed, I think some 17 volumes, and when bound will be put into libraries throughout the country and never opened nor looked at unless the children look at the pictures contained therein. Nobody can tell what the expense is going to be.

I say now that I have about come to the conclusion that it is next to useless to try to prevent the waste of public money by the Senate. It is not a very pleasant thing to undertake, if I mistake not the feeling that is sometimes expressed upon the floor of this Chamber.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. JONES. I understood the Senator to say that there would be 17 volumes of this water-power report. Is that correct?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not remember just how many volumes there would be. I will ask the Senator from Florida whether an estimate has been made of the number of volumes?

Mr. FLETCHER. There would not be over three volumes. This volume is Part I, and there are two others, but the others are maps and drawings and diagrams. Put into smaller shape, I should not think the whole report would make over three times this amount.

Mr. JONES. I know that the Senator from Utah is generally very accurate, and I wondered if he had made a mistake in saying "17 volumes."

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the Senator from Utah is thinking about the report of the Industrial Commission.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Washington that I did have in mind the report of the Industrial Commission, which no doubt will be printed by the Senate at a cost of at least $129,000, and perhaps $220,000. It might just as well be a million dollars as $10, because it is voted just as easily. Nobody pays it but the people of the United States, and poor Uncle Sam can stand it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator, then, did not have reference to this report when he said it was going to consist of 17 volumes?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I did not. When I referred to the 17 volumes I had in mind the Industrial Commission's report, which, no doubt, will be reported to the Senate for printing at an early date.

Mr. NORRIS. What the Senator was discussing lately when he was talking about an expenditure of $200,000 was that report, was it not?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I said that that had reference to the Industrial Commission's report.

Mr. NORRIS. I will suggest to the Senator also, in that respect, that a battleship costs $18,000,000, and we had better cut this out so that we will have enough money left to build one, if that is the line of his argument.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Nebraska is not making this argument.

Mr. NORRIS. You can tell that from the argument.

Mr. SMOOT. When he speaks upon this question he can speak about battleships or anything else that he desires to, or what they cost or what they may not cost. The only question now before the Senate is the question of whether we shall print the report and pay $21,000 as a beginning—and I warn you it is only a beginning.

As far as volume 1 is concerned I think it will be referred to by Senators. I have no objection at all to its being printed. That volume contains all the information that any Senator, in my opinion, will ever desire to look at.

If the Senate of the United States wants to vote this money, well and good. I have done my duty in calling attention to the expense attached to it, and what the advantage will be to the Senate if it is printed.

I know, Mr. President, that it would be much easier for me, and perhaps for every Senator here, to say: "Why, yes; print it. Print as many of them as you want." We would then have the commendation of a certain publicity bureau that is running here in Washington and has been for years. We would be commended for it and patted upon the back; whereas I expect, of course, as in the past, that everything that is done that is not absolutely in accord with the bureau's views will be criticized in the most severe terms, and literature will be sent broadcast all over the United States telling what a reactionary the man objecting to the expenditure of money is.

Why, after the volumes are printed it is not only a question of printing; they will be sent through the mail to friends of Senators that may hear of the printing and who will write to the Senators and have copies of the report sent to them. We will have to pay for carrying these copies through the mail. I can not tell now what the expense will be, but in my opinion it will be $50,000 at the very least.

I suppose the Senators have made up their minds. I do not think anything I could say, or anything anybody else could say, would change a vote. I do want a vote upon the matter, however, and I do want to know whether the Senate of the United States desires to expend the public money for what I consider, in the main, a waste of money.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will ask if the Senator does not agree that the further expense of which he speaks will depend altogether on the further action of Congress? Neither House could order additional copies or a reprint of this document, because the amount involved would exceed what either House is permitted by its own action to expend. It would depend altogether on the further action of Congress.

Mr. SMOOT. The same power that is trying to force it to be printed now will be here for a reprint, and I have no doubt that they will be yielded to, just the same as they are yielded to in their demand that the report be printed as a public document.

Mr. President, with what little I have said on this subject before, and with the few words that I have spoken to the Senate to-day, I shall leave it entirely to the Senate to vote as they please, whether they want to vote for part 1—I shall offer an amendment to that effect—or whether they want to vote to print all the report and to send these illustrations and beautiful lithographic pictures, that amount to nothing, broadcast throughout this country.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I had perhaps unduly congratulated myself that the difference between us upon the subject of this resolution had been compromised by the resolution offered—I think last Friday—by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. Upon that day we had a renewal of the discussion of the subject, and shortly before it ended the Senator introduced an amendment to the pending resolution providing for printing what is known, I think, as volume No. 1 of the proposed document. That was more than acceptable to me; and I am satisfied that if we could have reached a vote at that time, as then seemed probable, the matter would have been disposed of, at least for the time being.

Mr. President, I am painfully conscious of the fact that the opposition which I shall make to the printing of the entire document may be ascribed to invidious motives. Indeed, I have been painfully conscious also of the fact that objections to the expenditure of money, and particularly small sums, are frequently supposed to be actuated by some other motive than the desire to prevent needless expense. It is, therefore, with some degree of reluctance that I still object to the printing of this document with the proposed exhibits.

Of course my views with regard to the subject of leasing the public lands, and converting the Government of the United States into a landlord of a vast estate, are well known here. Because they are well known in this body, it is obvious that an objection upon my part to the publication of a document of this sort might be thought to be prompted more by a desire to hamper the discussion of the situation, and the successful outcome of the bills that are soon to be introduced upon the subject, than to a desire to save money. Notwithstanding that, Mr. President, I feel impelled, not only by my sense of duty as a Senator but because of the attitude which my party ostensibly, at least, has assumed upon the subject, to protest against needless expenditures of the public money when they seem to me to be needless.

I do not believe in a parsimony which is actuated only by a desire to be penurious or to refuse to spend money where it may be necessary. There are multitudes of objects for which the expenditure of the public treasure is absolutely necessary; and it would be most unwise to present objections, whether specious or substantial, to appropriations that are needed for the operation of the Government and for the welfare of the public. But the very fact that these demands are here and that they are constantly increasing suggests to me the necessity of objecting wherever a proposed expenditure, however small it may be, either absolutely or relatively, is unnecessary.

In this instance the amount which is involved is comparatively small; but it is the accumulation of these small amounts which in the aggregate presents such an appalling figure at the close of a Congressional session. It is due to the comparative ease with which an insignificant sum may be voted out of the Treasury, for purposes which, of course, are entirely legitimate, that the public is confronted with an enormous aggregate sum when our labors are at an end and we have adjourned. It is therefore necessary, if we are going earnestly and honestly to reduce the expenditures of the Government, to look as well to those which are insignificant in amount as to those which are very large; perhaps more so, because the latter, by the very fact of their size, attract public attention, while those which are small do not do so.

Mr. President, I want to say with regard to this particular matter that if it were necessary, in my judgment, in order to establish the existence of a monopoly in water power, that we should issue a report accompanied by illustrations, maps, and diagrams, whatever the cost was I should be in favor of it. But I am unable—perhaps because of my obtuseness—to understand how a proposition of that sort can be supported or proven by illustrations, by tables, by diagrams, or by other accessories to the results of an investigation. There are some things, perhaps, which may be demonstrated in that way, and in that way only, but certainly not a proposition of this kind.

I do not think any man who has studied the subject to the extent that I have—and I think most Senators have—can doubt for a moment the fact that there is in the United States a monopoly or series of monopolies in hydroelectric power, in its generation, and in its sale. It is here; it has been with us for some time, and it always will be with us, because it is one of those elements which necessarily form the nucleus of a monopoly. You can no more avoid a monopoly in the generation and distribution of electric power than you can avoid the operation of the law of gravity.

Water, gas, transportation, lines of communication, and methods of communication, this great element known as the electric current—these, Mr. President, are inseparable from monopoly; and as a consequence they all should be in control of and owned by the public, through their governmental agencies, and operated for the benefit of the public. That is a condition which can be neither added to nor subtracted from by all the diagrams in the world.

Why, then, should we expend the sum of twenty-odd thousand dollars in embellishing and illustrating a report in order to prove something that is self-evident, in order to establish something which is so apparent? No man can avoid the acknowledgment of the fact who will look at the situation as it is from one end of this country to the other. In any legislation by this body, whether it take the form of a leasing bill or whether we go back to the old system which prevailed before a leasing bill was designed or suggested, whether we legislate or fail to legislate, that monopoly is going to continue. No power on earth can break it except the power of the Government exercised on its own account, which will not break it, but will transfer and transpose it from private into public hands.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. Now, Mr. President, feeling that way, I object, and object most strenuously, to the publication of anything connected with this report except what is called "volume 1."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I simply wish to ask the Senator a question. Is it not a fact that the action of the Government of the United States in withdrawing water-power sites and preventing the development of water power in all the Western States has had the effect of giving a monopoly to those who were first in the business?

Mr. THOMAS. I think, Mr. President, it has accelerated that process of monopoly which was an inevitable operation. There is no question but that it has strengthened and solidified a situation which perhaps would not have become so complete at so early a period of time.

Why, then, Mr. President, should we expend this money? "Oh," Senators say, and the argument is made outside, "it is necessary that we should incur this expense in order to give circulation to this document, and thereby demonstrate to the people the existence of a monopoly, legislation to correct which is needed."

Mr. President, I think it was said by President Taft that the way to bury a fact, in Washington at least, is to put it in a report or in a mass of testimony going with the report. That is the statement of an obvious truth which the experience of all of us, I think, justifies.

There is not one man out of ten thousand who, on receiving a copy of this report, will pay any attention whatever to this huge mass of diagrams and illustrations. On the contrary, their number and extent will repel rather than attract his attention.

I saw the other day I think it was six or eight volumes, perhaps more, of a report of an industrial commission, composed of Members of the House of Representatives, which visited different parts of the country and took vast masses of testimony upon the industrial and economic condition of the country. It was a commission which at that time attracted much attention. Indeed it was quite as important and quite as prominent in 1901 as the so-called Walsh Industrial Commission in more recent times. Yet I venture to say that 90 per cent of the people of the United States not only never read it or anything else except the report, but that 95 per cent of the people have forgotten that there ever was such a commission.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. The cost of the publication of the document certainly mounted into the thousands of dollars. It was a complete and absolute waste, and was done for the identical purpose which it is now proposed to publish this document, to enlighten the people with reference to a matter which has already been so exploited both in Congress and in the public press as that no definite information can very well be obtained about it. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I was going to say to the Senator that my impression is the report he refers to consists of 19 volumes and it cost some $140,000. I quite agree with the Senator that that amount was exorbitant and that there was a waste of money in that connection. This is an entirely different situation. I should like to draw the attention of the Senator to this thought. Here was a resolution offered in the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate with all information in his possession as to the ownership and control of the water-power sites in the United States, showing what proportion of such water-power sites is in private ownership and by what companies and corporations such sites in private ownership are owned and controlled; what horsepower has been developed and what proportion of it is owned and controlled by such private companies and corporations; and any facts bearing upon the question as to the existence of a monopoly in the ownership and control of hydroelectric power in the United States.

That resolution was passed by the unanimous consent of the Senate, and the department was directed to do this great work. It has gone on at an enormous expense and done the work. Here is the result of it. Is it right that we should order this printing to be done? Shall it be treated as something done that it is not worth while to print and chuck it in a pigeonhole and let it rest? It is better to say that it is worth while to print it and that the information is important, that it concerns one of the greatest resources of the country, and that the material ought to be put in a shape where it can be of useful service.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for the information which he has given us concerning the extent, both in volume and in expense, of the report to which I had just referred. I saw about five or six volumes of the document at the time mentioned, and assumed, as it seems, erroneously that the number of volumes then apparent constituted the entire report. I am now informed that that report consisted of 19 volumes and cost somewhere in the neighborhood of $140,000. The Senator says, and says very properly, that much of that money was squandered; and this, he thinks, will not be the case, because our methods of printing are more economic, and also, I presume, because of this resolution——

Mr. FLETCHER. There is not so much of it.

Mr. THOMAS. And because there is not so much of it; but that is simply a difference in degree. If it is unnecessary to spend one dollar, it is just as much incumbent upon this body to decline to do it as would be the case if the amount involved were a million dollars; the principle is the same. The sum, though insignificant, frequently results, of course, in the accomplishment of a measure or the carrying out of a purpose, whereas the larger defeats itself by reason of its magnitude and the evident effect upon the public sentiment of the expenditure.

Mr. President, coming to the resolution to which the Senator kindly called my attention at the time he was reading, I approached his desk with a view of obtaining a momentary possession of the document itself and exhibiting it to the Senate; but I see that it is not there and that I can not do it. This resolution is one which requires that the Secretary of Agriculture be—directed to furnish the Senate with all information in his possession as to the ownership and control of the water-power sites in the United States, showing what proportion of such water-power sites is in private ownership—

I will stop right there. Is it necessary to print this huge document, which has been furnished by the Secretary in compliance with this resolution, in order to show what proportion of water-power sites are in private ownership? Will not that appear in the volume that it is proposed by us to publish? Suppose that instead of the report which has been furnished here the report to the Secretary of Agriculture of everyone of his subordinates had been added to it and the proposition be made to print it, could it in any wise add to the information which the Senate desires? What the Senate wants to know and what the people through the Senate are supposed to want to know is the proportion of the water-power sites that are in private ownership, a matter which can be stated in a few dozen pages at least—and by what companies and corporations such sites in private ownership are owned and controlled—

Mr. President, that could be included within the limits of certainly not more than 25 or 26 pages, and it is also information that has been embodied in other reports and in other printed forms more than once, and which are in the possession of the Senate—what horsepower has been developed and what proportion of it is owned and controlled by such private companies and corporations—

Mr. President, a proposition of that kind made by one concerning another would bring conclusions, statements, and figures, not a vast mass of illustrations and diagrams which at most can only confirm the report that will be taken as true as a matter of course from one of the departments of the Government until the contrary appears—and any facts bearing upon the question as to the existence of a monopoly in the ownership and control of hydroelectric power in the United States.

If the Secretary of Agriculture is possessed of facts bearing upon this question not included in the things which are specifically requested, I suppose it will be his duty to comply, and that he has complied with the order; but is there any corresponding duty upon us to publish these facts in the shape of diagrams and illustrations at an expense which is altogether out of proportion to the importance of the subject and which will not accomplish any purpose whatever? A man who does not know that there is a monopoly of water power in the United States never can learn that fact from diagrams and illustrations.

Mr. SMOOT. I might say to the Senator, if he will refer to page 703 in the volume of the hearings before the committee he will find not only the testimony but the diagrams as well.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; and I have seen these illustrations in the public press [exhibiting]. Mr. President, that looks something like a spider's web in a state of ruin. Some pages are perhaps not so complex. The object of the particular illustration which the Senator called to my attention is designed to show the existence of one director in 10 companies and that on the opposite page the existence of one director in 4 companies. We all know, Mr. President, what the system of interlocking directorates is without a lot of cobwebs to illustrate it, and the man who does not know it will never learn it from his examination of these cobwebs.

That is a simple proposition. We know that one of the economic abuses of the twentieth century and the latter part of the nineteenth century has been the so-called system of interlocking directorates by means of which vast interests are associated and combined together, actually although ostensibly independent, and that through the operation of such a situation a condition of economic and industrial monopoly has been created that has threatened the social and the political future of the country. We knew that, Mr. President, before the genius who drew this illustration ever designed it. We knew that just as well before examining it as afterwards, and we do not examine it at all. It is an illustration. It costs something to print it.

I come back to the plea, Is it necessary in order that this resolution should be complied with that we should print everything the Secretary has sent in when the things that are mentioned specifically are already in print?

Mr. President, I have no desire to delay a vote upon this subject. Perhaps, as a matter of fact, we are losing more money in discussing it than we would by take a vote and getting rid of it. It costs a little something to run the Senate of the United States in this day. But I want nevertheless to renew the motion made by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. I will ask the Senator if he has a copy of that motion? If not, I will state my motion orally.

Mr. WALSH. I have not a copy of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that there is an amendment now pending. The amendment of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] must first be voted upon. The amendment of the Senator from South Dakota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the resolution the following proviso:

Provided, That Part I of said report be first printed and furnished to the Senate at the earliest practicable day.

Mr. THOMAS. That, of course, assumes the printing of the entire document. The amendment offered by the Senator from Montana was for printing Part I. I want to offer, as a substitute, that the committee be authorized to print Part I only of the document. The Senator from Utah suggests to me that my substitute read as follows:

Resolved, That the first part——

Mr. FLETCHER. I suggest to the Senator to insert, after the word "the," the words "Part I of the report."

Mr. THOMAS. I will not insist upon any substitute. I will offer to amend the resolution of the Senator from Florida by inserting the words "Part I of" after the word "That," on the first line of the resolution.

Mr. FLETCHER. The first question is, I think, on the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING].

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is a pending amendment now.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator from Colorado can offer his amendment afterwards.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the Senator from South Dakota has a pending amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. I offer it now, because it goes to the heart of the resolution, while the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota is merely designed to determine the manner in which the entire document shall be printed.

Mr. STERLING. I wish simply to say that my amendment was offered with a view to the printing of the entire report.

Mr. THOMAS. I so understood it.

Mr. STERLING. Yes; but in the discussion the other day it was stated that the part most needed would be part 1 of the report, which would contain the printed matter. It was understood, too, that it would take some time to print the entire report, and in that way we might not have it for use in the discussion of the two water-power bills. Hence I offered this amendment providing for the printing of part 1 and furnishing the same to the Senate at the earliest practicable day.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. STERLING. If the Senator will just excuse me for a moment, in regard to the general proposition, Mr. President, I wish simply to say that here is the report of the Secretary of Agriculture made upon a resolution passed by the Senate at the last Congress calling for full information upon this great question. The report has been produced at considerable expense; at an expense, I understand, of about $20,000, and after great labor in gathering the data, and now when we most need it for use in these discussions comes the proposition to make the report of no use by not having it printed.

I think, Mr. President, it is a mistake, and there ought to be no objection to the printing of the entire report. I believe these maps and illustrations will be of great value, not only now but hereafter. This entire report will indicate the present development of water power throughout the United States. It will be a work for reference in all future discussions of this subject when Congress comes to the consideration of such development

It seems to me that the report ought to be printed. As I said, my amendment was offered with a view to getting that portion that would be of most practical use to us as soon as possible.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I trust that this entire report may be printed, and I want to take up a few of the objections which have come mostly from the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Colorado on the ground that it is an expense and is going to cost the Government money. However, in their discussion they wandered off and talked about something else that was expensive. We can get quite nearly to the expense we have already put the Government to and what it will cost us now to print the entire document.

Let me say that, in my judgment, if it be printed as a document it will become in the future a handbook on this subject. It is the most concise and the greatest collection of data upon the question of water power that has ever been printed anywhere at any time by anybody. I gather that from the review that has been made of it by the official who has had charge of the collection and the gathering of this evidence.

First, as to the cost. The Secretary of Agriculture has done this work in pursuance of a resolution of the Senate.

Mr. THOMAS. If the Senator will allow me, my understanding is that it was done by the Secretary of Agriculture long before, or at least a considerable time before, the resolution was introduced and passed.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator, in the main, is mistaken.

Mr. THOMAS. I may be. That is my information. It comes from an authoritative source.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator probably was not here when the Senator from Florida read a letter showing about what proportion is new and what had been gathered up before. He probably was not here the other day when I put into the RECORD a letter from the Chief Forester showing what is new and what had been printed before.

Now, we have an estimate of cost here up to date. The Secretary's office said it has cost now up to date to comply with the order of the Senate in gathering together this information $22,700. That includes the salaries of the men who are regularly engaged in the department and who have been detailed to this work.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will please let me finish this statement, I will be obliged to him.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I want to ask a question on that very point.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to finish this point and then I will be glad to have the Senator interrupt me.

Of this amount $19,500 has been apportioned chargeable to employees who are already in the service and whose salary we would have paid anyway, whether they were engaged in this or in nothing or in some other work, so that the extra expense was only $3,200.

In the estimate, that it will cost in round numbers $20,000 to print this document in the entirety, there is contained the salary and the expense of paying men who are already in the Government employ whom we would have to pay anyway if this was not ordered printed.

There would be some extra expense, which would be comparatively small, perhaps in the same proportion as the expense that has already been incurred.

Now, I will be glad to yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I wanted to get in mind, if the Senator is able to give me the information, how much it cost the Government after the Senate had passed the resolution directing the department to furnish the report for the plans and the illustrations?

Mr. NORRIS. I judge from the report I have here, from the outline of the work and when it was done, that nearly all the amount that I have given here has been expended after the resolution authorizing the Secretary to gather the facts was passed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That may be, but I do not know and the Senator only infers, as I understand it.

Mr. NORRIS. I could not draw any other inference.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will state the reason why I ask the question. On one of the several occasions when the Senate has entertained itself and others in the rolling of this delicate morsel about from place to place, I understood the Senator from Utah to say that the plans, illustrations, diagrams, and drawings, or whatever they are, referred to in part as cobwebs by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], had all been made before the Senate passed the resolution directing the department to collect this information.

Mr. NORRIS. No; they had not. That is incorrect, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should like to know whether that is true, one way or the other.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say that the statement I made was that the great bulk of the illustrations had been prepared by the Department of Agriculture before the introduction of the resolution.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, just a moment. The Senator from Connecticut asked me the question whether it had all been done. My answer was in reply to the question of the Senator from Connecticut. I do not claim that all the diagrams were made afterwards, but I do claim that the great bulk of the work was done and the expense incurred after the Senate passed its resolution.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. In fact, I asked the Senator two questions: First, I asked him how much had been spent since we passed the resolution for the plans and diagrams, and the Senator could not answer the question.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator never asked me that before.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes; I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. NORRIS. Whether he did or not, I could not state how much has been spent for the plans.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. And the preparation of the plans.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know that they have spent anything for plans. In my judgment they do not have any plans.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. My conception of the matter was drawn from the statement of the Senator from Utah. I understood him to say the other day that almost all the work upon the plans had been done by the department before the Senate passed its resolution. I may have been wrong; I may not have understood the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Utah has said in the main that was true. He has repeated that a good many times. I have no personal knowledge—I was not following these men around when they were doing the work—but I have their written word, and, if they are correct, the Senator from Utah is vastly mistaken.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Utah may have some personal knowledge of it, but his opinion is in direct conflict with what has been placed in the record from the department coming from the Senator from Florida and what has been placed in the record from the same department coming to myself. I am only offering the evidence that was in my possession. I do not claim to know anything about it personally.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator from Connecticut that the statement I made here is made from my own personal knowledge.

Mr. NORRIS. I will ask the Senator, has he ever seen any of the plans that are included in the document we are trying to print?

Mr. SMOOT. Of course I have.

Mr. NORRIS. Has the Senator read what the report contains?

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator mean——

Mr. NORRIS. The document we are trying to print and the Senator is trying to prevent from being printed.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not read every word of it. I have read most of it.

Mr. NORRIS. Then how does the Senator know from his personal knowledge that the plans and everything are simply a reprint?

Mr. SMOOT. This is how the Senator knows: The report was prepared by Mr. Merrill. Mr. Merrill prepared the table and illustrations; that is, they were prepared under his directions. Mr. Merrill was before the Public Lands Committee, not once but twice, and perhaps three times. He was before the Lands Committee of the House.

I want to say to the Senate that many of these illustrations were presented to the Public Lands Committee to emphasize the testimony that Mr. Merrill gave before the committee. Mr. Merrill, I am informed—I do not say this upon my own knowledge—asked the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] to introduce the resolution in order that those interested might have it printed as a public document and get it into shape, so that Mr. Merrill could distribute it wherever he desired, and not only Mr. Merrill but the officials of the department who are interested in the subject. That is why I say that I know that the bulk of the information was collected before the introduction of the resolution. I do not know the cost of collecting it; I do not know whether or not it has been stated here what was the cost of collecting the whole of the information contained in the tables and illustrations; but I do know that the great bulk of it was collected before the resolution was introduced into this body.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, of course, if this work were all done before then, everybody in the department who has furnished this information has at least been mistaken.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not say "all." I do not want the Senator to place me in that position.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, they have been mistaken in the main, then. Let me read something of what they say, for the Senator has denied it so many times that it will be necessary to read some things which I have read before.

However, before I do that, I want to say that this streak of economy which has now taken possession of the Senator from Utah, if applied to this body—and that is where he is trying to apply it—in the consideration of this particular resolution, it would be found that it has cost the taxpayers more money by the fight and the delay that has taken place up to this hour upon this resolution by the Senator from Utah than it would cost to print this document. Three times this resolution has been up, and three times it has been delayed by the Senator from Utah until either an adjournment came or until the morning hour expired. If we count expense, as the Senator wants to count expense in the Government Printing Office, we shall have already spent more than $20,000 in resisting the cost of the printing of a publication that would not cost more than that.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, if the Senator's argument holds good, no Senator should ever open his mouth in this body to oppose anything or to approve of anything, but should swallow down whatever is presented.

Mr. NORRIS. No; that would not be the fact, by any means; and the Senator from Utah, if he were consistent, instead of taking the time of the Government Printing Office employees in printing what he says of the taxpayers having to pay all this money, would know that, as a matter of fact, as to three-fourths, or perhaps four-fifths, of that money, the taxpayers would have to pay anyway, whether this document is printed or not. That is on an exact par with my illustration, and I offer it only for that purpose. I offer that illustration of such expense to stand side by side with the Senator's illustration of expense as applying to the Government Printing Office; and it is an exact parallel.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Nebraska that the Government Printing Office is not run in that way. The Government Printing Office has a certain number of people employed, it is true, but they print each day everything that they can possibly print; and as the Senator knows the RECORD has to be printed every day.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Now, all of the other printing which can be put off by way of public documents and the reprint of such documents the printing of which is authorized by Congress is put off until the summer time. Every em that is set, every line that is printed, would cost the United States just as much if it were printed to-day as it would if it were left to be printed during the summer time.

Mr. NORRIS. I have not disputed that.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator, then——

Mr. NORRIS. We propose to print this document if we can get the resolution through while Congress is in session. We want to print it now.

Mr. SMOOT. If we print this report while Congress is in session, it will require just that much more printing to be done when Congress is not in session, and will then cost the Government just as much as it would if printed now.

Mr. NORRIS. The same argument would apply to the Senator's speeches to-day, yesterday, and the day before, and a few days before that, when this resolution was up. If he had not said anything, the employees of the Government Printing Office would not have had to set up the type by which his speech was printed.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true.

Mr. NORRIS. They could have been doing something else and have thereby saved the taxpayers some money.

Mr. SMOOT. That is also true.

Mr. NORRIS. While the Senator from Utah was talking we were paying the salaries of all these pages around here, the other Senators, and everybody else. Their salaries have been going right along.

SEVERAL SENATORS. "The other Senators!"

Mr. NORRIS. I say advisedly "the other Senators," because the other day when some of the older Senators were not here I understand the pages organized a new Senate; that they raised their salaries to $7,500 a year and lowered ours to $2.50 a day [laughter]; and I am not sure but what they were wise, and that the country would approve their action if it got a chance to do so.

Mr. President, about this matter being new, I do not believe I will repeat all that I have before read, but I am going to read some of it. Here is something that is contained in the document that the Senator from Utah does not want printed:

> There are given in part 3 charts and tables showing the relations of individuals to various public-utility electric companies and to banking institutions, the relations of these public-utility electric companies to each other and to certain banking institutions. This material is almost entirely new. It has never, except in very minor degree, been presented hitherto in any Government publication.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I will not yield now, and I will tell the Senator why I will not yield.

Mr. SMOOT. All right.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to get a vote. I am just a little bit inclined to think that there is some filibustering tactics that are being used to delay this matter, because it has been put off three times, and I do not want to be the means of talking it to death.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no filibustering on my part.

Mr. NORRIS. If it is talked to death, it will be the Senator from Utah who has to do it.

Mr. SMOOT. I repeat, there has been no filibustering on my part.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Utah is going to start to do it now, in the face of his denial and in the face of my refusal to yield. I suppose I am helpless to prevent it, and the Senator can go ahead.

Mr. SMOOT. What I was going to say is this——

Mr. NORRIS. Exactly.

Mr. SMOOT. That the statement which has just been read by the Senator from Nebraska certainly can not be absolutely true.

Mr. NORRIS. I know that the Senator does not believe it, and, of course——

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to say to the Senator——

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, it is not coming from me, but it is coming from the department, the men who have done this work. The Senator from Utah denies all of it; I understand that. I want to put both sides in evidence. We have the Senator's word that there is in the report practically nothing new, and I am reading statements from the officials of the department of what they claim. Now, if they are all false, if they do not tell the truth, then the Senator from Utah clearly is right.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Utah does not ask anybody to take his word. The Senator from Utah can show the Senator from Nebraska——

Mr. NORRIS. Exactly.

Mr. SMOOT. And also the Senate that the information has heretofore been printed.

Mr. NORRIS. And the Senator from Utah will claim that we can get everything somewhere else. If we had a bill here to take the census of mules and hogs in Utah, I suppose the Senator from Utah would get up and say, "Why, I can get that information in Utah; we do not need any census; we will save the money. If anybody wants to know how many mules and hogs there are in Utah, let him go to Utah and count the hogs and count the mules, and he can get all that information." That is true also as to this information; you can get it all. Those who collected it had to go somewhere else to get it, but they have gathered it together here in a publication for the use not only of the Senate but of the entire country. I want to say to you that if this information is printed it will be a handbook, it will be an authority. It is the gathering together of information on the question of water never before collected in one document. As the Senator from Colorado said, although opposing the resolution, there is no doubt that there have been great combinations and monopolies in the development of hydroelectric power; but this is the first time that information relative thereto has been all gathered together and put in concise form, so that not only Senators but the people of the United States can read it. I anticipate there will be a great demand for it. I would not be surprised if it should be necessary to make a reprint of it. If we do, it will be because of the demand coming from people who want to know something about the combination of hydroelectric powers with financial institutions and banking institutions.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CLAPP. Do I understand the Senator from Nebraska to claim, upon the authority of the department, that there is matter in this report bearing on the question of the monopoly and monopolization of these powers which is not in the printed report already made?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. CLAPP. It seems to me that that is a vital question. If true, the report should be published. If, on the other hand, as the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] says, this all appears, not by going to Utah to get it, but in a public document which we have already printed, then there is no necessity for republishing it.

Mr. NORRIS. I suppose, for instance, the information I have read as to the connection of these various water-power corporations with the banking institutions, and the connection of public utility electric companies with each other all exists, but these people have gone out and obtained it, and they say here:

This material is almost entirely new. It has never, except in very minor degree, been presented hitherto in any Government publication.

They went all over the United States to get it.

Mr. CLAPP. That is the real issue. I do not think people should go to various divergent sources apart from one another, but if, as the Senator from Utah says, the information read by the Senator from Nebraska as coming from the department is already in governmental or congressional publications, it might be a serious question whether or not we wanted to reprint it.

Mr. NORRIS. I will say to the Senator that as to some of this information that is true. For instance, a man came before the Public Lands Committee of the Senate year before last and last year and testified and gave some information. You can go into those reports and dig it out if you have time, or if you have a sufficient number of employees they may dig it out for you, perhaps. It may be that the year before somebody else testified before the House Committee on Public Lands and somebody else testified at some hearings in New York City, and somebody may have put it in some public document somewhere. You might gather most of it together, but if you should bring it down to date and should gather it together and put it in one volume, under one head, I contend that that would be the only way in which it could be of any practical use to us or to any of the people.

Mr. CLAPP. It is not a question of the report containing some of the information. The question is, Does the document which the Senator from Utah has—and I suppose it relates to this subject—contain all of the information? If that claim is correct, that is one thing. The department seems to claim that some of this material that relates to the matter of monopoly and monopolistic relations has not been printed. If it has not, undoubtedly it ought to be printed.

Mr. NORRIS. That is what I am trying to say. The department says it has not been printed. Now I will read just a little further.

In the hearings before the Public Lands Committee of the House and Senate—

I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Minnesota to this, and I hope the Senator from Utah will not interrupt him while I am giving him this information—

In the hearings before the Public Lands Committee—

That is in various hearings—

of the House and Senate, certain material has been presented by representatives of this department along the lines of Part III of this report—

That is the part relating to the financial connection between banking institutions and various other corporations with interlocking directorates.

Mr. CLAPP. That is part 3?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

But such material as was presented in the hearings involved only a few corporations and amounted to less than one-tenth of the data presented in this report, while the data concerning the relations of public utility electric companies to banking institutions has never been presented before.

That is what is said by the men who have gathered together this information and presented it to the Senate in answer to a command of the Senate, and I am offering their word as against that of the Senator from Utah, who says that a great portion of it has been presented and that he can show various diagrams that have been presented not only by men from the department but by water-power men and bankers and bond dealers who have appeared before the committee. I listened to them myself for weeks in the Public Lands Committee, and they gave a great deal of valuable information, but if the Senator wanted to get some information on one particular phase of the subject and had to search through 40 or 50 volumes to get it, he would find that it was difficult. The men who have made this report say that a great deal of it can not be found anywhere else; that it is entirely new. Less than one-tenth, they say, has been presented to the committees.

Mr. President, I think we ought to have a vote on the resolution. So far as I am concerned, I am willing, of course, to abide by the judgment of the Senate. I hope it will print the report in full; but if it does not do so, I will have to take my medicine like anybody else. We have had this matter up three times, and on every occasion it has been talked to death. On each occasion it has been discussed until we had to adjourn or until the morning hour was over. It is not fair to stifle this resolution. Let us come to a vote on it, and whatever may be the decision of the Senate we will all have to abide by it, whether it be to print all of the report or to print part of it or none of it.

I desire, in conclusion, to call attention to the fact that even though $20,000 would have to be paid out in cash—which it would not to print this information, which has been gathered together at an expense of over $20,000—even though that were all true, it would be a mere bagatelle compared with the importance of the subject to which it relates. There is undeveloped water power throughout the United States running into the millions. The question of water power in all parts of the United States is a live issue; people want information upon it; Senators and Representatives in Congress want information upon it; and here is something to give light on a question which is being agitated everywhere and which involves millions of dollars and the happiness of millions of people. I submit that it is penny-wise and pound-foolish to stop now, after we have gathered this information and not put it in such shape that it will be usable.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator. Of course, it is a vital question; there is no doubt about that; and I do not think we should stand upon the cost of information to the American public. The question that now presents itself, to my mind, is whether—and that is what I ask the Senator from Nebraska because of his familiarity with the matter—the proposed material to be published is such a complete review of the subject that it should be printed, or whether it is incomplete, and we will still want more information in order to put before the public in one concise body the information that is desired on this question?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, in answer to that question, I will state what is my understanding of the matter. Of course, the Senator must understand I get my information from such documents as I have been reading from, from the department, and from those who have been engaged in this work; I have not had an opportunity to examine the document itself; but I give it to the Senator as my honest conviction and judgment that, if it shall be published, it will be the most complete publication of its kind in the world. While, perhaps, in the future it may get out of date, as the Senator can well understand, up to date it is the most complete compendium on the subject that has ever been published, and a great deal of it is not now in print, never has been, and can not be obtained in any other way than in that which is now proposed.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, my sympathies are very much with the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] in his effort to avoid expense. Of course, I realize that, unless somebody makes that his business, extravagance will result for which there is no excuse. The task of one who takes upon himself that burden is not a pleasant one. I tried it for a few years, until I got the reputation of being a common scold, and practically abandoned the effort. So, as I have said, my sympathies are with the Senator from Utah. At the same time, I believe that it is always important that the public have the fullest information, especially on a subject of this kind, and, in view of the plain, unequivocal declaration of the department that a small percentage only of this material has already been published, I feel constrained to vote for the full publication of it.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, this very matter of the publication of this report or document has been before the Senate three or four times within the last week or 10 days, and hours of the time of the Senate have been wasted in discussions that have been one day after another repetitions of what was said the day before. There is not a Senator who has given any attention to this matter who does not know enough about it to vote on it intelligently.

We proceed like amateurs. The Senator from Nebraska said that the pages had organized a new legislature here, and had just raised their salaries to $7,500 a year and reduced those of Senators bearing commissions to $2.50 a day. I do not think the pages could do much worse than the Senators themselves are doing in taking hours on three or four days merely to repeat what has been said by them the day before. Why, my friend from Utah has made the same speech on this subject several times. I am not criticizing him, because he is not alone in that; others have done the same thing.

Now, Mr. President, I rise to inquire whether the Senate is ready to vote on this question now?

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote!

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly willing to vote, so far as I am concerned, but I merely wish to ask the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] if he will not withdraw his amendment, so that the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] may be first voted on? That would not complicate matters at all; and if the amendment of the Senator from Colorado should be voted down, then the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota could be adopted if the Senate so desired.

Mr. STONE. Let us not start another discussion.

Mr. SMOOT. There will be no discussion about it.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think that course would save time.

Mr. SMOOT. That would save time, and I suggest it in order to save time.

Mr. STERLING. I consent that the amendment of the Senator from Colorado may be first disposed of.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then the question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. After the word "that," in line 1, it is proposed to insert "Part I of," so as to read: "That Part I of the report be printed," and so forth.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask for the yeas and nays on that.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I do not see him in his seat, and therefore I will withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. SHIVELY]. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. CHILTON. I inquire if the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that the Senator from New Mexico has not voted.

Mr. CHILTON. I have a pair with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I inquire if the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I have a general pair with that Senator. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS. I transfer my pair with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER. I have a general pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], who is absent, and for that reason I withhold my vote.

Mr. CHILTON. I desire to announce the pair of the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN].

Mr. BRYAN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. He is not present and I am not at liberty to vote. If he were present and I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. STONE (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. He seems not to be present on the roll call, and I ask leave to withdraw my vote.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I am informed that the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] is not present. I therefore withhold my vote, being paired with him.

Mr. WALSH (after having voted in the negative). When I voted I did not observe that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT], with whom I have a pair, was absent from the Chamber. I transfer that pair to the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I desire again to announce the absence of the senior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 39, as follows:

YEAS—17.

Bankhead	Jones	Smoot	Vardaman
Brandegee	Lodge	Sutherland	Wadsworth

Curtis	Lee, Md.	Sherman	Williams
Dillingham	Lippitt	Shively	Works

So the amendment of Mr. THOMAS was rejected.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I now renew my amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Dakota offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the resolution it is proposed to add the following:

Provided, That part 1 of said report be first printed and furnished to the Senate at the earliest practicable day.

Mr. FLETCHER. As far as I am concerned, I see no objection to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the report entitled "Electric power development in the United States and concentration in its ownership and control," transmitted to the Senate by the Secretary of Agriculture on January 20, 1916, in response to Senate resolution No. 544, Sixty-third Congress, be printed as a Senate document, together with accompanying tables and illustrations: Provided, That part 1 of said report be first printed and furnished to the Senate at the earliest practicable day.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I rise for the purpose of moving an executive session. In the meantime, before I make the motion, I should like to have it understood, in the event the motion to go into executive session is agreed to, whether the unfinished business retains its status without a further request to lay it aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has no doubt but that the unfinished business goes over as the unfinished business of to-morrow. All intervening business is out of the way.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from Missouri if he has any objection to the Senate remaining in session a while longer so that a bill in which the Post Office Department is very much interested, and which will not take a great deal of time, may be taken up and considered? So far as the unfinished business is concerned, if that bill should become the unfinished business temporarily the Senate could change it. There is no disposition on the part of anybody to displace the unfinished business by a request to consider a bill in which the Post Office Department is very much interested.

I made the suggestion to the Senator from Missouri in the hope that this bill could be taken up and disposed of within a very short time.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, if there were any prospect of that hope being realized, I would not put any obstacle, if I could, in the way of the Senator from Florida. I am very anxious to get some executive business before the Senate, particularly the pending treaties; and unless some time is taken for that purpose in the evening we can not do it at all. I wish the Senator would not object to the course I propose.

Mr. BRYAN. I am not going to object.

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 1 hour and 40 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 9, 1916, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 8, 1916.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord of life and light, love and happiness, help us to raise the curtains and windows of our souls that the light of heaven and its pure air may come in; that with patience, firmness, courage, and nobility of soul we may meet the circumstances and trials of everyday life unperturbed. "'Tis easy to be pleasant when life flows along like a song, but the man worth while is the man with a smile when everything goes dead wrong." Give us the heart that brings the smile that we may go on our way rejoicing, assured that all things work together for good to them that love God. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

THE LATE HON. WILLIAM P. HEPBURN.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for a few minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I give notice that I will not object to the gentleman, but I will to any other similar request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, it is my sad duty to announce to the House the death of Hon. W. P. Hepburn, of Iowa, formerly and for many years a most distinguished and able Member of this House. Col. Hepburn died yesterday at his home in Clarinda, Iowa. His death was unexpected and comes as a shock to his friends, for, although he had been seriously ill for months, lately he had rallied, and believed he would soon be able to return to his work here in Washington. It will not be possible for me at this time adequately to review his distinguished career, but later I shall present to the House an appreciation of his life and service.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, in connection with the announcement of Col. Hepburn's death, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, we, of course, are all deeply distressed by the loss of this great man, the Hon. William P. Hepburn, of Iowa, who was a leader in this House so long, during which time he presided over the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce with great dignity, ability, and impartiality, and for a longer period than any other man who occupied the chair.

I send to the Clerk's desk and ask that a resolution be read which was adopted by that committee this morning on hearing of his death.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read the resolution in the time of the gentleman from Georgia.

The Clerk read as follows:

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES CONGRESS,
Washington, D. C., February 8, 1916.

In regular session the committee adopted the following resolution, offered by Mr. SIMS, of Tennessee:

"Resolved, That this committee has learned with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. William P. Hepburn, of Iowa, our former distinguished chairman, who so long presided with dignity, impartiality, and ability over the deliberations of this committee and contributed so much to the valuable legislation of this Republic. He has left his impress upon the legislation and the lives of his fellow men as few men have ever done in the history of the world. His loss is a source of individual grief to each of us. We appreciated his fine qualities of heart and mind, and we rejoice that he was spared by a merciful Providence so long to bless his country, to encourage and uplift his fellow men, and to accomplish such great things in enacting and enforcing our laws. We realize that a great man has fallen this day, and we extend to his family and his neighbors our profound and heartfelt sympathy."

We direct the clerk of this committee to transmit a copy of this resolution to Mrs. Hepburn, for whom this committee has always felt tender affection, as well as high admiration, and we request the chairman to have this resolution read in the House, where our great deceased friend so long exemplified his power and fairness as a leader in legislation.

Unanimously adopted.

W. C. ADAMSON, Chairman.
WILLIS J. DAVIS, Clerk.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS—COLOMBIAN TREATY.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. To ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the Colombian treaty.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the Colombian treaty. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. There is a bill—H. R. 540—that was referred to the Private Calendar by some kind of a twist, but which ought to go to the Union Calendar. The title of the bill is "For the relief of settlers within the limits of the grant to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge & Vicksburg Railroad Co.," and it involves to some extent the Government's right to grant. Without objection, it will be referred to the Union Calendar.

There was no objection.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 3978. An act to authorize the Catawissa Railroad Co., its lessees, successors, and assigns, to construct a railroad bridge across the west branch of the Susquehanna River, from the borough of Milton, Northumberland County, Pa., to the borough of West Milton, Union County, Pa.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I beg to tender my resignation as a member of the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives.

H. GARLAND DUPRÉ.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., February 8, 1916.

To the SPEAKER:

I hereby request to be relieved from further service on the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Respectfully,

B. G. HUMPHREYS.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignations will be accepted.

There was no objection.

FLOOD SUFFERERS.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kentucky rise?

Mr. BARKLEY. To ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This is no emergency, I presume?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] is recognized.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, on last Friday, I think it was, or Thursday, the Senate passed a bill appropriating the sum of $100,000 for the relief of flood sufferers in the Mississippi Valley and its tributaries. That bill was, of course, referred to the Committee on Appropriations of the House. Those of us who represent districts that are affected by this flood, which is almost as great as, if not greater, than that which existed three years ago, have been appealing to the Committee on Appropriations to report to the House the bill passed by the Senate. On last Saturday the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. FITZGERALD] made a statement in the RECORD explaining his opposition to the appropriation, and presented a telegram from Col. Markham, I believe, an Army officer located in Memphis, claiming there was no relief needed, and, in fact, that representations had been made to him that people did not want relief in the shape of rations or provisions. I have in my hand a telegram which I have just received from the mayor of Hickman, Ky., a city of about 6,000 inhabitants, in which he states the conditions there. I desire to have this telegram read from the Clerk's desk in my time.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the telegram as a part of the remarks of the gentleman.

The Clerk read as follows:

HICKMAN, KY., February 7, 1916.

ALBEN W. BARKLEY,
Washington, D. C.:

We have fed 1,500 people to-day, also have clothed those that were in absolute destitute circumstances. The report sent out by Col. Markham, of Memphis, is without foundation. I have inquired and made diligent search for the author but have been unsuccessful. Therefore it must be a misrepresentation, as Fulton, Union City, Martin, Mayfield, Paducah, and Louisville are all responding to our distress call, and it certainly stands to reason that the sister cities right close to us have investigated the situation and know more about what we need than a man 125 miles away from here that has never proffered assistance.

TOM DILLON, Sr., Mayor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I put that telegram in the RECORD for the purpose of contradicting the statement of Col. Markham that no provisions or assistance was needed in the section of the country that is affected by the flood. Furthermore, I desire to controvert the statement contained in the telegram that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] placed in the RECORD that assistance was not needed because it demoralized the negro labor in the sections that are affected. I desire to say that the situation at Hickman and other places in Kentucky and in Missouri and Arkansas, where relief has been sought and the appeals daily made in Congress for their relief, are not affected in any way by the situation with respect to colored labor.

The people for whom we speak and in whose behalf we seek assistance are not simply colored laborers on levees, but white people who work for their living, who have been compelled to abandon their homes and lose their property because of the floods in the Mississippi Valley. I think that the gentleman from New York has been misinformed and imposed upon by those who represent to him or to his committee that the only people who are seeking relief in the Mississippi Valley are colored laborers, whose labor would be disorganized by the giving of free rations to them, and I hope that the gentleman from New York will open up his mind and become a little more generous toward the suffering people of the Mississippi Valley who have been driven from their homes, who have lost their property, whose homes are now under water, whose household furniture has been destroyed, whose stock and cattle have been drowned because of the floods that have driven them out of their homes in Arkansas, Missouri, and Kentucky; but the fact that some of those who need aid are colored ought not to operate to defeat an appropriation for saving life and prevent suffering, regardless of color. I hope the gentleman will be constrained not to go merely upon the word of Army officers who may be situated 125 miles away from the scene, who get their information through the telephone and from indirect and irresponsible sources and not from the people directly involved in this situation. I do not know what the disposition of the whole Committee on Appropriations is, but it is my earnest hope that they will at once report to this House a bill for the relief of those suffering people. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the information furnished and submitted in the RECORD in the shape of telegrams came through the Secretary of War. It consisted of telegrams sent by district engineers of the United States Government to the Chief Engineer of the United States in response to requests for information sent to them. I have in my office later messages from those officers, as well as a report from the Mississippi River Commission.

All of those reports urge that no appropriation may be made by Congress at this time to furnish free rations. At some places difficulty is being encountered because of the fancy prices demanded for labor. In other places, where persons have been driven from their homes, ample provisions and supplies are on hand to care for them, and if they are compelled to work for the subsistence instead of having it furnished to them free, the work of protecting the levees will be continued. I made no statements——

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I made no statements to the effect that only colored persons were affected by the conditions. Whites as well as colored people are affected. There is a duty, Mr. Speaker, incumbent upon the States under such conditions, and something must be done to let it be known that every time the Mississippi River rises reliance upon the Federal Government alone can not be had to take care of distressed and needy persons. It has been the policy of this Government that whenever a situation exists that is beyond the capacity of the State and of local communities to care for, to take some action toward extending aid to the persons in distress.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In a moment. Communities affected, however, must realize that the Federal Government is not a great eleemosynary institution existing and waiting for an opportunity to give out of its Treasury money to do things that ought to be done by the people of the respective localities.

I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the gentleman think that where a flood situation covers a considerable portion of four or five congressional districts, that is purely a local flood, and that the Government ought not to do anything in the way of relief?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It may be that the State of Kentucky ought to do something for its own people in the way of taking care of them. At any rate, Mr. Speaker, for a number of years I have seen these situations arise. Congress has always acted upon information furnished by responsible Government officials, and whenever a condition existed that was beyond the control of the State and local authorities, Federal aid has been given. It has not been the habit to act upon appeals made by individuals, who have frequently selfish and often other ulterior motives in asking the Government to appropriate money. They make these appeals to the Representatives of their districts, and naturally the Representatives present them to Congress. Some one has some responsibility in determining what should be done by the Federal Government. I know no reason, in the absence of customary information from the Army engineers, who are wholly impartial and have no desire that any affliction should be visited upon any distressed people in any part of the country, for acting without information that would justify such action.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to print as part of my remarks the additional telegrams to which I have referred and the report of the Mississippi River Commission, so that Members may have available information that is at our command.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by printing certain telegrams. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following are the telegrams and report referred to:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
MISSISSIPPI RIVER COMMISSION,
St. Louis, Mo., February 4, 1916.

From: The president Mississippi River Commission.
To: The Chief of Engineers, United States Army, Washington, D. C.
Subject: Flood conditions.

1. I have just returned from an inspection of levee conditions on the lower Mississippi, and report as follows:

2. The gauge at Cairo, according to this morning's report, reads 53.4, within five-tenths of the height of the flood of 1912. In the third district, from Arkansas City to Vicksburg, the flood stage is now within 6 inches of that attained in 1912 and nearly 5 feet higher than the stage that existed in 1912 when 53.4 passed Cairo. At New Orleans it is nearly 3 feet higher than on a similar date in that year.

3. In the St. Francis Basin the levees are showing no serious signs of weakness, and the only danger I apprehend is an overconfidence on the part of the people which may lead to a careless patrolling of their levee line. The officer in charge of the first and second districts has made arrangements for promptly sending men and material to any threatened point.

4. In the White River district the waters from the Arkansas and White Rivers have flooded the country behind the levee for a long distance, so that it is impossible to obtain earth for levee protection without carrying it from one portion of the levee line to another, and I have limited high-water protection to the upper 40 miles and authorized an immediate expenditure of $25,000.

5. The Yazoo district should be able to stand a flood 3 feet higher than that of 1912 to Greenville, in its present condition. Below Greenville the local authorities are topping the levees at several localities, and for a number of miles the cross section is weak, but there is a reasonable chance of holding the line.

6. In the Tensas Basin the breaks in the Arkansas River levees have caused an overflow into Bayous Bartholomew, Bœuf, and Mason. I estimate about 300,000 second-feet is flowing over the country, but that it will be principally confined in Louisiana to the portion of the basin west of Lake Providence Ridge. The Arkansas portion of the basin above Lake Village is now under water. The Ouachita and Red will add at least 200,000 second-feet to this flow when it reaches the Atchafalaya River.

7. The local authorities did not at first appreciate their danger and were inclined to leave everything to the General Government. They are now aroused and are topping their levees to 3 feet above the flood of 1912. The levee section is, however, generally weak, and it will require extreme exertion, combined with good luck, to hold the line without a crevasse. The district officers have made arrangements to ship men and material to any threatened point in the shortest possible time and have distributed their fleet with this object in view.

8. Between the mouth of Red River and New Orleans there is a good margin to the levee line. The danger to be apprehended here is also overconfidence and carelessness in patrolling the levees. The same optimistic feeling permeates the community, including the levee boards, that existed in 1912.

9. Below New Orleans conditions are bad. At several of the crevasses caused by the storm of September 29 the contractors have abandoned their contracts and have rendered it necessary for the General Government to concentrate every available levee machine at these threatened points. I have instructed the fourth district officer to confine his operations to the upper ends of the districts, extending about 45 miles below New Orleans, and it is only by the most strenuous efforts that this portion of the line can be held. Without dredges levee construction below is limited to wheelbarrow work, and the State has put a convict force on this portion of the line. Many of the residents do not appreciate their danger and are opposing the taking of earth from in front of their houses. There is a strong effort being made to induce the United States to handle the work with levee machines, but if the machines are taken from the upper river and an attempt made to spread over the entire district, certain disaster is invited. There is not time to construct additional dredges.

10. No attempt is being made to hold the small levee districts on the east bank of the river below Vicksburg. It would be a hopeless proposition.

CURTIS MCD. TOWNSEND,
Colonel, Corps of Engineers, United States Army.

CENGWAR, Washington, D. C.:

Conditions in lower Arkansas Valley as stated in telegram of this date. Two packets running and one tied up at Pine Bluff. Problem is to get people in overflowed section south of river to high ground. Ample supplies of food and shelter in high towns scattered through flooded districts. No refugees brought to Pine Bluff or Little Rock. No serious attempt to raise relief fund here. See no necessity of Federal aid. Governor knows no place where Government river boat was needed this afternoon. Clarendon White River levee broke at 9 o'clock to-night. Quapaw ready, if needed there.

Arkansas River at Little Rock began falling February 3; levees of south bank overtopped or breached at many points below Pine Bluff. Water flowing across country to Bayou Bartholomew in vicinity of Gould and Grady. Principal danger along railroad. Relief train left here this morning. Urgent need of rowboats and launches many miles from river. Believe river packets fully able to handle situation along river banks. Will verify this. No United States boat available for relief work in Arkansas River until current drops so snag boat Arkansas can maneuver. About 1,500 feet revetment lost at Pine Bluff. Letter already in mail. White River reached highest stage on record. Lower lock gates lost on Dam No. 2. Towboat Allen rescued about 70 persons below Batesville February 1. No further calls for help in that vicinity. Have steam up on snag boat Quapaw now at Devall Bluff. Have been in touch with editor of Arkansas Gazette.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the gentleman from New York think that the Senate did not have in its possession this information by which he is actuated when they passed this bill last week?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not speaking of the Senate. I simply say I know what happened in the Senate.

The SPEAKER. It is out of order to speak of what has happened in the Senate.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the mere fact, Mr. Speaker, that the Senate of the United States passes some legislation under a persuasive argument will never convince this House that action should be taken.

Mr. BARKLEY. If that is true, the Senate ought to be abolished.

The SPEAKER. The Chair agrees with the gentleman, but the whole thing is out of order. [Laughter.]

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. DOREMUS, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for 10 days, on account of important business.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

On motion of Mr. STEPHENS of Texas the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Indian appropriation bill (H. R. 10385), with Mr. FOSTER in the chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and education of 250 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Pierre, S. Dak., including pay of superintendent, $43,750; for general repairs and improvements, $6,000; for steel water tank, $2,000; for new boiler and installation thereof, $3,000; for addition to shop building, $1,000; in all, $55,750.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

A few days ago I made a few remarks in the House in reference to certain traveling expenses of the Bureau of Animal Industry, paid out of the appropriation for the foot-and-mouth disease. While it is not in order, I ask unanimous consent to have read in my time a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, giving what seems to me to be a valid and reasonable explanation of what was done.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the letter will be read in the gentleman's time.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, February 5, 1916.

Hon. JAMES R. MANN,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. MANN: From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 1, 1916 (pp. 2078 and 2079), it is noted that during consideration by the House of the urgent deficiency bill you called special attention to certain items appearing in this department's report of expenditures for travel during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1915 (H. Doc. No. 113, 64th Cong., 1st sess.), stating that the payment of these items was charged to a special appropriation for the eradication of the foot-and-mouth disease, notwithstanding the fact that the work involved in each instance related to operations in no way connected with the objects specified in that appropriation. It is further noted you state that you do not regard such expenditures as proper, inasmuch as it appears that funds appropriated for a specific object were devoted to matters entirely different from the object for which the appropriation was made. I am satisfied that your remarks on this matter were made without having at hand complete information as to the action of the department in paying the items under consideration.

With a view of correctly informing you of the situation, I desire to submit the following statement, in order that you may see that the action of the department in making such payments was entirely proper.

The outbreak of the foot-and-mouth disease occurred in October, 1914. At that time the only funds available for use in combating the disease were those carried in the agricultural appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, under the heading, "General Expenses, Bureau of Animal Industry." The several items under this appropriation aggregated $1,597,996, of which amount $466,047.37 had been expended in furtherance of the regular lines of work authorized by that appropriation. It will thus be seen that there was available a balance of $1,131,948.63 for expenditure in carrying on the routine work covered by such appropriation and in carrying on the work involved in the eradication of the foot-and-mouth disease. When this outbreak occurred, Congress was not in session and it, therefore, became necessary for the department to draw largely upon such balance successfully to combat the foot-and-mouth disease. Payment of the expenses of the work involved in the foot-and-mouth disease project from the appropriation referred to necessarily embarrassed the other lines of activities, the expenses of which were exclusively chargeable thereto. In order to carry on the several lines of work outlined in said appropriation, it was necessary to reimburse that appropriation practically to the extent of the amount paid therefrom in furtherance of the foot-and-mouth disease project. When Congress convened, the situation confronting the department was fully explained to the Committee on Appropriations. As a result of presenting the matter to that committee, an item was embodied in the deficiency bill of January 25, 1915, reading as follows:

"For the arrest and eradication of the foot-and-mouth disease, the payment of claims arising out of past and future purchases and destruction of animals affected by or exposed to the foot-and-mouth disease, and for a deficiency in the objects specified under the head 'General expenses, Bureau of Animal Industry,' in the Agricultural appropriation act for the fiscal year 1915, $2,500,000, to be expended by the Secretary of Agriculture."

The objects of this bill were twofold—(1) to defray the expenses incident to the suppression of the foot-and-mouth disease and (2) to reimburse the appropriation "General expenses, Bureau of Animal Industry," for the deficiency in the objects specified thereunder occasioned by the outbreak of that disease. In conformity with this authorization, the various subappropriations under "General expenses, Bureau of Animal Industry," which had been heavily drawn upon for defraying the expenses of the work connected with the eradication of the foot-and-mouth disease, were reimbursed from the deficiency item of $2,500,000, as such action became necessary, by charging items of expense subsequently incurred for dairy, animal husbandry, or other regular work to the emergency appropriation. In all such cases the vouchers for such items bore the title of the emergency appropriation, together with the title of the subappropriation under "General expenses, Bureau of Animal Industry," to which the expense was chargeable, thus clearly showing that the subappropriation was reimbursed from the emergency appropriation to the extent of the amount covered by such items, and accounts of these reimbursements were taken up and carried on the official records in this way. The items to which you referred on the floor of the House were items of this nature.

I may add, also, that in no instance was there a reimbursement of the original subappropriations beyond the amount appropriated by Congress in the appropriation act for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1915; indeed, owing to the interruption in the regular work of the Bureau of Animal Industry, it was not necessary to reimburse the regular subappropriations for all of the money which had been withdrawn for use in the foot-and-mouth disease work between the date of the outbreak of the disease and January 25, 1915. The total amount withdrawn during that period from the regular subappropriations was $807,170.63, while the total reimbursement from the emergency appropriation amounted to but $529,135.63.

It is believed that this explanation clearly shows that the expenditures for travel in connection with the several lines of work covered by the appropriation "General expenses, Bureau of Animal Industry," which were charged to and paid from the deficiency appropriation of January 25, 1915, were properly paid under the authority contained in the latter appropriation. If you desire any further information on the subject, I will be pleased to furnish it.

Very truly, yours,

D. F. HOUSTON, Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support of Sioux of different tribes, including Santee Sioux of Nebraska, North Dakota, and South Dakota: For pay of five teachers, one physician, one carpenter, one miller, one engineer, two farmers, and one blacksmith (art. 13, treaty of Apr. 29, 1868), $10,400; for pay of second blacksmith and furnishing iron, steel, and other material (art. 8 of same treaty), $1,600; for pay of additional employees at the several agencies for the Sioux in Nebraska, North Dakota, and South Dakota, $95,000; for subsistence of the Sioux, other than the Rosebud, Cheyenne River, and Standing Rock Tribes, and for purposes of their civilization (act of Feb. 28, 1877), $200,000: Provided, That hereafter this sum shall include transportation of supplies from the termination of railroad or steamboat transportation, and in this service Indians shall be employed whenever practicable; in all, $307,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that paragraph.

I see that the proviso on the top of page 47 says:

Provided, That hereafter this sum shall include transportation of supplies.

I hope the gentleman will have no objection to striking out the word "hereafter," which has no place in this sort of an item.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have no objection whatever.

Mr. MANN. When we want to make permanent law we say "hereafter." We could not very well make permanent law with reference to a particular sum in an appropriation. I make the point of order on the word "hereafter," in line 2, page 47.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I concede the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and maintenance of day and industrial schools among the Sioux Indians, including the erection and repairs of school buildings, $200,000, to be expended under the agreement with said Indians in section 17 of the act of March 2, 1889, which agreement is hereby extended to and including June 30, 1917.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas want to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman state his point of order?

Mr. CANNON. It is under an agreement made in a certain year—

Which agreement is hereby extended to and including June 30, 1917.

Now that agreement has been fully performed. It takes legislation to perpetuate it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. In 1889 there was an agreement made between the United States and the Sioux Indians, which extended 20 years. Under that treaty the Indians were to have $200,000 a year for educational purposes. In 1909 that treaty expired. Since that time up to the present it has been renewed annually, so that the Indians get the benefit of the $200,000 each year for the schools.

Mr. CANNON. But there is no law for it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The question has been before the House more than once, but it is my opinion that it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. CANNON. I am under that impression.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas concede the point of order?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think all after "$200,000," in line 8, page 47, is subject to a point of order.

Mr. CANNON. I think the whole paragraph is subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. If anything in the paragraph is subject to the point of order, it makes the whole paragraph subject to the point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does the Chair sustain the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. GANDY] desires to offer an amendment.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 47, after line 5, insert the following as a new paragraph:
"For support and maintenance of day and industrial schools among the Sioux Indians, including the erection and repair of school buildings, $200,000, in accordance with the provisions of article 5 of the agreement made and entered into September 26, 1876, and ratified February 28, 1877 (19 Stats., 254)."

Mr. MANN. I reserve a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Chairman, I will give a little chronological statement with respect to this item:

In 1868 the Sioux Nation gave up to this Government that part of their reservation east of the Missouri River in South Dakota and certain lands in Nebraska. The Government then undertook, as a valuable consideration for that cession, to do certain things. One of those things was to provide educational facilities for the Sioux.

In 1876 the Sioux were called upon to cede other lands to the Government, known as the Black Hills lands, and at that time there was an agreement made with the Sioux by which they did cede the Black Hills. Then the Government undertook to do certain other things, one of which was to guarantee to them without limitation school privileges to educate their children. Under that provision this Government has expended for the Sioux Nation less than $6,000,000, whereas from the territory that the Sioux then ceded to this Government there has been taken nearly $200,000,000 of gold and put into circulation in this country.

This question has been before the House before, and it has been held from the Chair that article 5 of the agreement of 1876, wherein the Sioux ceded the Black Hills, is without limitation. That being true, it is but proper that we should carry out our portion of the agreement.

And further, in this connection, I want to say that I have before me the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs——

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GANDY. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. I understood the gentleman to say that about $200,000,000 in gold has been taken from land ceded by the Sioux Indians to the Government of the United States under a certain treaty. What has that to do with the merits of this case?

Mr. GANDY. Nothing except to show that the Indians ceded valuable land and were entitled to a valuable consideration.

Mr. MADDEN. Who got the gold, how much did it cost to get it out, and who paid that cost?

Mr. GANDY. The Government took the land——

Mr. MADDEN. The people who dug the gold paid the money, and it probably cost more to get the two hundred millions than the gold was worth after they got it.

Mr. GANDY. I have here a report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for 1915, and by that report I am informed that as to the tribes which entered into that agreement the Government at this time still lacks over 1,500 of having provided sufficient school facilities for the children of school age. The Government as yet has not made good its guaranty of educational facilities for the people that ceded so much land to the Government.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GANDY. I will.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I rose and made the point of order just as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] made the point of order on the section as originally presented. There is subject to the point of order $28,920 in this item. That is to say, this amount was diverted from the legal channel in previous years. I have no desire to deprive the Indians of any amount they should have, and the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois and by me having been sustained, I have no further complaint.

Mr. GANDY. If I understand the gentleman, in view of the fact that we are short 1,500 of having school facilities, the gentleman would like to increase that deficiency, so that if his proposition should go through we would be short over 2,200.

Mr. TRIBBLE. The committee has asked for $200,000. The gentleman has it before him, and he knows the situation. There is $28,290 that has been going through improper channels, as I contend. My only purpose in making the point of order was to strike out the section and prevent the renewal of a treaty which has expired. I am not opposed to Indian schools, but I oppose mission schools with Government support.

Mr. GANDY. I am not willing to cripple any of the schools among the Sioux. If the gentleman had his way, 750 pupils would be deprived of the school facilities they now have, and in the face of the fact that the Government is already short over 1,500 of having school facilities for the children.

Mr. TRIBBLE. The gentleman does not want them to receive it contrary to the laws of the statutes of the United States.

Mr. GANDY. No, sir.

Mr. TRIBBLE. That is all I am asking for.

Mr. GANDY. That is all we are asking for, the schools which the Sioux are entitled to under treaties and agreements with this Government for the cession of land.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I merely reserved the point of order. I have listened to the gentleman from South Dakota, and I do not care to make the point of order. I will move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, many years ago I was familiar with the treaties with the Sioux Indians, as well as many other treaties. In 1885 I was a member of a committee, headed by Judge Holman, now deceased, Representative Ryan, since dead, a gentleman from Arkansas whose name now escapes me, and a gentleman from Missouri representing the Hannibal district. It was the beginning of Cleveland's first administration. That committee crossed the continent twice visiting these tribes, holding councils and making investigations, and it made a thorough investigation touching the Indian Service at that time. We went to the Rosebud Agency in South Dakota, and we also went to the Pine Ridge Agency in South Dakota, where perhaps the most interesting council was held during our whole journey. The investigations extended over five months. There were 10,000 Indians at Pine Ridge, among them Red Cloud, the Medicine Man, Rain in the Face, who shot Custer. They were divided into two factions, one under Young Man Afraid of his Horses, since dead, and the other under Red Cloud, since dead. I expect that most of the people who were present at that council have since died. It was a very interesting council. There was an Indian agent there by the name of McGillicuddy, and an Indian trader, a very competent man, who resigned soon afterwards.

Without describing what happened during that council with the Indians, I found and had brought vividly to my mind, the great possessions of the Sioux. There had been a treaty made east of the Missouri River extinguishing their title, but west of the Mississippi it was not extinguished. I guess there is enough territory out there now in South Dakota that the Indians still own to make a State much larger than a middle-sized State. But many things have happened since then. At that time these Indians were receiving by appropriations under a treaty made with them much better subsistence than the ordinary farmer or the ordinary skilled laboring man had. The result was that they did not make much progress. But if you take a similar number of white men, clothe them, feed them, and house them, you will pauperize them. That is true as to white man as well as to Indian.

As to what modifications have been made since that time, as to the treaty with the Sioux, I am not clear. I have an impression, however, that there are many paragraphs in the bill that do not come within the law or treaty. I think the next paragraph, and, perhaps, the second one do not come within either the law or the treaty. Generally the Indians in the Indian Territory and, I think, in the Dakotas, many of them—I was going to say most of them, but I will not say it because I do not know—many of them vote. They are citizens, receiving relief, I take it, through this bill, still under the treaty. How long is that to continue? If we are bound under the treaty I suppose we ought to keep the treaty, but as long as we keep the treaty supporting these people, conferring upon them as we do citizenship as they receive their lands in severalty, just so long, unless the Government gets rid of the treaty, will you continue to pauperize them. I think that is all I desire to say about the matter.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. In the district I have the honor to represent there are quite a large number of old men and women, who are 20 years older than the distinguished gentleman himself——

Mr. CANNON. Oh, that would make them a hundred years old. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; they are a hundred years old, and even older than that. They themselves are the signers of some of the treaties with this Government along about 1854–55. At the time the then governor of the Territory of Washington held out his hat and took gold out of his pocket and put it into the hat, indicating to them that they were to have a hat full of gold, and then Gov. Stevens took another hat, made signs as to the filling of it, indicating two hats full of gold, and those poor Indians, now a hundred years old or older, are still waiting for the Government to fulfill that promise literally. True, they have timberlands held for them, but they are not allowed to sell the land.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Or the timber.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Or the timber. They are just waiting to die, waiting for the two hats full of gold. It is not fair on the part of the Government, and I think the gentleman will agree with me.

Mr. CANNON. The Indians out in Washington are not included in the item which inspired my remarks, being upon the Pacific coast. Are they citizens and voters?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. No; they do not vote. The point is here. I heard the distinguished gentleman say a moment ago that this method of bounty was neither fair to the Indian nor the white man.

Mr. CANNON. That is true.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Nor is this method of a withheld bounty fair.

Mr. CANNON. Are they citizens?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. No; they are not.

Mr. CANNON. They have not had allotments?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Over 600 allotments are held up now, and have been for the last five years.

Mr. CANNON. How many are there not held up? How many allotments?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Oh, a few hundred in one reservation I have in mind.

Mr. CANNON. A few hundred allotments! There are that many voters.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. GANDY. I just want to say to the gentleman from Illinois that within the district which I have the honor to represent there are five counties, unorganized, unceded, wholly and absolutely controlled by this Government, where no local taxes are raised of any kind and where there are no public schools, for the Indians are in charge of the Federal Government and the Government has not at any time opened those counties for settlement. But a very small portion of the Sioux as a whole receive any rations from the Government, as they did in the time concerning which the gentleman from Illinois speaks.

Mr. CANNON. Has the treaty been repealed?

Mr. GANDY. No.

Mr. CANNON. The treaty that was made after the killing of Custer.

Mr. GANDY. That treaty contains this provision:

Such rations or so much thereof as may be necessary shall be continued until the Indians are able to support themselves.

As the families have grown self-supporting they have been dropped from the ration roll, until to-day just a small per cent are on the ration roll of what was there when the gentleman from Illinois was out there.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to occupy the time of the committee further. I believe that the sooner these Indians have their allotments the sooner the community title is extinguished, the sooner they are placed upon their own responsibilities for a living the sooner you will cease to pauperize them. [Applause.]

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois. I desire to say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that the policy of the Indian Department, as I understand it, is as he would have it at the present time. The department is working as rapidly as it can to that point where it may no longer be necessary to issue rations to any Indians. The amount of rations issued to the Indians of the country to-day is very small, as compared with that issued to them 20 years ago. In South Dakota now, to the Indians there, the rations issued each year are of the value of about $75,000. A few years ago the value of the rations issued was greatly in excess of this amount. In 1915 the rations issued to all Indians in the country amounted to $267,472. Three years ago the value of the rations issued was $363,470. Those in charge of the supervision of the Indians of the country find that the amount of rations required to be issued from year to year to the Indians is practically in inverse ratio to their increase in civilization and education. The incentive to work for themselves and to support themselves is steadily growing greater. As this incentive to do for themselves grows stronger they are better able to care for themselves and better able to meet the conditions with which they have to contend upon the reservations where they may live. It is, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and other members of the committee must know, a tremendously difficult problem to do what we have been and now are attempting to do in this country—to change in a short generation or two the very lives and very nature of a strong people like the American Indians from that of hunters, trappers, and warriors to that of steady, industrious, hard-working farmers.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this is an estimate with respect to schools for the Sioux Indians, and is not an item in reference to schools for Indians in Oklahoma, yet perhaps the two are so connected that a remark about the Oklahoma schools is pertinent to the subject under consideration. The other day I made a point of order against an item of $300,000 contribution to public schools in Oklahoma. One of the new Members of the House, who I think is one of the brightest of the lot, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS], made some statements which rather overwhelmed me at the time. He put his positive facts, which he had in his hand, against my recollection, which is very often faulty, and stated that we had carried this item in the bill for 10 years, and that he held in his hand acts for years past, including 1906, 1907, and 1908, which carried an appropriation for this purpose. He stated:

Now, Congress, recognizing that that would be an injustice to the new State, as early as the appropriation bill of 1907 appropriated $300,000 in aid of the schools in a provision in language similar to this provision. The same sort of provision was carried in the Indian appropriation bill of 1908.

Again he stated:

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], in my judgment, is more often correct about details than any other man I ever saw—

I regret to read that—but I want to invite his attention to the Indian appropriation act of 1907, which I hold in my hand, and which does carry a provision in it for $300,000—

And so forth.

I do not know whether my distinguished friend at that time did have the appropriation act of 1908 in his hand, but evidently he did not look at it. There was no item of this kind in any of those appropriation acts to which the gentleman refers; and the appropriation act of 1908, which my distinguished friend said he held in his hand, carried an item of $150,000 for the maintenance, strengthening, and enlarging of the tribal schools of the Cherokee, Creek, Choctaw, Chickasaw, and Seminole Nations, and there had been no item in any appropriation act which the gentleman referred to at that time carrying any item similar to the one in the bill which we were discussing at the time. The act of 1908, which my friend said he held in his hand and which carried $300,000, carried $150,000 only for another purpose entirely and did not carry one cent for a provision similar to the one in the bill we had under consideration.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I take it the gentleman is referring to the remarks of the gentleman from Oklahoma, Mr. HASTINGS. I did not hear the first of his statement.

Mr. MANN. I stated that.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Well, I think the misapprehension of Mr. HASTINGS, if the gentleman will permit, came about from the fact that this money really has been used for the same purpose that it was used for before. It is perhaps carried in different language, but I think that the department administered it in the same way it did before.

Mr. MANN. Well, I am not going to assume that the department violated the law, because I do not think they have done so. The appropriation in all of these acts was for the tribal schools of these Five Civilized Tribes.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Prior to the time we had statehood, I will say to the gentleman, we had no public-school system at all in the Indian Territory; no schools at all but tribal schools.

Mr. MANN. I understand.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The distinction is perhaps this: It was used then for Indian children of these tribal schools which were joined together with some of the white children for the establishment of some new schools where they had not sufficient Indian children to operate without a lot of white children coming in and bearing part of the expense.

Mr. MANN. We were not appropriating money at that time; we did not commence until three or four years ago to appropriate money, as I recall it, and give it to the schools of Oklahoma, a State. While Oklahoma was a Territory and we were governing the Territory we appropriated money for the Indian schools, and it is true that the white people living in those localities patronized those schools, but it is an entirely different proposition. However, I am not endeavoring to criticize the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS], but rather to compliment him upon putting one over upon me in reference to the statement I had made that we had not made this appropriation for five years, and the gentleman stated we had, and when the gentleman rose and said he held in his hand the act carrying the item I thought probably he was right, though I was not sufficiently satisfied to let the matter go, because I took the trouble to look it up, and I find, while my recollection is often faulty, in this case it was better than the eyesight of the gentleman from Oklahoma reading from the act. [Laughter.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, before making an inquiry as to the parliamentary situation I want to state that I was quite as much surprised as the gentleman from Illinois at the statement of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS], as to the length of time that the appropriation or the gratuity had been made by the United States for the Cherokee and other schools. It had been my recollection that the gratuity appropriation had only been carried since the Supreme Court held that the act of 1906, removing restrictions on certain Indian lands, exceeded the authority of Congress, and that the Oklahoma delegation after that decision appealed to Congress for money to enable them to continue their schools because of a lack of authority on the part of Oklahoma to tax these lands or lands in that State for school purposes. That was my recollection, and I was surprised when the gentleman from Oklahoma stated that he held in his hand the statute showing that the appropriation had been made for so many years.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentleman means, of course, the gentleman from Oklahoma, Mr. HASTINGS?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I mean the gentleman from Oklahoma, Mr. HASTINGS.

Mr. Chairman, I understand the parliamentary situation to be that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] reserved the point of order, then stated after some discussion that he would not make it, and then made a pro forma amendment which we have been discussing?

The CHAIRMAN. That is as the Chair understands it.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Now, if the gentleman will yield.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I insist that the gentlemen confine themselves to the point before the Chair.

Mr. CAMPBELL. There is an amendment pending about the Sioux schools. That is all that is before the Chair that I know of.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not see what that has to do with this Oklahoma matter.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think that is probably correct.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I hope, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] will not insist upon that, because I think that every gentleman who has spoken is practically correct about this matter; if not correct about the language of the item carried in this bill and carried on other bills, at least correct about the administration of this amount that has been carried in the bill. And if the committee will bear with me just a moment I will give the history of this proposition. Along about 1902 or 1904, I think it was, at the solicitation of my friend from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] and the gentleman from Arkansas, Mr. Little, an item was put in the Indian appropriation bill for the support of schools in the Five Civilized Tribes. That was carried along until 1907, if I remember correctly. In 1908, as the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] has correctly stated, we passed an act providing for the removal of the restriction on certain Indian lands. These lands had already been made taxable conditioned upon the removal of restrictions by the act of April 26, 1906.

Mr. MANN. That still carried an item for the tribal schools.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I understand. I will get to that. This committee brought in an item carrying half the amount it had carried before, because it was thought that some of these lands had been made taxable. But there was a decision which came from the Supreme Court of the United States, known as the Choate against Trapp case, which held that the treaty guaranteeing that these lands should not be made taxable as long as title to the lands remained with the original allottees, created a vested right which Congress could not divest those Indians of, and that land was taken from the tax roll.

Soon after the decision was rendered another item was placed in the bill for schools in Oklahoma. The language may be different, and is different, but my information is that it is administered in exactly the same way as it was before, to wit, for Indian children in white and other schools.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not mean to say that the maintenance of a tribal school by a Government appropriation is the same as the payment by the Government to a local public school of money for its maintenance?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The difference is this, Mr. Chairman: The new schools were created, as I attempted to explain a while ago, where there had been no schools before, where there had not been sufficient Indian children to establish a school. Now, schools were created under this item that was put in the bill at that time to which the Indian and white children all went together, a condition which had not existed prior to that time. But by the time the decision was rendered in the Choate against Trapp case the State had established public schools, and this amount has been used for the payment of Indian children in public schools, as I have been informed by the department.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Did the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] withdraw his point of order?

Mr. CANNON. I did not make the point of order. I merely reserved it.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I only made the point of order on the language following "200,000," which has already gone out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the equipment and maintenance of the asylum for insane Indians at Canton, S. Dak., for incidental and all other expenses necessary for its proper conduct and management, including pay of employees, repairs, improvements, and for necessary expense of transporting insane Indians to and from said asylum, $45,000.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I desire in this connection, and perhaps in a parliamentary sense, somewhat with the indulgence of the committee, to call its attention to a condition existing among the Chippewa Indians of northern Minnesota that is deplorable in the extreme, and that tends further to illustrate the condition described by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

As an excuse and justification for what I am about to say, permit me to suggest that for many years I have been upon terms of very close and friendly intimacy with the Chippewa Tribe of Indians in the State of Minnesota. At different intervals during that time, knowing that I was friendly inclined to them, they have called me in to counsel, and at such councils I have heard their grievances and their complaints and have had their requests presented to me that in some way some relief might be afforded to them.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] well said that to much longer continue the relationship of guardian and ward means to further reduce these Indians in their condition of helplessness.

I agree with that entirely.

In the State of Minnesota, with reference to the lands that have been allotted to these Indians, it has been the position of the Indian Department that in almost all cases they can not alienate such lands.

The Indian Department, and perhaps with some degree of truth, holds that these Indians are not competent and asserts that they are dependent.

It surely is a strange situation where, with a far greater degree of incompetency years ago, the Government dealt with these tribes and with a grasping hand made treaty with them that deprived them practically of every foot of land they owned on the face of the earth, and emphatically held at that time that they were competent to make treaties for the purpose of parting with all that they had.

Now, the department says to these Indians: "Go upon your allotments; cultivate them; become farmers and agriculturists, and make them earn you a living." The advice, no doubt, is good, but in its practical effect and operation it is bad, for these people are not agriculturists nor will they become agriculturists in a hundred years.

To send the Indians onto one of these allotments that is so overgrown with timber and brush that it resembles a jungle more than anything, and say to them, "Clear it and make it pay you," is a proposition that is indeed staggering to these people. And it occurs to me, Mr. Chairman, that the time has come when action should be accelerated upon the part of the Indian Department and that it should say to those who have the lands that if they can not operate them to advantage, at least they may derive a benefit from them by their sale.

I am further impelled to make that remark for this reason: In the northern part of Minnesota to-day the ravages of tuberculosis and trachoma and syphilis are deplorable to the greatest degree and threaten to exterminate these people. The Egyptian eye disease (trachoma) is depriving many of their sight, and is doing vast damage to this race. It is extremely regrettable and requires prompt and intelligent action.

Men, women, and children upon the Leech Lake and the White Earth Indian Reservations are dying, and dying for want of attention; dying because they have no money available wherewith to get relief, and the Government, while holding them in guardianship, is doing absolutely nothing for them. There is only one physician in the Leech Lake Reservation, with a territory of many hundred square miles. The Government officials are unable to get to the humble homes and huts and tepees of these Indians. Hospital facilities are almost unknown. These Indians suffer and die in their rude homes unattended.

I received a few days ago a letter from the son of one of these Indian chiefs, a man who is as fine a specimen of Indian manhood as ever I saw in my life, in which he says, "I have been attacked by trachoma," the Egyptian eye disease, "and I am helpless and starving, and no help is given to us." Upon this situation the Government looks with apparent indifference. At least, it gives no help. These people ask the Government for bread and it gives them a stone.

I say, Mr. Chairman, that if the Government of the United States holds these Indians under guardianship and deprives them of the means of helping themselves, then in the name of humanity and in the name of God it is the duty of the United States Government to help them in some way.

There is, it is true, a fund of something like $6,000,000 which is to be distributed among the 8,000 persons comprised in those Indian bands, but the Government withholds that at the present time, and refuses to distribute it. The expense of administration all comes from the tribal funds and the interest thereon.

We talk about sending missionaries abroad. We should send relief and missionaries to those people. It is an imperative need to which the Indian Department should respond, and I take this opportunity to present the matter in this way. Great wrongs have been perpetrated on these Indians. There should be some slight attempt to make restitution while it will do some good.

I view a wrong on the part of the Government with no greater composure than I do a wrong committed by an individual. Does the Government propose to let these people die while it holds them under guardianship? If it does not, then action must be speedy and be not long delayed. [Applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, on Saturday I asked that the paragraph beginning on line 20, page 43, be passed over without prejudice in order that the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] might obtain further information. I now ask unanimous consent that we return to that item.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to return to the item on page 43, line 20. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I understand the gentleman from Oregon has another committee that he desires to attend in a short time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Oregon whether he has examined the proposal in connection with the original law and will say what its purpose is?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes; I have to a certain extent. The act of 1910 provided for the sale of certain lands belonging to the Siletz Indians, the lands amounting to something like 3,000 acres. Section 3 of that act, referred to on page 44, which it is proposed to amend, provides for the disposition of the proceeds from the sale of those lands. Section 3 of the act of 1910 provides that the proceeds from the sale of these lands, after reimbursing the Government, should be used for the purpose of purchasing sites for day schools, erecting the necessary buildings, and equipping and supporting and maintaining the same.

This amendment proposes to do away with that provision, devoting the proceeds for the purpose of purchasing school sites and the education of the children, for the reason that the Siletz Indians have their lands allotted. Their lands are patented to them. They are taxpayers. There are 14 schools on the site of this Indian reservation. The Indian children attend the schools——

Mr. STAFFORD. Public schools?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes; public schools. The Indian children attend these public schools, so that there is no longer the necessity of devoting this fund for school sites and educational purposes.

Mr. STAFFORD. When I reserved the point of order I was aware of the fact that the change of phraseology was for the diversion of money from the school fund. I was not aware that the Indian children were receiving their education in the public schools. I therefore withdraw the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For a proportionate share of the amount required to construct a wagon road or highway through the Standing Rock Indian Reservation in Corson County, S. Dak., from a point on the Missouri River north of Pontis, S. Dak., thence in a northwesterly direction to the town of Tatanka, the sum of $5,000, in accordance with the report of the Secretary of the Interior of December 7, 1914, made in pursuance of the provisions of section 20 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915," approved August 1, 1914: Provided, That such sum shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior in such manner and at such times as he may deem proper, in the employment of Indian labor for the construction of said road or highway, and that the same shall be reimbursable from the Standing Rock Reservation 3 per cent fund under the act of February 14, 1913 (37 Stat. L., p. 675).

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. MANN. Is this road to be constructed for the benefit of the Indians?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes, sir; it is. That would be but a small portion of the expense.

Mr. MANN. Is it a part of a through road?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes; it is part of a through road from Chicago to Seattle, going through the Standing Rock Reservation.

Mr. MANN. Is it a wagon road?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Is it the purpose of this proposition to build a road for the benefit of the local Indians there or for the white Indians throughout the United States who want to travel by automobile routes?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. If the gentleman would permit me, I think I could explain the entire situation in a few minutes.

Mr. MANN. I would be glad if the gentleman would do so.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, this road is in the Standing Rock Reservation, in North and South Dakota. In 1914 this House made an appropriation of $1,000 to investigate the necessity and practicability of constructing a wagon road or highway through this reservation. The report of the Department of the Interior, of Secretary Lane, of date September 7, 1914, is to the effect that it is practicable. As a matter of fact, during the past year and a half $10,000 has been expended from the funds of these Indians in that reservation, when they needed work and money, in building roads that are lateral to and run into this road, but there is no good highway that will let these Indians get to the towns.

This appropriation, coming out of their funds, to be reimbursable, is intended to be used on this main highway, which will give them access to all the towns of South Dakota and connect up with the laterals previously made from money derived from the Indian funds.

Mr. MANN. Do I understand that the Interior Department has gone ahead building roads for the Indians, lateral roads, with no place for the roads to run to?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. The money was expended not so much on account of the roads as to give the Indians work. It will cost $27,000 to construct this road across the reservation. Eighteen thousand dollars of this amount will be paid under an agreement made by the Yellowstone Trail Association. Nine thousand dollars is to be paid by the county of Corson, and half of that is covered by the appropriation of $5,000.

Mr. MANN. So that the Indians pay only a small proportion.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Only a very small proportion of the $27,000. Now, the county of Corson is absolutely unable to build this road, because this Indian land is there, which is not taxable; and the Indians will get as much benefit out of the road as anyone else. Again, it is going to be necessary to give work to some of these Indians who are poor, and we simply want to put the work on a road where it will do them some good.

Mr. MANN. I can hardly appreciate the argument that we have got to appropriate money for the purpose of giving somebody work that they are willing to do. There is plenty of work that they could do if they were willing to work. However, I think the gentleman's explanation is a good one, if only a small amount is to be expended. I have no doubt the Indians will receive benefits to the extent of $5,000 if the road through their reservation is to cost a great deal more, and the larger part of the expense is to be paid by somebody else, and I will withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

UTAH.

SEC. 22. For support and civilization of Confederated Bands of Utes: For pay of 2 carpenters, 2 millers, 2 farmers, and 2 blacksmiths (art. 15, treaty of Mar. 2, 1868), $6,720; for pay of 2 teachers (same article and treaty), $1,800; for purchase of iron and steel and the necessary tools for blacksmith shops (art. 9, same treaty), $220; for annual amount for the purchase of beef, mutton, wheat, flour, beans, and potatoes, or other necessary articles of food and clothing, and farming equipment (art. 12, same treaty), $30,000; for pay of employees at the several Ute agencies, $15,000; in all, $53,740.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman of the committee a few questions.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. To what item does the gentleman refer?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The first item, under the head of "Utah."

I have no objections to this bill nor any desire to modify it and much less any intention to inflict any hardship on the Utes, because these Ute Indians originally came from Colorado and their reservation at the present time is in part across the line over in Utah. But I want to ask whether or not those Indians are at present wards of the Government or are they residents and citizens of the State of Utah?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Some of them, those who have had lands allotted to them and the restrictions removed, are voters and citizens of the State. Those who have not had their tribal relations dissolved under the laws in force are still the wards of the Nation.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Have you any lists of those who are citizens and those who are not, and at what agencies are they and how many Ute agencies are there?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Three—the Southern Ute, the Uintah and Ouray, and the Ute Mountain Agency.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Is there not one over at Fort Duchesne also?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That may be a subdivision of one of the bands. I do not know enough about the geography of that country to state, but those are the names carried on the books—the Southern, the Uintah and Ouray, and the Ute Mountain.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Every year there are some Ute Indians come over into Colorado hunting, and the citizens of that part of the State would much prefer that they keep out. They do not intend any harm; but they will kill game, and we have had trouble with them. In 1887 we had a war with them which cost the State of Colorado some several hundred thousand dollars. Last fall a number of them came over into Colorado, and when we appealed to the commissioner and the Indian agents to remove them, they claimed they had no authority over them; that they were citizens of the United States, and residents and voters of Utah. I received a letter just a few days ago from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs upon this subject. The Colorado game and fish commissioner and his assistants and the sheriff of Rio Blanco have appealed to me to induce the Federal officials to keep those Indians out of Colorado, and I have taken the matter up with the Federal officials. But they disclaim any authority to do anything with those Utes, as is shown by this correspondence. I will insert four or five short letters for reference, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, January 15, 1916.

Hon. EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. TAYLOR: There is returned herewith your file of correspondence relative to the band of Ute Indians which left their reservation in Utah and went over into the western part of Rio Blanco County, Colo.

As heretofore pointed out, these Indians went there on the invitation, solicitation, or encouragement of a resident or residents of that locality. While the agent has been instructed to do what he can to get these Indians to return to the reservation, and he has been doing as much apparently as he can to accomplish that end, it should be borne in mind that these Indians are citizens of the State of Utah, and it is not believed that the Government has a right to compel them to return. (See United States v. Crook, 5 Dillon, 453.)

I have been advised that these Indians are not killing game or doing any other wrongs in the county where they are sojourning, and it is also understood that they are not trespassing on any privately owned land. If they are doing any wrong there, such acts would come under the jurisdiction of the State of Colorado and not the Federal Government.

In view of the absence of authority in me to compel their removal by force, there appears to be nothing more to do than to continue to advise the Indians to return, as is now being done by Supt. Kneale, as shown in his letter to Mr. W. B. Frazier, dated October 5, 1915, one of the inclosures of your letter.

Supt. Kneale has been ordered to Washington and will arrive some time next week. Should you desire to talk the situation over with him during his stay in the city, kindly advise me and I will arrange for a conference.

Sincerely, yours,

CATO SELLS, Commissioner.

MY DEAR MR. TAYLOR: With further reference to your letter of September 28, relative to the band of Ute Indians going into the western part of Rio Blanco County, Colo., you are advised that I am now in receipt of a communication from Supt. Kneale, of the Uintah and Ouray Reservation, Utah, and a copy of his letter is inclosed herewith for your information.

COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: This acknowledges receipt of the above-cited office letter, dated October 9, 1915, together with inclosed copy of letter from the Hon. EDWARD T. TAYLOR, referring further to certain Ute Indians of this jurisdiction being in western Colorado.

Relative to this matter I desire to state that in the spring of 1915, when this matter was first agitated, it was widely reported that several hundred heavily armed Ute Indians from this jurisdiction were unlawfully in the country about Rangely, Colo. Diligent inquiry locally convinced me that these reports were largely exaggerated, and complying with instructions from the Indian Office I sent trustworthy representatives into that country to ascertain just how many Indians from this jurisdiction were over there, and further to endeavor to secure their return to the reservation. These representatives returned to Fort Duchesne and reported that there were approximately 20 or 30 Indians from this jurisdiction over there; that they had advised these Indians that it was my desire and the desire of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that they return to their homes on the reservation. These Indians refused to do this, stating that they were citizens of the United States and citizens of the State of Utah; that they were violating no laws of Utah, of Colorado, or of the United States; that they were camping on the public domain, and that they had a perfect right so to do. Shortly thereafter these Indians began to return to the reservation, and about the middle of August one of the agency physicians visited in that country and ascertained that about three families of Indians, a total of about 12 souls, were remaining in western Colorado. Since that time this office has learned of but one family going over there, and the head of this family became sick soon after he had got there and they returned to their homes on the reservation.

At the present writing, to the best of my knowledge and belief, not to exceed three families of those that went early in the season are remaining in that country. The heads of these three families are somewhat obstinate and declare that they intend to remain there. However, it is my opinion, and the opinion of the Indian friends and relatives of these three families, that they will in the very near future return to the reservation of their own accord.

It it is probably true that for the past two weeks or three weeks Indians from this jurisdiction have been on the border between Utah and Colorado hunting. This locality is their old hunting ground, and every fall various parties go to these hills for the purpose of getting a little venison. The season is open, and in all probability the only violation of law that occurs is that the Indian has not obtained a formal license. These Indians who are hunting over there will return to their own grounds in a very few days, and in my opinion the matter in its present aspects is not entitled to any very serious attention.

Respectfully.

ALBERT H. KNEALE, Superintendent.

STATE OF COLORADO,
DEPARTMENT OF GAME AND FISH,
Denver, November 12, 1915.

Hon. EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
Glenwood Springs, Colo.

MY DEAR MR. TAYLOR: As per our conversation of yesterday, I am inclosing herewith the last letter I received from the superintendent of the Uintah and Ouray Indian Agency, same being self-explanatory. The agent's name is Albert H. Kneale. This I ascertained from a mimeograph circular letter touching upon Indian lands, which was inclosed.

Colorado certainly desires some assistance in the matter of protecting our game animals from these Indians, and I wish to thank you in advance for any effort you may make in our behalf.

Assuring you of my readiness to reciprocate, I am, with kindest personal regards,

Yours, very truly,

W. B. FRASER,
Game and Fish Commissioner.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES INDIAN SERVICE,
UINTAH AND OURAY SCHOOL,
Fort Duchesne, Utah, October 5, 1915.

Mr. W. B. FRASER,
Game and Fish Commissioner,
Capitol Building, Denver, Colo.

DEAR SIR: In response to yours of September 29 relative to certain Indians visiting in the Rangeley district, I desire to advise you that I will do everything in my power to secure the return of these Indians to the reservation. However, the Indians in question are all citizens of the State of Utah, voters, and this office has no jurisdiction over them other than it has over any other citizen of the State of Utah. The Indians advised me that they are not unlawfully killing any game and that it is not their intention so to do. However, I would much prefer that they should return to the reservation, and I will do everything, as I have said before, to bring about the result.

Respectfully,

ALBERT H. KNEALE,
Superintendent.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. As I understand the matter, the Uncompahgre or Southern Ute Tribe have part of their territory in Utah and part of it in Colorado.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The part in Colorado is down at the extreme southwestern corner of the State. I am referring to the Utes that are in eastern Utah, the former White River Utes. It would seem as though the agencies ought to have a little better control over them in some way.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This whole thing is a treaty item, as I understand it. These three different bands of Indians were all known as the Ute Indians at first. Before they were segregated they owned a tract of land in common, part of the Ute Nation being in Utah, and, I think, some of them as far south as New Mexico; and their land included a great deal of the western portion of the gentleman's State of Colorado. Then they were segregated and the Indians were divided into different bands, with three different agencies over the country. Under the treaties made with the Indians I do not know whether they reserved the right to go into Colorado to hunt or not.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. They have no treaty or legal right to do that; but they do so, and the people complain about it. We have a close season on game in Colorado. Nobody has a right to kill deer in my State. We are trying to preserve the game in Colorado, and the people and officials do not like the idea of these little bands of roaming Indians slaughtering our deer. They ought not to be encouraged to violate the law nor encouraged in asserting rights to occupy or hunt upon Colorado territory, when they have no such right. The sooner the Indians clearly understand this the better it will be for both them and the whites.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Does the gentleman consider Indians as game?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Oh, no; but the Indians come over there and kill our deer. White men would be sent to jail for four years if they killed as many deer as these Indians killed in my State last fall. Yet the agencies claim they have no jurisdiction over them, because they are citizens and voters in Utah. The Indians are not civilized very fast that way.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Has not the gentleman's State jurisdiction over them?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. That is what I am trying to find out. If they are citizens of Utah, then, of course, we have a right to treat them as citizens and arrest them and put them in jail; but if they are wards of the Government, we would have some hesitancy about interfering with them. If they are citizens of Utah—and that is conceded—we can and will hereafter treat them accordingly and punish them for violating our laws.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Is it not a fact that these Ute Indians at one time owned by right of cession a part of Colorado?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Oh, yes; prior to 1880; about 11,000,000 acres.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. They ought to have some rights there yet, I think, which ought to be respected by the white men. I think, perhaps, the gentleman's remarks should be directed to another item. This is a treaty item.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I think that is probably so. I was just speaking generally about the Ute situation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Then I will wait until the Clerk reads the next paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the pro forma amendment, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the support and civilization of detached Indians in Utah, including pay of employees, $10,000.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I should like to inquire who are the detached Indians who are referred to in this item?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They are roving bands of Indians who will not stay on either one of these reservations. Here is what the department says about them:

Previous to the activities made possible by this legislation there were a number of roving bands of Indians, altogether about 1,200, scattered throughout the State not under jurisdiction. Many of these were in a destitute condition and in many cases annoyed the white people of the State through depredations.

That is what we were talking about.

It became necessary, therefore, to establish some some of jurisdiction over these Indians the origin of the legislation being an appropriation for the relief of certain bands in the vicinity of Skull Valley and Deep Creek, reports of their condition having reached the office.

Since the appointment of a responsible official much has been accomplished in the way of building Indian houses, instruction in farming, supplying agricultural implements, seed, fencing material, etc., but not nearly all that needs being done. The value of the crops raised during the past fiscal year approximates $4,562. Rations are not issued. Many of these Indians have valuable water rights, which require protection and use. Supervision is a difficult task because they are so widely scattered and much traveling is necessary.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Are any of these Indians working anywhere or in any manner? I mean those Utah Indians.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They seem to be raising crops valued at $4,562.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Where did they raise them?

Mr. HOWELL. If the gentleman will pardon me, I want to say that these detached Indians number about 1,200. They are located in various settlements and are engaged in the work of agriculture, and are in the way of civilization. The appropriation has been very helpful, because it relieves the people of the burden of these roaming bands of Indians, and it has also induced them to settle in different locations by themselves where they have lands, with water rights, and they are now pursuing the ways of industry and civilization.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. When the Indian agents disclaim any power to compel these Indians to return to the reservation or do anything with them, and tell us that they are not responsible at all for them, what are these agents doing?

Mr. HOWELL. The roaming bands of Indians do not trouble the gentleman in Colorado, they are not located in or near Colorado.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Some of them come into Colorado nearly every year and kill the deer in our State. If they can not be stopped, there will not be a deer left in Colorado five years from now. They kill them in the fall when the deer go down out of the mountains to the lower lands in western Colorado.

Mr. HOWELL. The Indians against whom the gentleman complains are living on the Indian reservation and are under the supervision of the agency. His complaint ought to be directed toward the agent in charge of the Indian reservation. They have 2,000,000 acres in that reservation, and the most of it has been thrown open to settlement. They have some land in common, and they have an allotment of 160 acres for the head of a family and 80 acres to each member of the tribe for agricultural purposes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. We are spending all this money on them. Why do not the agents exercise some control over them?

Mr. KONOP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. KONOP. Does the gentleman contend that if an Indian comes into the State of Colorado, whether he comes from an Indian reservation or somewhere else, and violates the laws of Colorado, that they can not prosecute him?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I think that is true; but in former years whenever we have tried to do anything with them we were told that they were the wards of the Government and we could not rightfully punish them.

Mr. KONOP. But if they violate the laws of Colorado they are liable to arrest and punishment.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I think so, and at the same time our authorities have not felt like dealing harshly with them. We would rather they would stay away. They ought not to be encouraged in idleness and bad habits.

Mr. KONOP. If the State authorities are lenient, that is a matter to settle with the State authorities.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States, within his discretion, the sum of $300,000 of the principal funds to the credit of the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians and to expend the sum of $50,000 of said amount for the benefit of the Ute Mountain (formerly Navajo Springs) Band of said Indians in Colorado, and the sum of $200,000 of said amount for the Uintah, White River, and Uncompahgre Bands of Ute Indians in Utah, and the sum of $50,000 of said amount for the Southern Ute Indians in Colorado, which sums shall be charged to said bands, and the Secretary of the Interior is also authorized to withdraw from the Treasury the accrued interest to and including June 30, 1916, on the funds of the said Confederated Bands of Ute Indians appropriated under the act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat. L., p. 934), and to expend or distribute the same for the purpose of promoting civilization and self-support among the said Indians, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided, That hereafter the said Secretary of the Interior shall report to Congress, on the first Monday in December, 1917, a detailed statement as to all moneys expended as provided for herein.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee where all this Ute Indian money comes from.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is a part of a judgment obtained in the Court of Claims under an amendment put onto the Indian appropriation bill in the Senate, January, 1909, by Senator Teller. That amendment became a law. The Court of Claims, years afterwards, found a judgment in favor of these Indians and against the United States in the sum of $3,305,275.19, to remain in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians, bearing 4 per cent interest from February 13, 1911. That was the date of the judgment, both principal and interest to be available under annual appropriations by Congress for cash payment to said Indians, or for expenditure for their benefit in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior. The money comes from the tribal fund.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I do not believe for a minute that Senator Teller ever knowingly did anything wrong. But if that bill directing the Court of Claims to render that judgment was rushed through the Senate and House, as it seems to have been, on March 3, 1909, the last day that Senator Teller served in the Senate, and if that amendment was passed in his name, I can not resist the belief that the old gentleman was imposed upon by somebody. The treaty by which the Ute Indians were removed from Colorado to Utah provided that whenever these Colorado lands were sold by the Government of the United States the Indians should receive $1.25 an acre for the land as it was sold. The Indians were not to get $1.25 an acre for it until the land was sold.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is true. What was the date of the treaty?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. June 15, 1880 (21 U. S. Stats., 199).

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That was the origin of this suit, and that is why it was submitted to the Court of Claims.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. It seems that that law was a rider put on in the Senate submitting it to the Court of Claims and virtually directing the Court of Claims to render a judgment against the United States for millions of dollars that I do not think was at all authorized by that treaty or any other way.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It directed this suit to be submitted to the Court of Claims and the Court of Claims found that this amount of money was due.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. And that is the source of all this money that is being now appropriated to those Indians?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is correct.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Have you any authorizations like this judgment referred to herein, Thirty-seventh Statute at Large, page 934, in this bill?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. None whatever.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. What I can not understand is why, when a treaty provides very plainly that whenever the land is sold, and not otherwise, the Indians shall get $1.25 an acre, and then when something like 3,000,000 acres of that land are merely put into a forest reserve, not sold, and the Government has not parted title to it, when it is in law subject to entry under the homestead and preemption law and the mineral-land law, how the Indians can rightfully or legally get a judgment from the Court of Claims against the United States for $1.25 per acre for all of that forest reservation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman will have to try that out with the Court of Claims. The Indians seem to have been successful in getting it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. How much of a fee did some attorneys get out of it?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The attorneys got $210,973.86.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Is it not true that there never were any hearings before the committee or any testimony offered and that it was practically a judgment entered by consent of the Government attorneys? Virtually a default judgment. I can not find any record of any hearing on this matter before any committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

[By unanimous consent, the time of Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado was extended five minutes.]

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Colorado must be mistaken about that. It would be the duty of the Department of Justice to appear on behalf of the Government. Certainly the Department of Justice would not have permitted a default in judgment to be taken against the United States.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I read the opinion of the court in that case several years ago. I do not know whether there was any evidence taken; I doubt if there was.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. There was no hearing before the committee.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. It was not before the committee, it was decided in the Court of Claims.

Mr. MANN. It was inserted in the Indian bill in the Senate, and it is not the first one that was improperly inserted in a bill in the Senate by the distinguished gentleman who represented that State at the other end of the Capitol. The opinion in the case, which came as a sort of shock to the Members of the House, entering judgment of several million dollars against the United States, is rather a well-reasoned opinion. I think, however, that the gentleman from Colorado can see some equity in the proposition. If the United States agrees to take the land of the Indians and pay them for that land when sold, and then the Government instead of offering it for sale segregates it as Government property to keep for the Government so that it can not be sold directly to settlers, that there is some basis of a claim that the Indians are entitled to be paid by the Government for the value of the property which they would have received if the Government had sold it. And while I do not wholly agree with that opinion, still there is the judgment of the Court of Claims, and there is nothing we can do except to say that that money belongs to the Indians. There was a strong demand when the judgment was rendered to have the money turned over to the Indians.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The lawyers got their fee, did they not, a long time before the Indians got any?

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, the lawyers ought to get their fees, and usually do, if they have anything to say about it. I do not know whether there was an exorbitant fee in this case or not. Doubtless, however, it was a fee that was approved in advance by agreement with the Secretary of the Interior. It might have been too much.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, my remembrance is that it was approved by the court.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I will say that this fee was authorized to be fixed by the Court of Claims that tried the case, by the act which sent the matter to the Court of Claims.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. It looks to me as though the mistake is in the act itself rather than in the judgment of the Court of Claims.

Mr. MANN. If my distinguished friend from Colorado, instead of looking at the past, although that is good information, will watch a lot of these bills that are floating around here, which will shortly be reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to refer a lot of other old claims that have not half the basis of this claim, and will help kill those bills, he will render the Treasury of the United States a great service.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I will try to kill them if I can.

Mr. KONOP. That is, if they do not apply to the gentleman's State.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. It makes no difference what State they apply to, if they are apparently without any justice, as this looks to me. That bill was apparently rushed through this House on the night of the 3d of March, the last night of the session, when they were about to adjourn.

Mr. MANN. You can not get anybody in this House to defend the methods by which that legislation got into the Indian appropriation act. The conferees of the House doubtless were not informed upon the subject and were forced to agree to a proposition to refer a claim to the Court of Claims.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The treaty was plain itself, and it seems to me the claim ought not to have been referred to the Court of Claims. I do not see why that court should have had anything to do with the matter. If there was any sums due the Indians, Congress would have appropriated the amount to them. There was no necessity of resorting to the Court of Claims.

Mr. MANN. The usual method is to assume that to refer a matter to the Court of Claims is fair upon its face, but the trouble is that they usually couple with it—and I do not know whether it is so in this case or not—some regulation controlling the Court of Claims which gives the case of the Government away in advance, and the gentleman will find that in all of these bills now pending.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I think somebody must have been asleep or hornswoggled into doing something of that kind in this case. But nobody can watch everything that passes on the last day of the last session of Congress. That is the time when most of the things pass that ought not to pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I want to make another suggestion to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. My thought about the matter is that if it is the policy of the Committee on Indian Affairs or the Court of Claims in the face of a plain treaty that says that they shall be paid $1.25 an acre when the land is sold and nothing more, to charge for the use of the land and make the people who live upon it—and I live in Glenwood Springs upon the old Ute Indian Reservation myself—pay for, or pay a royalty upon, all the coal, timber, oil, gas, grazing, and everything else that they take off of that land or use it for, it is for many years to come going to be a very great hardship upon the users of and consumers upon that original Ute territory in my State. I am looking to the future instead of to the past. I am not trying to get or thinking about getting back any of that money, but thinking about how much more we may have to pay if that kind of a scheme can be enacted again.

Mr. MANN. This is the Uintah Reservation?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. MANN. It has been a matter of active dispute, bitter dispute, in this House ever since I have been a Member of the House. I think one of the first bitter debates I ever heard in the House was in reference to some disposition of lands in this reservation, and it has been running along ever since. How this got to the Court of Claims I do not know, except that doubtless it looked like a reasonable proposition to some gentleman.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. There are only 2,021 Utes altogether. Here is a judgment against the United States for $6,203,767.21, and after graciously allowing the Government the credits they had to, the balance or final judgment against the Government was $3,516,231.05. I do not believe the Government ever owed them any such sum. That is $1,739.85 apiece for every Ute Indian in the United States. Moreover, it looks to me as though there is such a thing among the Indians as well as the whites of having too much money for their own welfare.

Mr. MANN. Of course that does not apply to either the gentleman from Colorado or myself.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Certainly not; but I think it is a notorious fact that there is mighty little work being done by the Ute Indians, and comparatively little advancement being made by them, whereas with the Navajoes, where they do not have so much money, they are working; they have to work; and as a result they are progressing faster, if my information is correct. Of course I assume that the Bureau of Indian Affairs is wisely and beneficially expending that money.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. What would the gentleman suggest should be done with the money?

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. Do I get the gentleman's complaint to be that those Indians in his neighborhood have too much money?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Not if they will use it for any proper or beneficial purpose; but if they are squandering these large sums in idleness and dissipation, they have. They might be better off with less money and more work. I do not mean to imply that the money is being wasted or unwisely expended. My impression is that the Utes in southwestern Colorado are doing better than those Utah Utes.

Mr. NORTON. Is the gentleman complaining that the opportunity out there is not free for the white settlers to get part of the money readily enough?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. We do not want those Utah Indians or their money in Colorado; we want them to keep out of the State; but they come over there and idle around for months and months and are more or less of a nuisance to our people. It seems to me as though there is some lax methods in the handling of those Indians, as well as in the manner in which this enormous grab, as it looks to me, upon the Federal Treasury for their benefit was obtained. I want to see the Indians treated right, and I will go as far as anyone in seeing that they get all that is coming to them, and I want to see them properly cared for, whether there is anything coming to them or not; but I think Congress can treat the Indians fairly without tolerating any more claims or judgments of that kind.

Mr. HOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Certainly.

Mr. HOWELL. I just want to suggest to the gentleman from Colorado that these Indians originally belonged to Colorado and by some means or other they were transplanted to Utah, so if they wander back to their original home once in a while the gentleman ought not to complain, inasmuch as Colorado was able to get rid of them altogether.

Mr. MANN. Are they hyphenated citizens?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I am complaining more particularly about Congress allowing what looks to me as though it were utterly outrageous claim against the Government of the United States for over $3,500,000 without any foundation for it in justice, law, or treaty, as I understand it.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I will.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentleman has spoken of this matter several times as being a grafting, outrageous claim——

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I say it looks to me that way.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. And for which there is no foundation of fact or equity. Let me tell the committee what I know of this matter. The first I remember hearing of this matter was when I went into a conference some three or four years ago on the Indian appropriation bill. We found a paragraph in that bill which, as I remember now, presented an adjudicated claim or judgment on behalf of these Indians for several million dollars. The paragraph provided that all of it should be made available for the Indians. In justification of this paragraph the managers on the part of the Senate presented the judgment of the Court of Claims, and also the statement that the white man had taken the Indians' land away from them, the Federal Government agreeing to give the Indians the amount of money which had not at that time been paid and for which this judgment was to be the satisfaction. So the status of the matter appeared to us to be that the Indians claimed to have been wronged by the white man, and asked to go into the white man's court to adjudicate the matter. The white man has permitted the Indians to go into his court, and the white man's court has given the judgment for the amount of money, all of which, as I remember now, we were asked at that time to appropriate and turn into the hands of the Indians. It was agreed by some of the conferees that such policy as this would not be beneficial to the Indians, so the paragraph was rewritten, providing that a certain part of the judgment should be paid to the Indians per capita and used for their civilization and the other part to be paid by later appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I ask to be recognized in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman. But the gentleman from Colorado says it is graft. I am not assuming to say that the Court of Claims rendered an unjust judgment, and I am not assuming to say that they rendered a just judgment, but this I do say: The adjudication of this matter in the Court of Claims was certified to Congress, and the amount was reduced at the suggestion of the managers on the part of the House, placed in the bill, and it was clearly shown, without contravention, so far as I can remember, that this was compensation for lands which had been taken from these Indians at $1.25 per acre.

It is, Mr. Chairman, indeed surprising to me, coming from a State that has honored an Indian citizen with its governorship, coming from a State that has honored an Indian citizen with a seat in the United States Senate, coming from a State which has honored an Indian citizen with a lieutenant governorship, coming from a State which has honored a full-blooded Indian with the speakership of our State house of representatives; I repeat, it is more than passing strange to me that a Representative on the floor of this House would regale himself in this manner with reference to the same Indians who originally owned the larger portion of the State which he now enjoys the privilege of living in.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I do.

Mr. McKENZIE. I believe Indians in the State of Oklahoma have the right to vote.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes, sir.

Mr. McKENZIE. Do they have the same privilege in the State of Colorado?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. As I am now advised, I would say not.

Mr. McKENZIE. I would like to know.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I do not know of any Indians in Colorado who are voters.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, this presents just another case of mistreatment and contempt of the Indian. It presents the same old story of the great Genoese navigator when he landed on the sunny shores of San Salvador. He asked to be permitted to land and spend the night. Having planted his tent, the next morning he planted a cross, and under the guise of a pretended Christianity, he claimed the island for his own. It is the same mistreatment which has followed the Indian all through the country until he is crowded down on a small reservation in the West, and I am surprised that the gentleman, warm-hearted, congenial, and sympathetic, as I know my friend from Colorado to be, after these Indians have surrendered more than 10,000,000 acres of land for the benefit of his State, now used, not for the benefit of the Indian but as a forest reserve for all the citizens of the United States; I am surprised, I say, that the distinguished gentleman should continually denominate the judgment of the Court of Claims, his own court, in rendering a judgment in favor of paying for these lands, of which they were deprived, as graft and fraud. His court has passed upon it and said the Indians were entitled to it. That ought to operate as a complete estoppel from any such charge. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman from Oklahoma that I have just as much sympathy for the Indians as anybody. I want to see them treated fairly and justly. In fact, we in Colorado have rather a kindly feeling toward the Ute Indians, notwithstanding they have caused us a great deal of trouble and expense and notwithstanding they killed some of our citizens last fall, and I have a bill here now for a claim for a death caused by them. I am not complaining of the Utes, but of the whites. I am criticizing what I believe was an unwarranted act of Congress, because I do not want it to occur again, if I can prevent it. There was a treaty of June 15, 1880, with these Ute Indians. They were given lands in Utah in lieu of lands in Colorado, and in addition the Government was to give them $1.25 an acre for land whenever it was sold. That is, whenever the Government issued a patent to a settler for 160 acres, the Utes got $200. There were about 11,000,000 acres in the entire former Ute Indian Reservation in western Colorado and about 3,200,000 acres of that were several years ago put into forest reserves. Now, it seems that some ingenious and enterprising lawyers conceived the scheme of claiming that because some of that Indian reservation was put in a forest reserve that that was the same as a sale of that territory by the Government and rendered the Government liable to its Utes for $1.25 an acre for all of that land. Notwithstanding that the Government had not sold an acre of it, had not parted with the title of an acre of it, and had not received a dollar's worth of benefit from it. It costs the Government twice as much as it gets out of the forest reserve to administer them. Moreover, those forest-reserve lands are subject to entry under the homestead law and the mineral-land laws, and every year large tracts of forest-reserve lands are being eliminated from these reserves.

The Government made a fair and square treaty with the Ute Indians and has paid them their money as fast as it was due them, and if claims of that kind can be sustained, I am wondering where this thing is going to end.

The Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office have recently rendered decisions based upon that judgment of the Court of Claims, and those decisions are seriously and, I think, unjustly affecting the citizens upon that former Ute Indian reservation, whom I represent, and I fear that those decisions are soon going to form the basis for some more enterprising attorneys to attempt another gigantic haul on the Federal Treasury.

The Interior Department is assuming that that judgment is valid and is based upon the law; that is, that it is the actual determination of the Court of Claims upon the justness of the matter, whereas my contention is that that decision was rendered by the specific direction of a wrongful act of Congress, without any regard for the merits or justness of the claims in law.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. What does he complain they are charging for, the 3,000,000 acres in the reservation or the land outside of the reservation?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Both of them. The Indians are getting double pay. They are collecting the $1.25 an acre for all the lands sold and for all in the forest reserves that have not been sold and are also now trying to charge us for the use of the timber and everything else, both on the outside and inside of the forest reserves.

Mr. NORTON. Outside of the forest reserve?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. Have the Indians parted by treaty with their mineral rights in the land?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; they parted by and in their treaty with all their rights in the land, excepting that they were to be credited with $1.25 an acre whenever the Government sold any of it. They have no right to collect a royalty off of us people for all time for the land that is too worthless to be sold.

Mr. NORTON. Does the gentleman maintain this, that the Indians are securing from the whites land they are entitled to under their treaties?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I think the Utes are getting more money from the Government out of that former reservation than the treaty entitled them to, and I think the Government is getting the worst of it. I am not criticizing the Utes for taking it. I congratulate them upon their good luck, and I want to see them get the money, but I do not want to see them get any more that way.

Mr. NORTON. I want to tell the gentleman if that is true, and I do not think it is, it is the first time in all the history of this country that any Indians obtained more from the whites than they are entitled to under their treaty.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Well, this is once when the Indians have got the best of Uncle Sam. They are getting something over $3,500,000 more than, I think, their treaty provides for, and that is not the end of it. I have nothing against the Indians, but that judgment does not look right to me.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. If the gentleman will pardon me, in the case of these forest reserves, where the Indian is practically excluded from the land, and certainly deprived of all use of it, and it is set apart in perpetuity for that purpose, is it not right that the Indian should receive pay for the land taken from him?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. They receive pay for all land sold. The land is not set apart in perpetuity. The Government is selling it all the time and turning over the proceeds to the Indians, in accordance with the treaty.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. I do not know under what particular terms the forest reserve you have reference to is held, but I do know in the case of the other forest reserves it is practically set apart in perpetuity in many instances, and under those circumstances is it not right that they should receive pay for that land that belonged to them?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. They have already been paid for all the land the Government has sold, and there was no authority for paying the Indians for the use of the land before it was sold. What right have the Ute Indians, either by law or by treaty or in justice or equity, to charge white settlers for the use of the land outside of the forest reserve and come in here every few years by a bunch of attorneys with a new bill referring some unjust claim to the Court of Claims, with instructions to enter judgment against the United States? Is there no limit to this thing?

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. In what manner is this land subject to the homestead entry?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Under the law authorizing homesteads in forest reserves.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Very good. Then the Indian is deprived of the use of it or the benefit of it?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Oh, no. When the Government parts title to any of that land by homestead entry or mineral entry, or otherwise, the Ute Indians get $1.25 an acre for it; but they have, in my judgment, no legal right to charge the United States Government for the use of any of that land prior to the time that the Government parted with title to it. Whenever the Government sells the land, when it goes into private ownership, then under the terms of that treaty the Ute Indians are entitled to receive $1.25 an acre for the land, and they have always received it. That is the way I understand that treaty, and that is what I have been trying to explain.

I am not charging anybody connected with this entire transaction with any corruption or with knowingly doing anything wrong. I understand that several distinguished Colorado citizens, who have since passed away, were active in bringing about this judgment. And if I did not fear that a repetition of this judgment was in contemplation, I would not take up the time of the House this long in calling attention to the matter. I personally do not agree with the justness of that claim, and if it is going to be repeated on some pretext or other for the purpose of getting another judgment against the Government and inflicting an unjust hardship upon the people who reside now upon the former Ute Indian Reservation in my district, I feel it my duty to prevent that action if I can.

After the Meeker massacre and the Thornburg massacre of the whites by the Ute Indians on this reservation about the year 1879, the Ute Indians were removed by the Government from that territory. They were given lands principally in Utah. The Government entered into a treaty with them, which treaty is dated June 15, 1880, appearing in the Twenty-first United States Statutes at Large, at page 199, providing that the land formerly held by the Ute Indians—shall be subject to cash entry only, in accordance with the existing law, and when sold the proceeds of said sale shall be first sacredly applied to reimburse the United States for all sums paid out or set apart under this act by the Government for the benefit of said Indians, and then to be applied in payment for the lands, at $1.25 per acre, which may be ceded to them by the United States outside of their reservation in pursuance of this agreement. And the remainder, if any, shall be deposited in the Treasury, as now provided by law, for the benefit of said Indians, in the proportion hereinbefore stated, and the interest thereon shall be distributed annually to them in the same manner as the funds provided for in this act.

My understanding of that language and that treaty is that as fast as the former Ute Indian Reservation is sold by the Government, the Indians are to be credited with $1.25 an acre, and the interest upon that amount was to be distributed to them annually. There was no other value fixed upon the land, or any provision for charging rental for the use of the land, or for water rights, or for timber, or coal, or anything else. The Government has already parted with title to practically all of that land that was very valuable, and the Utes have been paid for it. What there is left of it, both in and out of the forest reserves, is, generally speaking, rough and comparatively of inferior quality. But be that as it may, there is a small portion of it every year that goes into private ownership by preemption law, or homestead or desert-land claims, or otherwise, and the Indians are entitled to $1.25 an acre accordingly.

But notwithstanding the provisions of that treaty, there was an amendment, a rider, put on the general Indian appropriation bill after it left the House and was in the Senate in the closing days of the Sixtieth Congress, and it passed on March 3, 1909, in the final rush apparently of the last night of that session, and was enacted into law. That is what is referred to as the jurisdiction act (35 Stat., p. 788). That act, in my judgment, directly misconstrued that treaty with the Indians. It confers jurisdiction upon and directs the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render final judgment in favor of the Ute Indians as to—the value of all lands ceded by the said Indians which have been set apart and reserved from the public lands as public reservations, or for other public uses under existing laws and proclamations of the President, as if disposed of under the public-land laws of the United States, as provided by said agreement, and the money due therefor.

I can not understand what right Congress had to direct the Court of Claims to render a judgment against the United States for the value of that land that was put in the forest reserves, the same as if it had been sold under the public-land laws. The Indians were never to be paid for the land in accordance with its value. Probably two-thirds of all that land in the forest reserves had no value whatever, or at least comparatively little. That jurisdictional act, in my opinion, directed the Court of Claims to do something they had no legal right to do under the treaty, and as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has said, I do not agree that the judgment is just. Nevertheless the opinion carries out the instruction of that act of Congress. The judgment was rendered on May 23, 1910, and a supplementary judgment on February 13, 1911. The court gave judgment against the United States and in favor of the Ute Indians for $6,203,767.21, and allowed an offset of $2,795,155.81, being a net judgment against the United States of $3,516,231.05, and the court allowed the attorneys for their services in the matter 6 per cent of that judgment, which amounted to a fee of $210,973.86.

In fixing the amount of the lawyers' fees the court says, with apparent irony, that—

It doubtlessly took considerable patience and persistent work on the part of the claimants' attorneys to impress upon the committees of Congress the justness of a law which would regard such (forest) reservations as land actually sold.

My inference from that language is that the court took the same view of the treaty with the Indians that I do, that they were only entitled to receive pay for the land when it was actually sold, and that a presidential proclamation putting several million acres of the poorest part of that reservation into forest reserves could not by any stretch of the imagination be called a sale of it by the Government. To explain how this affects western Colorado I want to call attention to one instance.

Some of the Members of the House may remember that about a year and a half ago I had a bill pending before this House (H. R. 17263, 2d sess. 63d Cong.) providing for the adding of a portion of this former Ute Indian Reservation to the Uncompahgre National Forest for the purpose of protecting the water supply of the city of Montrose, Colo. There was no objection to the bill. The object of it was exceedingly meritorious—to prevent the pollution of the water supply of that city by a lot of migratory bands of sheep—and the bill had the hearty approval of the Forest Service. The land was vacant and of comparatively little value. But when the measure came up on the floor of the House and I was confronted with this judgment of the Court of Claims, and when the Interior Department rendered an opinion on the bill, that the placing of this tract of land in the forest reserve would at once, under that decision, creating a liability on the part of the Government to pay the Ute Indians $1.25 an acre for all of that land, I was unable to pass the bill, because the House was not in favor, nor was I myself, of putting something over a hundred thousand acres in the forest reserve for the protection of the water supply of a city, and thereby creating an obligation against the Government to pay to the Ute Indians over $125,000 for that land. The people are prevented from making a beneficial use of that land. That is merely one illustration of the injurious manner in which that decision of the Court of Claims is already affecting the inhabitants upon that former Indian reservation.

Recently there is being made an effort to charge for some scrubby timber on and also for grazing and generally for the use of this land outside of the forest reserves, and I prophesy now that there will be in the near future another effort made by some more enterprising attorneys to pass an act through Congress in some way further obligating the Government to pay claims that are in no way whatever provided for or contemplated in that original Ute treaty. And if Congress passes other acts like that, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has intimated they have done in the past, virtually directing and compelling the Court of Claims to render judgments that there is no prior law or authority for, that the people of my district will be ultimately compelled to pay, directly or indirectly, or burdened with the amounts of those judgments.

I can not find any report of any committee on this matter at or prior to the time that act was passed on March 3, 1909, and there does not seem to have ever been any report by the House Committee on Indian Affairs upon this subject, because it has always been put in in the Senate. But I will extend my remarks by inserting in the RECORD a portion of a report which I made from the Public Lands Committee on the Montrose bill, to which I have referred, in the Sixty-third Congress, which contains a statement upon this subject by the Commissioner of the General Land Office and also incorporates the judgment of the Court of Claims referred to.

I will also insert a report which I have found of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs of the Sixty-second Congress, third session, made on January 25, 1913, on Senate bill 7738—which bill was introduced "by request." That report contains quite an amount of data upon this subject and is an interesting and ingenious document, containing arguments in favor of these so-called Indian claims, and seems to have resulted in the jurisdictional act that is referred to here in this pending bill as the act of March 3, 1913 (37 Stats., 934). I think this information or material should be preserved for future reference:

[House of Representatives, Rept. No. 1073, 63d Cong., 2d sess.]

ADDITION TO UNCOMPAHGRE NATIONAL FOREST IN COLORADO.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, from the Committee on the Public Lands, submitted the following report (to accompany H. R. 17263):

The Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 17263) to reserve certain lands, to incorporate the same, and make them a part of the Uncompahgre National Forest in Colorado, having had the same under consideration, respectfully recommend that the bill be amended as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

* * * * * * *

And as so amended the committee recommend that the bill do pass.

The committee submitted this bill to the Secretary of Agriculture and Secretary of the Interior for reports, and those reports are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, July 10, 1914.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS,
Chairman Committee on the Public Lands,
House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: I wish to acknowledge receipt of a copy of the bill (H. R. 17263), introduced by Mr. TAYLOR, to reserve certain lands, to incorporate same, and make them a part of the Uncompahgre National Forest in Colorado, with the request that your committee be sent a report thereon.

The lands proposed to be added to the Uncompahgre National Forest are in two tracts. Those in townships 46, 47, and 48 north, ranges 4, 5, 6, and 7 west, are chiefly valuable for timber production, and much of it is covered with merchantable timber. It is of a character to warrant inclusion in a national forest under the act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat., 1095), and amendments thereto. These areas are similar to the forest lands in the Uncompahgre, to which they are contiguous. Their description was not known at the time the national forest was first created. Since the passage of the act of March 4, 1907 (34 Stat., 1256), which provides that no forest reserves shall be created nor additions made to any heretofore created, in Colorado, among other States, the lands can not be added by presidential proclamation. Because these areas are chiefly valuable for timber production and are of such a character and cover as to warrant their inclusion, it is believed that they should be made a part of the Uncompahgre National Forest.

The other tract described in the bill, in townships 47, 48, 49, and 50 north, ranges 7 and 8 west, is not potential forest land like the areas above described. At the present time it is used for grazing purposes. The local forest officers report that during recent years there have been serious conflicts between those grazing sheep and cattle upon the lands. It is now open to unrestricted grazing, and this has brought about the conflicts. It is also stated that a part of this watershed will be needed by the town of Gunnison for municipal water supply protection, and that certain officials are desirous of having the land placed under Government control so that the grazing of live stock there may be regulated and the contamination of the water supply prevented.

Several additions to the national forests have been made in other States in order to protect the waters needed by municipalities for domestic uses and in order to prevent the pollution of the water supplies. The administration of the two areas mentioned in the bill would not add materially to the cost of administering the Uncompahgre National Forest as a whole. If, therefore, your committee decides to add both areas to the existing Uncompahgre National Forest, this department will have no objection to the passage of the bill.

Very truly, yours,

C. F. MARVIN,
Acting Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, July 18, 1914.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS,
Chairman Committee on the Public Lands,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. FERRIS: In response to your request therefor, I have the honor to submit the following report on H. R. 17263:

The bill proposes to add certain therein-described lands in Colorado to the Uncompahgre National Forest.

I am advised by the Commissioner of the General Land Office that such lands adjoin the said national forest and extend northward therefrom, and have an estimated area of 110,630 acres, 65,030 acres thereof being surveyed. Such surveys were made between 1889 and 1902, and the field notes thereof show the greater portion to be mountainous or mesa land, with scattering spruce and aspen timber, dense undergrowth, and grasses; that the lands described in the bill in T. 48 N., R. 6 W., and in T. 47 N., R. 6 W., except the southeastern portion in Trident Mesa and those in the eastern portion of T. 47 N., R. 7 W., are fine grazing and agricultural lands, and that all the surveyed land is well watered by Willow, Pine, and Blue Creeks and the Cimarron River and their tributaries.

Twelve thousand eight hundred and forty acres of the area proposed to be reserved are included within entries and claims under the public-land laws of record, 9,280 acres thereof in entries upon which final certificate or patent has issued and 3,560 acres in unperfected entries, the location of such entries therein being indicated upon the accompanying diagram. Certain of the lands are subject to approved rights of way for reservoirs, canals, etc., under the act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat., 1095). A tract of 520 acres in sections 9 and 16, T. 47 N., R. 7 W., was reserved by the act of May 9, 1914 (Public, No. 97), to be purchased by the city of Montrose at $1.25 per acre for park purposes, and 29,330 acres are under withdrawal for coal classification.

The lands described in the bill are within that portion of the former Ute Indian Reservation ceded under agreement ratified by the act of June 15, 1880 (21 Stat., 199), subject to cash entry under said act and that of July 28, 1882 (22 Stat., 178), the proceeds of such sales to be deposited for the benefit of the Indians after deducting certain expenditures as therein provided. The act of June 13, 1902 (32 Stat., 384), extended the homestead laws over such lands and provided that any money lost to the Indian fund by virtue thereof should be made up by the Government.

Certain lands within such cession have been heretofore included within national forests. On May 23, 1910, the Court of Claims, in the case of the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians of Colorado v. The United States, under the jurisdiction conferred by the act of March 3, 1909 (35 Stat., 788, 789), held that the Indians should be credited with $1.25 an acre for such of said lands in forest reservations as had not been entered and paid for.

The area to be added to the Uncompahgre National Forest thereby is more extensive than its principal purpose, the protection of the water supply of Montrose, would seem to warrant, and includes agricultural lands, as hereinbefore stated, and certain areas that are heavily alienated, as shown by the accompanying diagram. No facts have been presented to me which, in my judgment, justify the creation of this proposed forest reservation and eliminating from homestead and similar uses these lands.

Should Congress deem it proper and wise to enact the proposed legislation, I would respectfully suggest the following changes in the segregation of the surveyed from the unsurveyed lands, and amendments.

* * * * * * *

Respectfully,

FRANKLIN K. LANE.

The committee has adopted all of the amendments suggested by the Secretary of the Interior, and the one amendment set forth above presents the bill in the form as it would read with the adoption of the recommendations of the Secretary.

As stated in the report of the Secretary of Agriculture, Colorado is one of the six States in which, since the act of March 4, 1907 (34 Stat., 1256), no forest reserves can be created nor additions made thereto by presidential proclamations. The only way any forest reserves can be enlarged in Colorado is by an act of Congress. This bill was introduced by Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, and reported by the committee at the earnest request of the authorities and citizens of the city of Montrose, who desire to have all of the western portion of this land incorporated in the forest reserve for the protection of the water supply of that city. They desire to guard or police the land adjacent to their city water supply canal and reservoir, in conjunction with the Forest Service officials at the expense of the city, for the purpose of preventing the pollution of the water. There is no way at the present time of regulating the use of the public domain upon which the city reservoir is situated and through which its water-supply canal runs for about 15 miles; and the city authorities and citizens have had so much annoyance with nomadic flocks of sheep and other indiscriminate use of that territory that they have for many years been appealing to Congress to incorporate all of that land in the forest reserve, and allow them under regulations which are now in use under the Forest Service to cooperate with them in the protection of their water supply. This bill is similar to a number of others that have been passed for the same purpose.

The eastern portion of the land sought to be incorporated in the forest reserve is more particularly for the protection of the grazing rights of the local settlers in and adjacent to that territory. There have been, in former years, very serious conflicts and strife between the sheep and cattle men for the control of that range, and the permanent citizens of that portion of the country have repeatedly petitioned Congress and the Colorado Representatives to add that territory to the Uncompahgre National Forest, and it is in compliance with those requests, as well as in conformity with the wishes and approval of the Forest Service, that the committee has included that territory in this bill.

It may be added that the Forest Service officials have made an exhaustive investigation and report upon the character of the land in that territory. This bill does not include all of the land sought by the settlers to be added to the reserve, but only such portions thereof as the Agriculture Department and the Forest Service recommend as being suitable for incorporation within the reserve.

The following petition, addressed to the author of the bill, from citizens and county officials of Gunnison County, adjacent to this forest reserve:

"PETITION.

"Hon. EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
"Congressman at Large for Colorado:

"We, the undersigned residents of Cimarron and Gunnison County, would respectfully ask you to push the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior for the extension of the Uncompahgre Forest Reserve. While it does not embrace as much as we had hoped, the addition as proposed will help some."

The city of Montrose also adopted a resolution in the nature of a memorial to Congress on this subject over two years ago, which reads as follows:

"RESOLUTION.

"Whereas the Uncompahgre National Forest Reserve as now established and maintained by the United States Government, as shown on the blue print hereto attached and made a part hereof, protects only a portion of the watershed of the Cimarron River and the Big and Little Cimarron Creeks; and

"Whereas the water supply of the city of Montrose for all uses, and especially for domestic use, is obtained from the said Cimarron River and its tributaries, and the health of the inhabitants of said city is greatly dependent upon a pure water supply; and

"Whereas the said city of Montrose also has a right to use water from the Gunnison Tunnel, whose source of supply is the Gunnison River, which at present is not under the control of the Government; and

"Whereas the city council of the city of Montrose believes it would greatly benefit the city and help it to secure and maintain a pure water supply for said city if the United States Government and Forest Service were in control of the watershed of the Cimarron River and Gunnison River, as shown on said blue print, and by the extension of said Uncompahgre National Forest, as shown by the red lines along the section and township lines marked on said map: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the city council of the city of Montrose, That the plan of enlarging the Uncompahgre National Forest, as shown by the red lines on the blue print hereto attached, be heartily indorsed, and that our Senators and Representatives in Congress be urged to immediately introduce and use their best endeavors to secure the passage of whatever legislation might be necessary to accomplish the enlargement of said Uncompahgre National Forest, as shown on said blue print, and that it is the belief of said city council that if the territory as indicated on said blue print were added to said Uncompahgre National Forest it would greatly benefit the health of all of the people of the city of Montrose and be a means of preventing much unnecessary sickness; and be it further

"Resolved, That a certified copy of this resolution be attached to said blue print and forwarded to our Representative in Congress.

"STATE OF COLORADO, County of Montrose, ss:

"I, S. V. Hobaugh, city clerk in and for the city of Montrose, State of Colorado, do hereby certify the above and foregoing to be a true, perfect, and complete copy of a resolution passed in the regular session of the city council, held at the city hall, in said city of Montrose on Thursday evening, February 2, 1911, as the same appears on file in my office.

"In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of the city of Montrose, at Montrose, in said county, this 3d day of February, A. D. 1911.

"[SEAL.] "S. V. HOBAUGH, City Clerk."

In view of the importance of the protection of the water supply for the city of Montrose your committee recommend the expeditious passage of this bill.

After receipt by the committee of the opinion of July 18, 1914, of the Interior Department upon this bill as above set forth, containing a reference to the Ute Indian treaty and the decision of the Court of Claims of May 23, 1910, and the possible effect that the passage of this act might have in relation thereto, the matter was again taken up with the Department of the Interior and an exhaustive research was made and careful consideration given to the legislation pertaining to the Ute Indians and decisions of the court and treaties of the Government with those Indians. The Commissioner of the General Land Office has determined that the addition to the Uncompahgre National Forest of the land embraced within this bill, which was formerly a part of the Ute Indian Reservation, would not create any additional liability against the Government in the absence of some special legislation to that effect. In other words, that decision of the Court of Claims was authorized by an act of Congress and was for the express purpose of creating a trust fund in lieu of the former trust fund, and with the understanding that the fund itself should not be paid to the Indians, but that the interest thereon at 4 per cent should be paid to them.

The decisions of the Court of Claims of May 23, 1910, and February 13, 1911, give such a complete statement of the rights of the Indians and the Government that they are herewith incorporated, together with the commissioner's letter to the author of this bill, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, August 4, 1914.

Hon. EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. TAYLOR: In response to your personal inquiry, I have the honor to inform you that the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims in the case of The Confederated Bands of Ute Indians of Colorado v. The United States had its source in a special act authorizing it to take action and, so far as this office is able to construe such decision, would probably not extend to additional forest reservations in the absence of additional legislation.

I inclose herein copy of the court's decision in said case of May 23, 1910, and modification of February 13, 1911. Under the jurisdiction conferred upon it by the act of March 3, 1909 (35 Stat., 788, 789), the Court of Claims was to determine and render final judgment on the claims and rights of such Indians under the agreement of June 15, 1880, "including the value of all lands ceded by the said Indians which have been set apart and reserved from the public lands as public reservations * * * as if disposed of under the public-land laws of the United States, as provided by said agreement, and the money due therefor."

The deficiency act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., 934), appropriated $3,305,257.19 for paying the net amount of the judgment of the Court of Claims in said suit into the Treasury.

Section 3 of the act of June 15, 1880 (21 Stat., 199), provided that lands within the cession ratified thereby should be subject to "cash entry only in accordance with existing law," the proceeds of such sales to be deposited for the benefit of the Indians, after deducting the amount necessary to reimburse the Government for all sums paid out or set apart under said act and $1.25 an acre for the lands allotted the Indians outside their reservation. The act of July 28, 1882 (22 Stat., 178), reaffirmed the provision of the act of June 15, 1880, that the ceded lands should be disposed of under cash entry only.

The act of May 17, 1900 (31 Stat., 179), known as the "free-homestead act," provided for homestead entries on lands acquired by treaty or agreement from the various Indian tribes, and relieved settlers from the conditions of payment for such lands, but provided "that all sums of money so released which if not released would belong to any Indian tribe, shall be paid to such Indian tribe by the United States."

Section 2 of the special act of June 13, 1902 (32 Stat., 384), extending the provisions of the homestead laws over the lands within the former Ute Indian Reservation in Colorado, provides "that all sums of money that may be lost to the Ute Indian fund by reason of the passage of this act shall be paid into the fund by the United States."

The money received from cash entries within the cession of 1880 is turned into the Treasury to the credit of the Ute fund.

Senate amendment No. 152 to the Indian appropriation bill, H. R. 12579, page 81, provided that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs should enter into an agreement with the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians for a final adjudication and settlement of all their claims against the United States arising under the agreement of June 15, 1880, or otherwise, but I am informally advised by the Indian Office that the bill was reported out of conference and passed without such provision.

Very respectfully, CLAY TALLMAN, Commissioner.

[Court of Claims of the United States. No. 30360. Decided May 23, 1910.]

THE WHITE RIVER UTES, THE SOUTHERN UTES, THE UNCOMPAHGRE UTES, THE TABEGUACHE, MUACHE, CAPOTE, WEEMINUCHE, YAMPA, GRAND RIVER, AND UINTA BANDS OF UTE INDIANS, KNOWN ALSO AS THE CONFEDERATED BANDS OF UTE INDIANS OF COLORADO, v. THE UNITED STATES.

This case having been heard by the Court of Claims, the court, upon the evidence, makes the following

FINDINGS OF FACT.

I. The plaintiffs are a confederated band of Ute Indians between whom and the Government of the United States the relation of guardian and ward has existed since February 2, 1848. On June 30, 1908, the total number of Indians composing the plaintiff confederated bands was as follows:

White River Utes, known also as the Yampa and Grand River Bands	295
Uinta Utes	427
Southern Utes, known also as the Muache, Capote, and Weeminuche Bands	808
Uncompahgre Utes, known also as the Tabeguache Band	470
Total	2,000

In their tribal relations they are known as the Uncompahgre, the Abeguache, Muache, Capote, Weeminuche, Yampa, Grand River, and Uinta Bands of Ute Indians, and also as the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians of Colorado; also as the White River Utes and the Southern Utes and the Uncompahgre Utes.

By an act of Congress approved March 3, 1909 (35 Stats., 788–789), jurisdiction was conferred upon the Court of Claims as follows:

"That to carry into effect the agreement between the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians of Colorado and the United States, ratified by the act of Congress approved June 15, 1880, being 'An act to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians in Colorado for the sale of their reservation in said State, and for other purposes, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same' (21 Stat., p. 199), jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render final judgment, with right of appeal as in other cases, on the claims and rights of said Indians under said agreement, including the value of all lands ceded by the said Indians which have been set apart and reserved from the public lands as public reservations or for other public uses under existing laws and proclamations of the President, as if disposed of under the public-land laws of the United States, as provided by said agreement, and the money due therefor; and the court shall set off against any sum found due said Indians the amount paid to them under the fifth section of said act of June 15, 1880, being $50,000 per annum up to the date of rendition of final judgment in this cause, also any other sum or sums that shall be found to be properly chargeable under the terms of said agreement, and also any sum or sums paid by the United States to or for the benefit of said Indians, whether as a gratuity or otherwise, except such sums as have been paid for a specific purpose and an adequate consideration; and the credit of $1,250,000 set apart in the Treasury by the terms of said agreement upon which said annuity has been estimated, shall, upon the rendition of final judgment in this cause, cease to exist as a trust fund, and from and after the date of said judgment no annuity shall be estimated or paid therefrom; and the action herein authorized shall be consolidated with cause congressional No. 11248, now pending in said court, for the purpose of using at the trial thereof all evidence which has been adduced in said pending cause, and shall be commenced by petition under the title of said pending cause and shall be conducted by the attorney of record now appearing therein or by any attorney by him specifically authorized to appear; and the Attorney General shall continue to appear and represent the United States; and in rendering judgment herein the court shall fix upon a quantum meruit and set apart just and reasonable compensation to the attorneys on behalf of plaintiffs who have rendered actual service in prosecuting said claim before the committees of Congress and in conducting the said cause before the courts in the name of the attorney of record in said pending cause, or any attorney by him specifically authorized, and said compensation shall be paid to such attorney by the Secretary of the Treasury out of any money in the Treasury arising from the sale of said ceded lands or from the proceeds of said judgment, and the balance of said judgment shall be held in the Treasury for the benefit of said Indians as a trust fund, and the interest thereon shall be distributed annually to them in accordance with the terms of said act of June 15, 1880; and the said cause shall be advanced in hearing by the Court of Claims and by the Supreme Court of the United States if the same shall be appealed."

III. By Senate resolution of December 11, 1903, No. 52, Fifty-eighth Congress, second session, this cause was sent to the Court of Claims and was numbered "Congressional, 11248"; that upon the hearing thereof the same was dismissed for want of jurisdiction; that thereupon a motion for a new trial was filed, which motion was pending at the time of the passage of the jurisdictional act referred to in Finding II herein, which action is now consolidated with the cause now on hearing.

IV. By the second article of a treaty by and between the plaintiffs and the United States, concluded at the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, March 2, 1868, whereof ratification was requested with amendment July 25, 1868, and which amendment was accepted by the Indians August 15, September 1, 14, 24, and 25, 1868, and which treaty was proclaimed November 6, 1868 (15 Stat. L., Treaties, pp. 619 et seq.), certain territory was set apart for the absolute and undisturbed use and occupation of plaintiffs, and for such other friendly tribes and individual Indians as from time to time they might be willing, with the consent of the United States, to admit among them, the United States solemnly agreeing that no persons except those by said treaty authorized so to do, and except such officers, agents, and employees of the Government as might be authorized to enter upon the said Indian reservation in the discharge of duties enjoined by law, should ever be permitted to pass over, settle upon, or reside in the territory described therein; that the territory so set apart to plaintiffs is described in said second article of said treaty as follows:

"Commencing at that point on the southern boundary line of the Territory of Colorado where the meridian of longitude 107° west from Greenwich crosses the same, running thence north with said meridian to a point 15 miles due north of where said meridian intersects the fortieth parallel of north latitude; thence due west to the western boundary line of said Territory; thence south with said western boundary line of said Territory to the southern boundary line of said Territory; thence east with said southern boundary line to the place of beginning."

Afterwards, to wit, on the 13th day of September, 1873, the plaintiffs, by the name and style of "Certain Ute Indians in Colorado by the chiefs and headmen of the Tabeguache, Mauche, Capote, Weeminuche, Yampa, Grand River, and Uintah Bands of Ute Indians," entered into a duly ratified convention at Los Pinos Agency for the Ute Indians in the State of Colorado, whereby, by the first article of said convention, plaintiffs relinquished to the United States all right, title, claim, and interest in and to the following-described portion of the reservation conveyed to them by the United States by the treaty proclaimed November 6, 1868, hereinbefore set forth; that is to say: "Beginning at a point on the eastern boundary of said reservation 15 miles due north of the southern boundary of the Territory of Colorado, and running thence west in a line parallel to the said southern boundary to a point on said line 20 miles due east of the western boundary of Colorado Territory; thence north by a line parallel with the western boundary to a point 10 miles north of the point where said line intersects the thirty-eighth parallel of north latitude; thence east to the eastern boundary of the Ute Reservation; thence south along said boundary to the place of beginning." The consideration for the said cession was a sufficient amount of United States bonds at 5 per cent per annum to produce the sum of $25,000 per annum, to be held in perpetual trust for the said Ute Indians, subject to disbursement or investment at the discretion of the President or as he may direct, for the use and benefit of the Ute Indians, annually forever.

The annuity provided under the terms of the act of April 29, 1874 (18 Stats., 41), was accepted by plaintiffs in full compensation for the territory ceded under that act, the interest being 5 per cent per annum.

The cession of 1873 and the consideration paid therefor by the terms of the act of April 29, 1874, concluded that transaction.

Afterwards, by the terms of an agreement between petitioners and the United States, which is embraced in and made part of "An act to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians in Colorado, for the sale of their reservation in said State, and for other purposes, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same," approved June 15, 1880 (21 Stats., 199), the chiefs and headmen of the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians, being these plaintiffs, promised and agreed to use their best endeavors with their people to procure their consent to cede to the United States all remaining territory of these petitioners in Colorado, being the remainder of the lands set apart to the permanent use and occupation of petitioners by the treaty of 1868, as in this finding first set forth; that said agreement was duly assented to and ratified by plaintiffs.

In pursuance of section 2 of said act the President appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, five commissioners to carry into effect the provisions of said act.

By the third section of said act of cession, approved June 15, 1880, it was provided as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause to be surveyed, under the direction of said commissioners, a sufficient quantity of land in the vicinities named in said agreement to secure the settlement in severalty of said Indians as herein provided. And upon completion of said survey and enumeration herein required, the said commissioners shall cause allotments of lands to be made to each and all of said Indians, in quantity and character as set forth in the agreement above mentioned; and whenever the report and proceedings of said commissioners, as required by this act, are approved by the President of the United States, he shall cause patents to issue to each and every allottee for the lands so allotted, with the same conditions, restrictions, and limitations mentioned therein as are provided in said agreement; and all lands not so allotted the title to which is, by said agreement of the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians, and this acceptance by the United States, released and conveyed to the United States, shall be held and deemed to be public lands of the United States and subject to disposal under the laws providing for the disposal of the public lands at the same price and on the same terms as other lands of like character, except as provided in this act: Provided, That none of said lands, whether mineral or otherwise, shall be liable to entry and settlement under the provisions of the homestead law, but shall be subject to cash entry only in accordance with existing law; and when sold the proceeds of said sale shall be first sacredly applied to reimbursing the United States for all sums paid out or set apart under this act by the Government for the benefit of said Indians, and then to be applied in payment for the lands at $1.25 per acre, which may be ceded to them by the United States outside of their reservation in pursuance of this agreement, and the remainder, if any, shall be deposited in the Treasury as now provided by law for the benefit of said Indians, in the proportion hereinbefore stated, and the interest thereon shall be distributed annually to them in the same manner as the funds provided for in this act: Provided further, That the subdivisions upon which are located improvements to be appraised, as provided for in section 2 of this act, shall be offered to the highest bidder at public sale, after published notice of at least 30 days by the Secretary of the Interior, and the same shall be absolutely reserved from occupation or claim until sold."

In accordance with section 2 of said act, a census of the plaintiffs was thereafter made by said commissioners, and the plaintiffs were separated thereunder into three divisions, as follows:

First. Those known in the agreement above referred to as "Southern Utes."

Second. Those known as "Uncompahgre Utes."

Third. Those known as "White River Utes."

Subsequently, in conformity with the provisions of section 2 of said act, said commissioners, after due examination, reported that they had examined the land on the Grand River near the mouth of the Gunnison and found it to be unsuitable for the plaintiffs for agricultural or grazing purposes, and that there was no other land suitable for agricultural purposes within a reasonable distance which could be used in connection with that near the mouth of the Gunnison River and give the plaintiffs the quantity contemplated.

UNCOMPAHGRE UTES.

Accordingly said commissioners, in conformity with said act, selected a tract of land in the valleys of the White and Green Rivers in Utah, which was subsequently surveyed and defined by metes and bounds, containing about 1,933,440 acres, for the Uncompahgre Utes. Said selection was approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and said Uncompahgre Utes were all removed thereto by the United States by October, 1881.

Under the acts of August 15, 1894 (28 Stats., 337), June 7, 1897 (30 Stats., 87), March 1, 1899 (30 Stats., 940), and joint resolution June 15, 1902 (32 Stats., 744), 75,978.19 acres of land have been allotted in severalty to said Uncompahgre Utes from the tract of land in Utah thus selected by said commissioners.

WHITE RIVER UTES.

The White River Utes were removed by the United States to the Uintah Agency, Utah, after much difficulty in November, 1881. Under said agreement and act of June 15, 1880, and also under the acts of May 27, 1902 (32 Stats., 263, 264), and joint resolution, June 10, 1902 (32 Stats., 744), 39,589.84 acres of land have been allotted in severalty to the White River Utes in Utah.

SOUTHERN UTES.

The Southern Utes were not removed from their former reservation in Colorado, but remained on a tract of land about 110 miles long, east and west, and 15 miles in width, containing a total area of about 483,750 acres, of which approximately 406,000 acres is in Colorado and the balance in New Mexico. Under section 6, act of February 20, 1895 (28 Stats., 677), with the consent of said Southern Utes, a portion of the above lands was opened to settlement and entry, allotments in severalty having been previously made in accordance with said act to 371 Southern Utes, comprising a total of 72,810.65 acres of land, all in Colorado.

V. Of the lands ceded to the United States as set forth in the fourth finding, 4,126.57 acres have been applied to reservoir sites by authority of sections 18, 19, and 20 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1891 (26 Stats., 1095), and the plaintiffs have been deprived of the sale thereof.

1. The Government received no compensation on account of rights of way granted by this department over lands within the limits of the former Ute Indian Reservation in Colorado under the act of March 3, 1891, sections 18, 19, and 20, or the act of February 15, 1901. (31 Stats., 190.)

2. Any person entering a tract of land to part of which a right of way is attached for a canal, ditch, or reservoir takes the same subject to such right of way and at the full area of the subdivision entered, and is required to pay therefor, their being no authority to make deduction in such cases.

VI. Prior and up to March 2, 1868, the plaintiffs occupied as hunting grounds territory comprising a part of the public domain, a portion of which was embraced within the lines of the Louisiana Purchase, a portion was acquired by the annexation of Texas in 1845, and the balance by cession from Mexico by the treaty of Guadaloupe Hidalgo of February 2, 1848.

The lands so occupied as hunting grounds by the plaintiffs included the reservation provided for by the agreement of 1880.

VII. Of the lands ceded to the United States under the terms of said agreement of June 15, 1880 (21 Stats., 199), the following have been set apart and reserved from the public lands as public reservations under existing laws and proclamations of the President:

The White River National Forest was established by proclamation of the President October 16, 1891 (27 Stats., 993), under the designation "White River Plateau Timber Land Reserve," by virtue of section 24 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to repeal timber-culture laws, and for other purposes." (26 Stats., 1103.) The area of said reservation as originally defined was 930,240 acres. Subsequently said reservation was modified by proclamation of the President date June 28, 1902 (32 Stats., 2008), and was then designated the "White River Forest Reservation"; afterwards said reservation was further modified by proclamation of the President dated May 21, 1904. (33 Stats., 2361.)

Deducting the area restored under the act of June 11, 1906 (34 Stats., 233), and areas pending and paid for under the public-land laws, the remaining public land contained in said reservation is found to be 823,733 acres.

The Battlement National Forest was originally set apart by proclamation of the President dated December 24, 1892 (27 Stats., 1053), and was by that proclamation designated "The Battlement Mesa Forest Reserve," and by proclamation dated May 16, 1904 (33 Stats., 2359), the same was modified, and said reservation was again modified by proclamation dated June 5, 1905. (34 Stats., 3076.) By Executive order bearing date July 1, 1908, the said reservation was further modified and the designation thereof was changed to "Battlement National Forest."

Deducting the area restored under the act of June 11, 1906 (34 Stats., 233), and areas pending and paid for under the public-land laws, the remaining public land contained in said reservation is found to be 739,112 acres.

The Gunnison National Forest was originally set apart under the designation "The Gunnison Forest Reserve" by proclamation of the President dated May 12, 1905 (34 Stats., 3025), and by Executive order of July 1, 1908 (No. 891), the designation of said reservation was changed to "Gunnison National Forest."

Deducting the area restored under the act of June 11, 1906 (34 Stats., 233), and areas pending and paid for under the public-land laws, the remaining public land contained in said reservation is found to be 520,836 acres.

The Montezuma National Forest was originally established by proclamation of the President dated June 13, 1905 (34 Stats., 3106), and was thereafter modified by proclamation dated March 2, 1907 (34 Stats., 3307), and by Executive order dated July 1, 1908 (No. 889), said reservation was designated "Montezuma National Forest."

Deducting the area restored under the act of June 11, 1906 (34 Stats., 233), and areas pending and paid for under the public-land laws, the remaining public land contained in said reservation is found to be 49,594 acres.

The La Sal National Forest was created by proclamation dated January 25, 1906. (34 Stats., 3190.)

Deducting the area restored under the act of June 11, 1906 (34 Stats., 233), and areas pending and paid for under the public-land laws, the remaining public land contained in said reservation is found to be 28,775 acres, making a total of 3,199,258 acres of the lands ceded to the United States by the agreement of June 15, 1880, se tapart and reserved as public reservations.

VIII. The value of all lands ceded by the plaintiff Indians which have been set apart and reserved from the public lands as public reservation or for other public uses under existing laws and proclamations of the President is found to be $3,999,072.50.

Of the lands ceded to the United States by plaintiffs under the terms of said agreement of June 15, 1880 (21 Stats., 199), 1,310,686.38 acres have been sold and disposed of between the 15th day of June, 1880, and the 30th day of June, 1908, for the sum of $2,204,694.71.

Upon the foregoing findings of fact the court decides as a conclusion of law that the plaintiffs are entitled to judgment against the United States on statement of the account up to July 1, 1908, for the sum of $3,408,611.40.

OPINION.

Barney, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiffs are 10 tribes of Indians, known as the Confederated Bands of the Ute Indians (referred to hereinafter as the Ute Indians), who sue herein for an accounting to them under the agreement made by them with the defendant by an act of Congress approved June 15, 1880 (21 Stats., 199).

The same claim, known as Congressional case No. 11248, was referred to this court by resolution of the Senate under the fourteenth section of the Tucker Act, but was dismissed on defendant's motion in March, 1908, for want of jurisdiction. (43 Ct. Cls., 260.)

The case is now here by virtue of a provision in the Indian appropriations act approved March 3, 1909 (35 Stats., 788, 789), conferring jurisdiction on this court to adjudicate the claim to final judgment, with right of appeal as in other cases, with a direction to allow certain set-offs and counterclaims therein mentioned. A consolidation is directed with the congressional case above mentioned, still pending on a motion for a new trial, for the purpose of using the evidence therein adduced at this trial. The jurisdictional proviso is given in full as Finding II in the findings of fact, supra, and will not be here repeated.

The territory within which the lands in question are located, and out of which the Territories of New Mexico, Utah, and Colorado were subsequently created, was mostly acquired from Mexico by the treaty of Guadaloupe Hidalgo, concluded February 2, 1848 (9 Stats., 922, 930). This treaty contained no provision affecting or recognizing the rights of the Indian tribes to any of the lands within the cession, unless such recognition can be gathered from the opening words of the eleventh article of that treaty, which are: "Considering that a great part of the territories which, by the present treaty, are to be comprehended for the future within the limits of the United States, is now occupied by savage tribes," etc. It should be said, however, that a portion at least of the lands covered by the treaties between the Utes and the United States, hereinafter mentioned, were acquired under the Louisiana Purchase or by the annexation of Texas.

December 30, 1849, the first treaty was made with the "Utah" Indians (doubtless the claimants), which involved no cession of lands and did not set apart any reservation to the Indians (9 Stats., 984). It did, however, clearly recognize some rights of the Indians to the occupation of certain lands. For instance, Article V of that treaty is as follows:

"V. The people of the United States, and all others in amity with the United States, shall have free passage through the territory of said Utahs, under such rules and regulations as may be adopted by authority of said States."

Expressions of similar import are used in the seventh article of the same treaty.

September 9, 1850, a Territorial government for Utah was established (9 Stats., 453), including within its boundaries that part of the present State of Colorado west of the summit of the Rocky Mountains. February 28, 1861, the Territory of Colorado was organized (12 Stats., 172).

On October 7, 1863, a treaty with the Tabeguache Band of the plaintiff Indians was concluded and proclaimed December 14, 1864 (13 Stats., 673). By this treaty, when first signed, the Indians asserted the exclusive right to certain lands therein described, but all assertions of that character were stricken out by the Senate before ratification, and the treaty was further amended by adding the following provision:

"Nothing contained in this treaty shall be construed or taken to admit on the part of the United States any other or greater title or interest in the lands above excepted and reserved in said tribe or band of Indians than existed in them upon the acquisition of said territory from Mexico by the laws thereof."

By Article II of the treaty as amended by the Senate the Tabeguache Band of Utes ceded and relinquished to the United States all "claim, right, title, and interest in and to any and all lands within the territory of the United States," excepting certain lands described, which are reserved to them "as their hunting grounds."

Provision was made in this treaty for payment to the Indians of an annuity for 10 years, $10,000 in goods and $10,000 in provisions. Provision was also made for the allowance to them of certain agricultural stock, and for the establishment of a blacksmith shop for their benefit upon the lands thus reserved.

March 2, 1868 (15 Stat., 619), a treaty was concluded at Washington with the plaintiff Indians, including the Tabeguache Band, the only Indian party to the treaty of 1863, just mentioned. This treaty reaffirmed the provisions of the treaty of 1863, and, in fact, so far at least as the Tabeguache Band was concerned, superseded it.

Article II of this treaty set apart a district within what is now the State of Colorado, and embracing about 15,000,000 acres of land, as a reservation for the plaintiff Indians and such other friendly tribes and individual Indians as they, with the consent of the United States, might be willing to admit among them for their "absolute use and occupation." Article III of the treaty is as follows:

"Article III. It is further agreed by the Indians parties hereto that henceforth they will and do hereby relinquish all claims and rights in and to any portion of the United States or Territories except such as are embraced in the limits defined in the preceding article."

The treaty also provided for the establishment of two agencies on said reservation; for the construction thereon by the United States of schoolhouses and other buildings; for the selection of tracts of land thereon not exceeding 160 acres in extent by Indian heads of families desirous of commencing farming, to be held in the exclusive possession of the person selecting it and his family so long as cultivation should continue, and 80 acres to persons not heads of families; for supplying seeds and agricultural implements to the Indians, and for instructions by a practical farmer; for the establishment of blacksmith shops for their benefit; also for the establishment of schools, by building schoolhouses and supplying competent teachers.

Provision was also made for payment to the Indians of annuities, (1) not to exceed $30,000 per annum for clothing, blankets, etc., (2) and not to exceed $30,000 for food. For the purpose of inducing the Indians to adopt the habits of civilized life and becoming self-sustaining the Secretary of the Interior was authorized to expend the sum of $45,000 for them for the first year after the treaty.

Article XVI of said treaty was as follows:

"Article XVI. No treaty for the cession of any portion or part of the reservation herein described, which may be held in common, shall be of any validity or force as against the said Indians unless executed and signed by at least three-fourths of all the adult male Indians occupying or interested in the same; and no cession by the tribe shall be understood or construed in such manner as to deprive the tribe, without his consent, any individual member of the tribe of his right to any tract of land selected by him, as provided in article seven of this treaty."

By act of Congress April 23, 1872 (17 Stats., 55), the Secretary of the Interior was authorized to enter into negotiations with the plaintiff Indians for the purchase from them of the south part of said reservation, a district estimated to contain about 3,450,000 acres. Commissioners were appointed for that purpose and they entered into an agreement with the Indians which was ratified by Congress April 29, 1874 (18 Stats., 36), by the terms of which the plaintiff Indians surrendered all right, title, and interest to said 3,500,000-acre tract of land, in consideration of which the Indians were to be paid a perpetual annuity of $25,000. The area of the remaining reservation as thus diminished comprised about 11,724,800 acres of land.

In the late seventies the advance guard of civilization seeking new homes in the far West began to press upon the borders of this Ute Reservation, and in 1878 Congress, through a commission appointed for that purpose, made an effort to purchase it from the Utes and to secure their removal to another locality, but without success.

AGREEMENT OF JUNE 15, 1880 (21 STATS., 199).

During the winter of 1879–80 a delegation of the chiefs and head men of the plaintiff Indians visited the city of Washington, and on March 6, 1880, entered into an agreement with the United States whereby they undertook to use their best endeavors with their people to procure their consent to cede to the United States the remainder of the reservation set apart to them by the treaty of 1868. This agreement was afterwards duly assented to by the plaintiff Indians and thereafter ratified by Congress and embraced in the act of Congress of June 15, 1880 (21 Stats., 199). Some amendments to the agreement were proposed by Congress in the act referred to, and the agreement as thus amended was afterwards consented to by three-fourths of the adult male plaintiff Indians as required by the treaty of 1868 and by section 10 of the act containing the agreement.

By that agreement the plaintiffs ceded to the United States the entire remainder of their reservation in the State of Colorado reserved to them under the treaty of November 6, 1868, containing approximately 11,784,800 acres of land, and agreed to remove, settle upon, and accept individual allotments of unoccupied agricultural and grazing lands in certain designated localities to be selected for them by a commission authorized by the act, which lands should be free from taxation and not subject to alienation for a period of 25 years or longer in the discretion of the President.

It was further agreed by section 3 of said act that all lands within the ceded limits not allotted in severalty to the plaintiffs should be deemed to be public lands of the United States subject to disposal under the public-land laws for cash only in accordance with existing law at the same price and on the same terms as other lands of like character, and contained the following proviso:

"That none of said lands, whether mineral or otherwise, shall be liable to entry and settlement under the provisions of the homestead law, but shall be subject to cash entry only in accordance with existing law; and when sold the proceeds of said sale shall be first sacredly applied to reimbursing the United States for all sums paid out or set apart under this act by the Government for the benefit of said Indians, and then to be applied in payment for the lands, at $1.25 per acre, which may be ceded to them by the United States outside of their reservation in pursuance of this agreement. And the remainder, if any, shall be deposited in the Treasury as now provided by law for the benefit of the said Indians, in the proportion heretofore stated, and the interest thereon shall be distributed annually to them in the same manner as the funds provided for in this act."

The act provided for the appointment of commissioners for the purpose of carrying out the contract by selecting and allotting lands to the Indians, locating agencies, furnishing estimates of the number of schoolhouses and teachers required, etc. It also directed the Secretary of the Treasury to set apart and hold as a perpetual trust fund for the benefit of the plaintiffs an amount of money sufficient at 4 per cent to produce annually $50,000, to be paid to them per capita in cash annually as provided in said agreement. It provided for salaries of certain members of the Ute Indians under existing treaty stipulations for a period of 10 years, and authorized the distribution of $4,000 per annum for the same term by the President to such of said Indians as proved themselves worthy of such recognition.

The act made appropriations for the purpose of carrying the agreement into effect, (1) for the payment of the commissioners, $25,000; (2) for cost of removal of the Utes, surveying their lands, building houses, establishing schools, building mills, purchasing stock, etc., as provided in said agreement, $350,000; (3) $15,000 in addition to the $60,000 then due and provided for to be paid to them per capita; (4) for the payment of the appraised value of individual improvements within the reservation as provided in the agreement, $20,000; (5) for the care and support of the Utes for the balance of the then current fiscal year, $12,000.

In compliance with the provisions of the act all of the plaintiffs were removed to Utah, and allotments were there made to them, except the southern Utes who remained upon the reservation and received allotments along and within its southern border and partly within New Mexico. The sum total of lands thus allotted was 115,568.03 acres.

With this preliminary statement of the history of the transactions between the United States and the plaintiff Indians, we come to the discussion of the sum due said Indians under the agreement of 1880 in the light of the directions contained in the jurisdiction act under which this suit comes to this court.

I. We will first take up the sums for which the plaintiffs should be credited. As some date must be taken up to which this account must be stated, we have followed both parties in this suit and taken June 30, 1908.

The findings show, and that fact is undisputed, that up to said date the defendants had received $2,204,694.71 as cash proceeds for lands sold located within the Ute Reservation, and it is not and can not be denied that the plaintiffs should be credited with that sum. It is contended, however, by the plaintiffs that they should be credited in addition thereto with interest compounded semiannually upon the amount of the quarterly sales of said land since 1880, which interest would amount to $2,444,779.95 more. We will leave this question of interest to be discussed hereafter in connection with the credits to be allowed the defendants.

The jurisdictional act provides that this court in this suit is "to hear, determine, and render final judgment, with right of appeal as in other cases, on the claims and rights of said Indians under said agreement [agreement of 1880, supra], including the value of all lands ceded by the said Indians which have been set apart and reserved from the public lands as public reservations or for other public uses under existing laws and proclamations of the President, as if disposed of under the public-land laws of the United States," etc. Thus in making up this account we are to credit the plaintiffs with the value of the forest reservations set apart out of the Ute Reservation. The areas so set apart, less such portions of the same as have been disposed of by the defendants and for which credit has been given to the plaintiffs in the first item, embrace 3,199,258 acres. The value to be set upon this land is necessarily somewhat problematical, but that duty has been imposed upon this court, and with the best light obtainable must be done.

Section 3 of the act of 1880 provides that all the ceded lands "shall be held and deemed to be public lands of the United States and subject to disposal under the laws providing for the disposal of the public lands, at the same price and on the same terms as other lands of like character, except as provided in this act: Provided, That none of said lands, whether mineral or otherwise, shall be liable to entry and settlement under the provisions of the homestead law, but shall be subject to cash entry only in accordance with existing law."

The act of July 28, 1882 (22 Stats., 178), restored the Ute Reservation to the public domain with the following proviso:

"And further provided, That none of said lands shall be disposed of for any other than cash, nor for a less price than $1.25 per acre."

The act of April 24, 1820 (3 Stat., 566), now section 2357 Revised Statutes, fixes the minimum price at $1.25 per acre for all public lands offered at public or private sale for cash in the following terms:

"The price at which the public lands are offered for sale shall be $1.25 an acre, and at every public sale the highest bidder, who makes payment as provided in the preceding section, shall be the purchaser; but no lands shall be sold, either at public or private sale, for a less price than $1.25 an acre; and all the public lands which are hereafter offered at public sale according to law, and remain unsold at the close of such public sales, shall be subject to be sold at private sale, by entry at the land office at $1.25 an acre, to be paid at the time of making such entry."

A similar question was involved in an appeal from this court to the Supreme Court in the case of United States v. Blackfeather (155 U. S., 180; 28 C. C., 447). In commenting upon the obligation of the United States to expose the lands in question at public sale, Mr. Justice Brown, in delivering the opinion of the court, said:

"In the absence of any proof of the actual value of these lands at this time, there would seem to be no method of estimation except by taking the price at which public lands were subject to be sold at private sale, namely, $1.25 per acre. Not only is there some presumption that the Government would not sell them for less than they were worth, but the very fact that at that time all public lands were subject to entry at $1.25 per acre would render it impossible to sell them at a greater price unless by reason of their peculiar location, abundant timber, or extraordinary fertility they were exceptionally valuable. (Id., 191.)"

The average price at which the lands within the Ute Reservation were sold between the date of the agreement (1880) and June 30, 1908, was $1.68 per acre. Presumably the choicest lands were selected by the purchasers. The forest reservations were set apart at different dates between 1891 and 1905. While it is doubtless true that considerable of the land within these forest reservations is quite valuable, on the other hand, the official reports show, and it is a fact so well known as to come within judicial notice, that considerable portions of them are valueless and can never be sold at any price.

In view, therefore, of the law and the facts as stated, we have found the value of the lands thus set apart in forest reservations to be $1.25 per acre, amounting to $3,835,323.75.

II. We next come to consider the sums to be charged against the plaintiffs and set off against the amount credited to them in this suit. Upon that subject the jurisdictional act gives this court the following direction:

"* * * and the court shall set off against any sum found due said Indians the amount paid to them under the fifth section of said act of June 15, 1880, being $50,000 per annum up to the date of rendition of final judgment in this cause; also any other sum or sums that shall be found to be properly chargeable under the terms of said agreement, and also any sum or sums paid by the United States to or for the benefit of said Indians, whether as a gratuity or otherwise, except such sums as have been paid for a specific purpose and an adequate consideration, * * *."

We are first specifically directed to charge to the plaintiffs the annuities which they have received under the agreement of 1880. $50,000 per annum, amounting to $1,350,000, and about this sum there is and can be no dispute; in fact, the agreement itself in explicit terms so provides. "Also any other sum or sums that shall be found to be properly chargeable under the terms of said agreement [1880]." Under this direction it should be borne in mind that by the terms of said agreement the plaintiffs were to receive all of the proceeds of said reservation, with the provision, however, that "when sold the proceeds of said sale shall be first sacredly applied to reimbursing the United States for all sums paid out or set apart by the Government for the benefit of said Indians," etc. It will thus be seen that the transaction was of no benefit to the United States, except the indirect benefit received by opening up to civilization a desirable territory. In view of this fact we think the plaintiffs are "properly chargeable" (1) with the allotments received outside the reservation; (2) the cost of the survey of the reservation, establishing schools, building houses, etc.; (3) additional per capita payments and the amount expended for the support of the Utes for the balance of the fiscal year, as provided and appropriated for in section 9, as well as salaries paid to selected individual Utes, as provided in section 6; (4) and also the expenses incurred by the United States in negotiating the agreements. In general, for the reasons stated, we think the plaintiffs should be charged with all the benefits of every name and nature which they have received under the agreement of 1880.

We do not think, however, they are properly chargeable with the cost of the survey of the lands allotted to them outside of the reservation under the agreement. They have been charged for these lands at the price of $1.25 per acre, and that should include the cost of survey, the same as to other purchasers of lands within the public domain.

We are further directed, in addition to moneys paid under the agreement of 1880, to charge the plaintiffs with "any sum or sums paid by the United States to or for the benefit of said Indians, whether as a gratuity or otherwise, except such sums as have been paid for a specific purpose and an adequate consideration."

It is contended by the defendants that under this instruction we should charge the plaintiffs with all such sums as have been paid to them under the treaties of 1863 and 1868, on the ground that no "adequate consideration" was ever received by the defendants for moneys so expended. For this contention much reliance is placed upon the decision of this court in the case of Hayt v. United States (38 C. Cls., 455), wherein it was decided that the territory ceded by Mexico to the United States by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo was not "Indian country," and it is claimed that all of the lands involved in the treaties of 1863 and 1868 were within that cession.

While it may be true that the Indian title of the plaintiffs to any territory prior to the treaty of 1863 was not such a title as the defendants would recognize, yet the plaintiffs were located within this territory and had the usual claim of occupancy of other Indians. Their claim was considered of such importance that the defendants, during the year following the Guadalupe Hidalgo treaty, entered into a treaty with them and secured from them a concession for the right of free passage through their territory. (9 Stats., 984.) By the treaty of 1863 (13 Stats., 673), the defendants considered these claims to territorial occupancy of sufficient importance to obtain from them a cession of all "claim, title, etc., to lands within the territory of the United States," excepting certain lands which were set apart to them as their hunting grounds. By the treaty of 1868 (15 Stats., 619), the reservation in question was set apart to the plaintiffs, and by the third article of the treaty the plaintiffs relinquished "all claims and rights in and to any portion of the United States or territories except" such reservation. Even if we may admit that they had no valid title to any lands, yet they claimed some title and honestly claimed it, and the yielding of such a claim to a party who wishes to purchase it is a good consideration.

In the case of Sykes v. Chadwick (18 Wall., 141) the Supreme Court, in discussing the sufficiency of consideration, said:

"If any release is deemed requisite to confirm the title of lands with which one has been connected, though by a proper construction of the law he has no interest in them whatever, still such release will be a good consideration for a promise or for the payment of money."

Congress, from time to time, made appropriations of money to the plaintiffs which in terms were made in pursuance of the treaties of 1863 and 1868. (13 Stats., 560; 17 id., 457.) After such treaty stipulations with the plaintiffs and after such recognition of their validity for more than 40 years we do not think the defendants can successfully set up the claim that these payments were made without adequate consideration. Certainly no such claim would ever be made against any people other than Indians. We do not think, therefore, that the plaintiffs are properly chargeable with any payments made to them under and pursuant to the treaties of 1863 and 1868.

We are also asked to charge the plaintiffs with $70,064.78, appropriated by act of Congress May 27, 1902 (32 Stats., 263), to be paid to the Uinta and White River Utes. This appears to relate to an entirely different transaction than the one under consideration. At the time of this appropriation the Uinta and White River Utes were located upon a reservation in Utah, and the portions of those bands to which this appropriation relates were located there prior to the agreement of 1880, and were not parties to the said agreement. The act referred to, supra, provided for the restoration to the public domain of all the lands in this reservation not to be allotted to these Uinta and White River Utes, and that the proceeds of such lands should be first applied to the reimbursement of the United States for any moneys advanced to said Indians to carry into effect the provisions of said law; and said sum of $70,064.78 was appropriated to be paid said Indians for relinquishing their title to such unallotted lands, the same to be reimbursed in the manner before stated. This appears to be a matter for future adjustment between said Uinta and White River Utes and the United States, and said sum is disallowed as a set-off in this suit.

III. We now come to the question of interest to be allowed to the plaintiffs upon the sums found due to them in the findings. We will first take up the question of interest upon the value of the lands set apart in forest reservations.

By the terms of the agreement of 1880 no interest was to be paid except upon the proceeds of cash sales within the reservation. It was unquestionably within the political power of Congress to authorize the withdrawal of these forest reserves from the market indefinitely, or for such periods as it should see fit, notwithstanding the agreement, and thus deprive the Utes of the proceeds of sales which otherwise would have been made, and interest upon the same. Having done so, their claim for the proceeds of lands deemed to have been sold by the setting apart of the forest reserves, and interest thereon, must be derived entirely from the language of the jurisdictional act.

The jurisdictional act directs this court to hear, determine, and render final judgment on the claims and rights of the Utes under the agreement of 1880, including the value of all lands—

"Which have been set apart and reserved from the public lands or public reservations or for public uses under existing laws and proclamations of the President, as if disposed of under the public-land laws of the United States, as provided by said agreement."

Section 1091 of the Revised Statutes provides:

"No interest shall be allowed on any claim up to the time of the rendition of judgment thereon by the Court of Claims, unless upon a contract expressly stipulating for the payment of interest."

We are told to render judgment for the value of these lands, "as if disposed of under the public-land laws of the United States, as provided by said agreement." The agreement referred to contained directions as to the manner in which these lands were to be disposed of, i. e., they were to be surveyed, were not to be liable to entry and settlement under the provisions of the homestead law, but were to be sold for cash only. Hence the direction that we are to render judgment for the value of these lands as if disposed of "as provided by said agreement," evidently means that we are to regard them as having been sold for cash at the date of entry of judgment, and this sum is to be placed to the credit of the plaintiffs. If Congress had intended that interest should be allowed upon this sum it would have so provided, and without such specific provision such intention can not be inferred. When we remember, as already stated, that it was within the power of Congress to have kept these lands out of the market indefinitely, this conclusion will appear all the more clear.

In considering this question it should also be borne in mind that if these lands had never been withdrawn from the market but a small percentage of them would have been sold before the passage of the jurisdictional act. This is shown by the fact that in the 24 years elapsing between 1880 and 1904, after which date the greater number of these reserves were created, less than 9 per cent of the total area of the reservation had been sold for cash. If Congress had intended to have this court consider the whole area of these forest reserves to have been sold as of the date when withdrawn from the market and to place their value ($3,835,323.75) to the credit of the plaintiffs as of such dates, it would have said so in unmistakable terms. In making up this account, therefore, no interest has been allowed upon the value given to the lands within the forest reservations.

As before stated, it is contended by the plaintiffs that they should be allowed compound interest upon the separate sums which appear quarterly to have been received by the defendants for the lands sold within the reservation from the date of receipt, and also upon the value of the lands withdrawn from sale and set apart in the forest reservations, reckoned from the time of such withdrawal, without allowing the defendants any credit for annuities and other sums paid by the defendants under the agreement of 1880. We have already disposed of the question of interest upon the value of the lands set apart in forest reservations, and that question requires no further consideration here.

The jurisdictional act provides:

"That to carry into effect the agreement between the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians of Colorado and the United States, ratified by the act of Congress approved June 15, 1880, being 'An act to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians in Colorado for the sale of their reservation in said State, and for other purposes, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same' (21 Stats., p. 199), jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render final judgment, with right of appeal as in other cases, on the claims and rights of said Indians under said agreement," etc.

Hence we are to find what sum is legally due to the plaintiffs under said agreement, subject only to such modifications as were made further on in the act as to credits to be allowed the defendants. The agreement of 1880 provides that after the United States shall have been reimbursed "for all sums paid out or set apart" under the act, "the remainder, if any, shall be deposited in the Treasury * * * and the interest thereon shall be distributed annually to them in the same manner as the funds provided for in this act."

As to the contention regarding interest, that no credit should be allowed the defendants under the agreement of 1880, as we interpret the jurisdictional act, it forbids this method of computing interest. We are instructed to set off against any sum found due the Indians certain payments made to them by the defendants. When these sums are credited to the defendants, they, obviously, should be credited as of the date when paid. It appears from the account, as stated in Finding IX, that at no time before the passage of the jurisdictional act did the cash receipts of the defendants for lands sold within the reservation exceed the amount paid out for the benefit of the claimants under the act of 1880. Hence, having decided that the claimants are not entitled under the jurisdictional act to any interest upon the value of the lands withdrawn from sale and set apart in forest reservations, no interest whatever appears to be due to the claimants. This being our conclusion, the discussion of the question of compound interest, as contended for by the claimants, is somewhat academical, but will be briefly considered.

No interest, either simple or compound, can be collected from a sovereign except by its consent. (United States v. North Carolina, 136 U. S., 211.) In the case at bar the sovereign has agreed to pay interest, and that means simple interest only. But the plaintiffs seek to charge the defendants with compound interest in this case, on the ground that the money so received constituted a trust fund, and that in such cases, where the fund has been improperly withheld, the trustee is penalized with compound interest. It is elementary as a general proposition, in the absence of a contract to that effect, that interest upon interest is not recoverable for the detention of money, and that is a general rule either at law or equity. (Perley on Law of Interest, 159, 160; In re Ward's estate, 73 Mich., 220, 228.) It is only where a trustee, guardian, or executor has acted in bad faith, in abuse of his trust, or has been guilty of such gross negligence as to be evidence of a corrupt intention that compound interest will be charged against him. (Barney v. Saunders, 16 How., 535; Perrin v. Leper, 72 Mich., 446; Vaughan v. Bibb, 46 Ala., 153; Smith v. Kennard, 38 Ala., 695.)

The Government only acts through its officers and agents and thus in law can never be guilty of fraud, bad faith, or negligence; hence it can never be penalized by being charged compound interest.

As already stated, the account herein between the plaintiffs and defendants, as directed to be made under the jurisdictional act, is stated up to June 30, 1908, as that is the latest date to which full returns have been made by the proper Government officials. The jurisdictional act seems to contemplate that this account should be stated up to the date of the entry of judgment herein; hence, before entrance of judgment further returns will be necessary. This supplemental account will be made in accordance with this opinion and will be a mere matter of computation.

Judgment, therefore, will be entered herein for the claimants for the sum of $3,408,611.40, with the modification hereafter to be made as above indicated.

[Court of Claims of the United States. No. 30360. Decided Feb. 13, 1911.]

Upon the previous findings of fact and including the above supplemental finding, the former judgment is set aside and the court now decides as a conclusion of law that the plaintiffs are entitled to judgment against the United States in the sum of $3,516,231.05, as and for the sum due to them up to and including June 30, 1910, out of which judgment, as provided by the jurisdictional act and the stipulation of the parties, there shall be paid to Josiah M. Vale, Esq., attorney of record in said cause, for himself and all other attorneys and counsel interested in the prosecution of said cause before committees of Congress and this court 6 per cent thereof, amounting in the aggregate to $210,973.86.

OPINION.

Per CURIAM:

This is a motion of the claimants' attorneys to have the court fix the amount of fees to be allowed to them for services in this case. The jurisdictional act provides that such fees are to be allowed for services before committees of Congress in the matter of this claim as well as for services before the courts.

It appears that the principal services rendered in this matter were before committees in Congress. Such services can hardly be allowed for on the basis of the professional services of a lawyer, and this fact renders it somewhat difficult to determine the amount properly to be fixed. The fact also should be noted that there was no appeal from the decision of this court in this suit, which would necessarily involve considerably more labor and expense; neither were any witnesses examined on either side. In fact, the whole case was tried upon the record as made up by official reports and public documents. The jurisdictional act by which the suit comes to this court provides that upon the rendition of judgment herein the payment to the claimants of the annuity of $50,000 per annum shall cease, and the fund of $1,250,000 set apart for them in the Treasury shall no longer exist as a trust fund for their benefit. This fact materially reduces the actual benefit which the claimants are to receive by virtue of the judgment.

The claim of the Ute Indians depended upon the contract of 1880, and there would have been but little controversy as to the amount due them under that contract had it not been for the setting apart of the forest reserves within the territory, the proceeds of the lands within which they were to receive. It doubtless took considerable patient and persistent work on the part of the claimants' attorneys to impress upon the committees of Congress the justice of a law which would regard such reservations as land actually sold. Notwithstanding this fact, we think the allowance to the claimants' attorneys should be rather upon a basis of fees for a collection of moneys actually due than upon the basis of a doubtful claim or a claim for unliquidated damages.

After due consideration of the matter, we have concluded to allow 6 per cent of the amount of the judgment, or $210,973.86, to the attorneys for the claimants for their services in this matter. Accordingly, the judgment heretofore rendered in this cause is modified as provided by the supplemental finding and the opinion respecting said fees this day filed.

MODIFIED AGREEMENT WITH THE CONFEDERATED BANDS OF UTE INDIANS.

Mr. MCCUMBER, from the subcommittee on S. 7738, submitted the following report [to accompany S. 7738]:

The subcommittee on S. 7738, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7738) proposing a modified agreement with the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians for the purpose of making a compromise settlement of all their affairs, having had the same under consideration, report as follows:

The bill provides for a modification of an existing agreement between the United States and the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians, which was ratified by an act of June 15, 1880 (21 Stat., 199), to be submitted to the Indians, and to become effective only upon their ratification of the same.

This proposed modified agreement provides for a full and final settlement, by way of compromise, of all claims and demands of the said Ute Indians of every name and nature, arising under the said existing agreement of 1880, by a reference of such matters to the Court of Claims for final settlement and determination.

The act of June 15, 1880, embracing the agreement for cession of said lands, provides that the lands embraced within the reservation, not allotted to the Indians, shall be sold under the public-land laws, for the benefit of said Indians, at the same price and on the same terms as other lands of like character, and when sold the proceeds of sale shall be deposited in the Treasury, as provided by law, for the benefit of said Indians, after reimbursing the Government for all sums paid out or set apart for the benefit of said Indians, and the interest thereon to be paid to the Indians.

Every year since the ratification of said agreement, in 1880, the Government has sold more or less of said lands under the public-land laws for cash, and has deposited the money received therefor in the Treasury to the credit of said Indians, but no accounting was ever made to the Indians for the same, it being contended by the Government that the amount of money which had been expended in the meantime for the benefit of said Indians exceeded the amount received and placed to their credit. The Indians, after waiting a number of years, employed counsel to represent them as to all of their said interests under the agreement. Failing to secure an accounting up to date, the Indians applied to Congress for authority to bring an action in the Court of Claims under the terms of the agreement for an accounting and for judgment for the amount already accrued and due, if any. The Indians were granted this authority under act of Congress approved March 3, 1909 (35 Stats., 788), and as a result of the suit recovered a net judgment in excess of the advance made by the Government to them of $3,305,257.19, including not only the value of the land sold for cash, but also the forest reserves which had been taken and set apart by the Government out of their ceded lands.

The record of the case before the court shows that the land ceded in 1880 was over 12,000,000 acres (12,079,089.76 acres), and that of this amount over 1,000,000 acres (1,310,686.38 acres), including agricultural, timber, mineral, and coal lands, had been sold for cash at the price fixed by the public-land laws of the United States, and that over 3,000,000 acres (3,199,258 acres) had been placed in forest reserves, leaving over 7,000,000 acres (7,569,144.38 acres) unsold. Under the existing agreement it will be necessary for the Government to continue to sell this remaining land under the public-land laws of the United States and deposit the money received therefor in the Treasury to the credit of said Indians.

It appears from the records of the Geological Survey that of this remaining 7,000,000 acres there have been classified as coal lands about 700,000 acres, of the average appraised value of $70 an acre, amounting to $50,000,000 for the coal alone. The remainder of this 7,000,000 acres is composed of timberlands, mineral lands, agricultural lands, and quite an area of barren mountain peaks. Thus it will appear that while some of this tract of land is of little value and might never be sold under the public-land laws, yet, on the other hand, that some of it is extremely valuable, providing it can be sold under existing land laws and at the appraised valuation placed upon the coal by the Government.

The bill before your committee proposing a compromise settlement at this time of all the interests of the Indians in these lands provides that all the coal, mineral, and timber lands shall be taken over by the Government as public land, at one-half the minimum statutory value of the same, under the public-land laws, which would be $5 an acre for the coal lands instead of $70 an acre and $1.25 an acre for timberlands instead of $2.50, and the same proportionate reduction on all mineral lands.

The bill also provides that the court shall determine not only the area of the coal, timber, mineral, and agricultural lands and their value under the above-proposed compromise settlement, but that the court shall determine the area of the remaining land which is not included in any of the above classes, and that such land shall be taken out from under the operation of the public-land laws as provided in the existing agreement, and the court be given full jurisdiction to determine the fair value of the same. The area of this class of land to be determined by the court is probably very great.

The bill further provides that the court shall set off against the value of these lands as so found any and all sums which the Government has advanced to these Indians since the date of the judgment of the Court of Claims, and also consider and pass upon any items of account between these Indians and the Government, occurring before the date of said judgment, which has not been considered and passed upon by the court.

The Interior Department claims that there are a number of items of set-off, amounting to between two and three hundred thousand dollars, that should have been considered by the court at the trial above referred to, but which the department overlooked and failed to present at that time. Among the items of set-off will be money advanced by the Government for irrigation, which is probably about one million and a quarter dollars.

Finally, the bill provides that this proposed compromise settlement shall be ratified by a majority of the adult male Indians before the same shall become effective.

The purpose of the proposed settlement (which will result in an amount very much smaller than the amount which the Indians would ultimately receive under the existing agreement) is to furnish them at once a fixed and continuous income, sufficient for the support and civilization of the present as well as future generations. Under the existing agreement these Indians can not be paid the principal of the fund in the Treasury to their credit, but can be paid only the interest. The interest on the judgment rendered by the Court of Claims is inadequate for such purposes. Thus the Government, in its effort to carry out its Indian policy of civilization, is confronted with a situation where these Indians are now suffering for want of sufficient support, to say nothing of the want of sufficient funds for preparing and establishing them for civilization, in spite of the fact that they have over 7,000,000 acres of land, which ultimately will be sold for the enormous sum of from fifty to sixty million dollars. The trouble is that it will take 50 years or longer to sell all of this land and realize all of this sum. Under existing law, when this 7,000,000 acres of land is ultimately sold, these Indians, if their number should remain practically the same, would have an annual income of at least $1,200 per capita, while in the meantime the present generation is suffering and the Government is forced to appropriate money from time to time for their support and civilization.

The present condition with respect to these Indians which now confronts the Government is so grave that the Interior Department has prepared and had introduced a bill (S. 5203, 62d Cong., 2d sess.) providing for the appropriation and use of their principal as the same may be needed on account of their needs and because the interest upon the present judgment is totally inadequate. The existing agreement with these Indians prohibits the use of their principal; it is to meet this situation that the present modified agreement in the form of a compromise settlement is proposed, in order that the balance of their lands may be converted into a cash fund in the Treasury that will yield an amount of interest, in addition to the interest accrued from the judgment of the Court of Claims, sufficient for the support and civilization of the present as well as all future generations. It is clear that under the existing agreement the present generation will necessarily continue to suffer, while future generations will receive an income vastly beyond their needs.

Therefore the question for consideration is this:

Shall Congress authorize the expenditure of both the principal and interest of said judgment, or, on the other hand, shall Congress pass this bill and thereby make the Indians self-supporting for all time, the Government to recoup itself many times over when all of the land shall be sold? It would seem that in view of the policy of the Government to lease instead of sell all mineral and coal lands, the present necessities of the Indians, and of exigencies incident to the advancement of the Indians toward civilization, there should be a final adjustment of their rights as provided in this bill. Without legislation the ceded mineral and coal lands can not be leased.

For a complete history of this case, reference is had to Senate Report No. 2032, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, Appendix 3, pages 8 and 9; Senate Report No. 267, Sixtieth Congress, first session; and the findings of fact, opinion, and judgment of the Court of Claims in case No. 30360, under its general jurisdiction, hereto attached.

It is therefore recommended that the bill do pass.

[Senate Rept. 2032, 57th Cong., 1st sess. Appendix 3.]

CLAIMS AND DEMANDS OF THE UTE INDIANS.

The Tabaguache, Muache, Capote, Weeminuche, Yampa, Grand River, and Uinta Bands of Ute Indians, known also as the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians of Colorado, claim as follows:

First. Compensation for all lands set apart from the lands of their reservation, as defined by the treaties and agreements of 1868, 1874, and 1880, to the use of the United States for forest or timber reservations, or to other purposes.

Second. Interest on such compensation from the date of the appropriation of the lands by the United States.

Third. Proceeds of the sale of lands within their reservation as defined by the treaty of March 2, 1868 (15 Stats., Private Laws, 1867–68, p. 119), as said reservation was diminished by the agreement ratified by Congress by act approved April 29, 1874 (18 Stats., p. 36), with annual periods of rest from which interest shall be computed and allowed on the fund as the same has accumulated.

Fourth. Interest on the several balances annually found to be due the Indians since June 30, 1881.

Fifth. Proceeds of the sale of subdivisions on which improvements were located at the time of the removal of the Indians.

Sixth. Compensation for all lands appropriated under the authority of the United States for rights of way of railroads or other public highways.

Seventh. An accounting and the right to contest any claim or demand on the part of the United States against said Indians for moneys alleged to have been paid out for or set apart to the use of said Indians or for their benefit, claimed to be a set-off against the claims of said Indians under the treaty and agreements herein referred to, including the right to contest the cost of removal, any charge or demand of the United States for the payment for lands at $1.25 per acre, which may have been set apart to said Indians, or any of them, outside of the State of Colorado, if set up in set-off or counterclaim against the demands of said Indians, and the right to contest and call for an accounting upon the funds paid out by the United States as annuities to white persons incident to the "Meeker massacre."

Respecting the first item set out in the claims of these Indians, your committee have carefully examined its wording to avoid committing the Government to the theory that the Indians are entitled to any compensation whatever for lands set apart by the United States for timber or forest reserves, or, that if any compensation be due to them, that such compensation shall be at the rate of $1.25 per acre for all of said lands, good and bad alike. Much of the lands in these timber reserves are high mountain peaks, having little or no market value. There are, therefore, two questions to be submitted to the courts in connection with this branch of the claims:

First. Whether the Government is liable in any case for the lands set apart; and Second. If liable, what rate of compensation shall be paid.

These questions may safely be left to the courts by the Government, whose interests will be protected by the Attorney General, and they should go to the courts, in the opinion of your committee. The questions thus presented are defined in the bill herewith reported.

The claim for interest rests upon a clause in the third section of the act approved June 15, 1880 (21 Stats., p. 204), to the effect that the interest arising on the fund accruing from the sale of lands shall be distributed annually to the Indians. The Indians have an undoubted right to a judicial construction of this clause and an award in accordance with the law; wherefore the several claims for interest are deemed by your committee as proper to be referred to the courts.

While there can be no doubt of the right of the Indians to the proceeds of the sale of their lands, there is a question as to whether these proceeds should have been carried to their credit annually, as is claimed by the Indians; but the right of the Indians to a judicial determination of that question can not be disputed, in the opinion of your committee. Besides, the Indians should have opportunity to scrutinize before a court of competent jurisdiction what has been done in the sale and disposition of their lands; that is a right no Indian who has a good prima facie claim should be denied, and common business prudence demands such scrutiny on the part of the Indian. The period covered by the sale of these lands has been over 20 years, and many questions such as are common to the disposition of the public domain have doubtless arisen affecting the rights of the Indians, and it is their undoubted right to know that such questions have been justly determined.

The right of the Indians to compensation for lands appropriated under the authority of the United States for rights of way for railroads and other public highways would seem to be resolved against the Indians by their consent to such rights of way under the fourteenth article of the treaty of 1868, but it is contended by them that by such consent to such rights of way they did not abandon their right to reasonable compensation therefor when the land came to be so appropriated. It is an important question and one that should be submitted to the courts.

Your committee entertains no doubt of the right of the Indians to contest the various matters of set-off and counterclaims against the Indians urged on the part of the United States, such as the cost of removal, the payment for lands at $1.25 per acre set apart for some of these Indians outside of the State of Colorado, and the moneys expended for annuities to white persons, the victims of the Meeker massacre.

The whole case presents important questions of law and of fact as well as of accounting, and the claims of these Indians can only be finally and justly determined by and through a reference to the courts.

Treaties, laws, and Executive orders bearing upon these claims of the Ute Indians are cited as follows:

Treaty of March 2, 1868 (15 Stats., Private Laws, 1867–68, p. 119).

Agreement ratified by act of Congress approved April 29, 1874 (18 Stats., p. 36).

Agreement ratified by act of Congress approved June 15, 1880 (21 Stats., p. 199), and ratified by Indians as reported by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in his annual report for 1880, page 21.

Proclamation by the President of the United States defining the White River Plateau Timber Reserve, October 6, 1891 (27 Stats., p. 993), under section 24, act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stats., p. 1103).

Proclamation of the President of the United States, dated December 24, 1892, defining the boundaries of the Battle Mountain Reserve (26 Stats., p. 1053).

The accompanying bill guards the rights of the Indians in each case respecting attorneys' fees by providing in the third section thereof that the Court of Claims, at the time of rendering judgment in each case, shall, as part of its findings and as a part of such judgment, fix the fees of attorneys and counsel not to exceed 15 per cent of the judgment.

[Senate Report No. 267, Sixtieth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred Senate bill 5038, having considered the same, report as follows:

Formerly the Confederated Bands of the Ute Indians occupied western Colorado and adjacent territory.

On March 2, 1868, a treaty was entered into between the said Indians and the United States, which was proclaimed November 6, 1868. (15 Stat. L., pp. 619 et seq.)

By this treaty a part of the territory which had been occupied by said Indians in Colorado was set apart for their absolute and undisturbed use and occupation, and for such other friendly tribes and individual Indians as from time to time they might be willing to admit among them. This territory was bounded on the east by the one hundred and seventh degree of longitude, on the north by a line 15 miles north of the fortieth parallel of north latitude, on the west by the western boundary of the then Territory of Colorado, and on the south by the southern boundary of said Territory.

A part of this reservation was ceded to the United States by agreement dated September 13, 1873, ratified April 29, 1874 (18 Stat. L., 36), for the consideration of an annuity of $25,000 per annum perpetually.

The balance of the indicated reservation was ceded to the United States under an agreement ratified by act of Congress approved June 15, 1880 (21 Stat. L., 199), by which the United States agreed to hold the lands ceded as public lands of the United States, subject to disposal under the laws providing for the disposal of public lands, at the same price and on the same terms as other lands of like character, except as provided in the indicated act; and it was specifically provided in accordance therewith that none of said land, whether mineral or otherwise, should be liable to settlement under the provisions of the homestead law, but should be subject to cash entry only in accordance with existing law; and when sold, the proceeds of such sale should be first sacredly applied to reimbursing the United States for all sums paid out or set apart under the indicated act by the Government for the use and benefit of said Indians, and then so much thereof as might be necessary was to be applied in payment of lands at $1.25 per acre which might be ceded to them outside of their reservation by the United States in pursuance of that act and agreement, and that the remainder should be deposited in the Treasury, as now provided by law, for the benefit of said Indians.

The act separated the Indians occupying the territory into those to be known as "Southern Utes," "Uncompahgre Utes," and "White River Utes." The Southern Utes now occupy the reservation at the Southern Ute Agency in Colorado; the Uncompahgres occupy the lands of the former reservation at the Ouray Agency in Utah, and the White River Utes occupy lands on the former Uintah Reservation in Utah.

Of the lands so ceded many thousand acres have been sold by the United States and the money has been received therefor, but no part thereof has been paid to said Indians.

The White River Forest Reservation, the Battlement Mesa Reservation, the Uncompahgre Forest Reserve, and parts of two other reservations have been set aside from the said ceded lands.

By the terms of the act of 1880 certain credits are to be allowed by the Indians, and expenses incurred by the Government under the treaty, including the lands which the Government has bought for said Indians.

Under date of November 16, 1903, a bill for the relief of the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians was introduced by the Senator from Colorado (Mr. Teller) and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. That bill provided for an accounting of the sum now in the Treasury due the Indians for the part of the ceded lands sold by the United States, and for a report to Congress of all the rights of the Indians under said treaty, including the value of the forest reserves created out of said ceded lands, with such set-offs as are chargeable against the Indians under the treaty. The bill was favorably reported by the committee and was subsequently, under date of December 11, 1903, considered by the Senate, and by Senate resolution the same was referred to the Court of Claims under the Tucker Act.

Thereupon, on the 6th day of January, 1904, a petition was filed in said court, which petition the United States moved to dismiss on the 13th day of August, 1904, upon the ground of lack of jurisdiction, because the bill referred to the court failed to provide for the payment of a claim against the United States as provided by act of Congress of March 3, 1887, under which act the bill was referred.

On the 26th day of August, 1904, plaintiffs filed a reply brief contesting the motion to dismiss, to which the Government answered on October 14, 1904.

The motion to dismiss was submitted to the court October 17, 1904, and thereupon the court overruled the defendants' motion to dismiss without prejudice to consider the motion with the case on its merits; so that the question of jurisdiction of the court, under the resolution referring the same to the Court of Claims, can not be fully considered and disposed of until disposition of the cause, and the same is now pending.

The progress of the case has made it necessary to file two amended petitions, and voluminous documentary evidence has been filed involving great research and constant labor during a period of five years. So that the case now stands upon the record of the court subject to possible dismissal or an inadequate finding for want of complete jurisdiction on the part of the court.

If the petition of plaintiffs shall be dismissed thus for want of jurisdiction, or if the court shall so modify its findings as not to afford full and complete relief as was the intent of the Senate, the expense, time, and labor bestowed upon the case will be lost, and the plaintiffs will be placed in a position but very little better than when they commenced their efforts to enforce their right.

The matter has been reported once from the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs with a view to sending the case to the Court of Claims, with full jurisdiction to hear and determine all the questions involved. (See S. Rept. No. 2032, 57th Cong., 1st sess., Appendix No. 3.)

The case has progressed far enough under the Senate reference of December 11, 1903, to disclose questions which can only be determined by a final judgment, with right of appeal by either party to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the report of the findings to Congress and action thereon, in the opinion of your committee, will require a rereference to the court before the questions involved can be settled, and will necessarily delay the final adjustment of the rights of these Indians, already too long postponed.

No one will deny that the Government has received and has in its possession money due these Indians. No one will deny that they have valuable interests under the treaty which they should have the right to take to the court for full and final determination, and justice demands that the faulty jurisdiction shall now be cured, so that the Indians may have all their rights under the treaty fully and finally adjudicated.

This claim was favorably reported in the Fifty-ninth Congress, second session (Rept. No. 5689, p. 13), as follows:

"Under date of November 16, 1903, a bill for the relief of the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians was introduced by Senator Teller and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, which bill was subsequently, under date of December 11, 1903, considered by the Senate, and by Senate resolution the same was referred to the Court of Claims under the Tucker Act.

"Thereupon, on the 6th day of January, 1904, a petition was filed in said court, which petition the United States moved to dismiss, on the 13th day of August, 1904, upon the ground of lack of jurisdiction because the bill referred to the court by the said resolution of the Senate failed to provide for the payment of a claim against the United States as provided by act of Congress March 3, 1887, under which act the bill was referred. The bill, in part, required a report to Congress upon certain forest reserves for which payment was not provided. On the 25th of August, 1904, plaintiffs filed a reply brief contesting the motion to dismiss, to which the Government answered on October 14, 1904.

"The motion to dismiss was submitted to the court October 17, 1904, and thereupon the court overruled the defendants' motion to dismiss without prejudice to consider the motion with the case on its merits, so that the question of the jurisdiction of the court, under the resolution reporting the same to the Court of Claims, can not be finally considered and disposed of until final disposition of the cause as the same is now pending.

"The progress of the case has made it necessary to file two amended petitions, and voluminous documentary evidence has been filed, involving great research and constant labor during a period of four years. Since the closing of the case, the completion of the testimony therein, and the filing of plaintiffs' brief for request of findings of fact, the Government has taken no action; so that the case now stands upon the record of the court subject to possible dismissal or an inadequate finding after final hearing for want of complete jurisdiction on the part of the court. If the petition of plaintiffs shall be dismissed thus for want of jurisdiction, or if the court shall so modify its findings as not to afford full and complete relief as was the intent of the Senate, the expense, labor, and time incident to conducting the case will be lost, and the plaintiffs will be placed in a position but very little better than when they commenced their effort to enforce this right.

"The matter has been reported once from the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, with a view to sending the same to the Court of Claims with full jurisdiction to hear and determine all the questions involved.

"The case has progressed far enough under the Senate reference of December 11, 1903, to disclose questions which can only be determined by a final judgment, with right of appeal by either party to the Supreme Court of the United States. The delay incident to the court proceedings, the report of the findings to Congress and action thereon, which, in the opinion of your committee will require a rereference to the court before the question involved can be settled, will necessarily delay the final adjustment of the rights of these Indians, already too long postponed. Senate Report No. 2032, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, Appendix No. 3, upon the same subject matter, is referred to in connection herewith.

"The commissioner says:

"'The case concerned is pending in the Court of Claims, which was instructed by Senate resolution No. 52, Fifty-eighth Congress, second session, to proceed as directed and report to the Senate.

"'If this proposed legislation prevails, the findings of the court will be morally binding upon the Congress, and an appropriation will have to be made to meet its judgment. But this item proposes to give authority to the attorney of record, J. M. Vale, to control the conduct of the suit and employ other attorneys for the plaintiffs, and authorizes the court to fix the compensation, not exceeding 15 per cent of the judgment, which shall be awarded to the attorneys "who have rendered actual services in conducting the said cause upon a quantum meruit," and the Treasury is to be reimbursed "from the funds of the Confederated Bands of the Ute Indians."

"'Now, Mr. Vale is not attorney for the Confederated Utes, but only for certain bands. Other attorneys obtained similar contracts from other bands, and all appear to have "pooled their issues," so that each might be interested in every contract.

"'In the request for findings of facts and argument submitted to the court the eleventh finding asked for shows four contracts, the attorneys being J. M. Vale, C. C. Clements, William C. Shelley, Kie Oldham, Adair Wilson, and W. S. Peabody, and says: "The services so rendered to each of the said bands of Indians are identical, and the compensation moving from each thereof should be the same. There is allowed and set apart to the said attorneys 12½ per cent of the amount awarded to the said Indians in these findings of fact, which is the minimum compensation named in the said contracts." This item, however, proposes to raise the award to 15 per cent and let in other attorneys.

"'Furthermore, this bill proposes to pay the attorneys out of moneys in the Treasury, without regard to whether the Indians ever obtain anything or not. As the amount involved is from $9,000,000 to $25,000,000, it can be seen clearly that the attorneys will fare very well, no matter what happens to the Indians. The entire business should, in my judgment, be suspended till the case in the Court of Claims has been determined.'"

There is no controversy about the amount of land sold and the amount of money received by the Government, but there is a serious controversy as to the charges and set-offs against the same provided for by the agreement of cession. Questions thus raised will never be satisfactorily settled without a judicial determination thereof. Therefore, it would seem to your committee that there is no reason for further delaying an adjustment of this matter. The amount involved has nothing to do with the question, because the Indians are simply to be paid whatever is due them under the agreement by which they ceded an empire. As to what should be paid their counsel, the court, before whom much of the labor of counsel has been and will be rendered, is the proper tribunal to determine the measure of such compensation.

Therefore your committee recommend the passage of this bill.

[Court of Claims of the United States. No. 30360. Decided May 23, 1910.]

THE WHITE RIVER UTES, THE SOUTHERN UTES, THE UNCOMPAHGRE UTES, THE TABEGUACHE, MUACHE, CAPOTE, WEEMINUCHE, YAMPA, GRAND RIVER, AND UINTA BANDS OF UTE INDIANS, KNOWN ALSO AS THE CONFEDERATED BANDS OF UTE INDIANS OF COLORADO, v. THE UNITED STATES.

This case having been heard by the Court of Claims, the court, upon the evidence makes the following

FINDINGS OF FACT.

I. The plaintiffs are a confederated band of Ute Indians between whom and the Government of the United States the relation of guardian and ward has existed since February 2, 1848. On June 30, 1908, the total number of Indians composing the plaintiff confederated bands was as follows:

White River Utes, known also as the Yampa and Grand River Bands	295
Uinta Utes	427
Southern Utes, known also as the Muache, Capote, and Weeminuche Bands	808
Uncompahgre Utes, known also as the Tebaguache Band	470
Total	2,000

In their tribal relations they are known as the Uncompahgre, the Tabeguache, Muache, Capote, Weeminuche, Yampa, Grand River, and Uinta Bands of Ute Indians, and also as the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians of Colorado; also as the White River Utes and the Southern Utes and the Uncompahgre Utes.

II. By an act of Congress approved March 3, 1909 (35 Stats., 788, 789), jurisdiction was conferred upon the Court of Claims as follows:

"That to carry into effect the agreement between the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians of Colorado and the United States, ratified by the act of Congress approved June 15, 1880, being 'An act to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians in Colorado for the sale of their reservation in said State, and for other purposes, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same' (21 Stats., 199), jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render final judgment, with right of appeal as in other cases, on the claims and rights of said Indians under said agreement, including the value of all lands ceded by the said Indians which have been set apart and reserved from the public lands as public reservations or for other public uses under existing laws and proclamations of the President, as if disposed of under the public-land laws of the United States, as provided by said agreement, and the money due therefor; and the court shall set off against any sum found due said Indians the amount paid to them under the fifth section of said act of June 15, 1880, being $50,000 per annum up to the date of rendition of final judgment in this cause, also any other sum or sums that shall be found to be properly chargeable under the terms of said agreement, and also any sum or sums paid by the United States to or for the benefit of said Indians, whether as a gratuity or otherwise, except such sums as have been paid for a specific purpose and an adequate consideration; and the credit of $1,250,000 set apart in the Treasury by the terms of said agreement upon which said annuity has been estimated, shall, upon the rendition of final judgment in this cause, cease to exist as a trust fund, and from and after the date of said judgment no annuity shall be estimated or paid therefrom; and the action herein authorized shall be consolidated with cause congressional No. 11248, now pending in said court, for the purpose of using at the trial thereof all evidence which has been adduced in said pending cause, and shall be commenced by petition under the title of said pending cause and shall be conducted by the attorney of record now appearing therein or by any attorney by him specifically authorized to appear; and the Attorney General shall continue to appear and represent the United States; and in rendering judgment herein the court shall fix upon a quantum meruit and set apart just and reasonable compensation to the attorneys on behalf of plaintiffs who have rendered actual service in prosecuting said claim before the committees of Congress and in conducting the said cause before the courts in the name of the attorney of record in said pending cause, or any attorney by him specifically authorized, and said compensation shall be paid to such attorney by the Secretary of the Treasury out of any money in the Treasury arising from the sale of said ceded lands or from the proceeds of said judgment, and the balance of said judgment shall be held in the Treasury for the benefit of said Indians as a trust fund, and the interest thereon shall be distributed annually to them in accordance with the terms of said act of June 15, 1880; and the said cause shall be advanced in hearing by the Court of Claims, and by the Supreme Court of the United States if the same shall be appealed."

III. By Senate resolution of December 11, 1903, No. 52, Fifty-eighth Congress, second session, this cause was sent to the Court of Claims and was numbered "Congressional, 11248," that upon the hearing thereof the same was dismissed for want of jurisdiction; that thereupon a motion for a new trial was filed, which motion was pending at the time of the passage of the jurisdictional act referred to in finding II herein, which action is now consolidated with the cause now on hearing.

IV. By the second article of a treaty by and between the plaintiffs and the United States, concluded at the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, March 2, 1868, whereof ratification was requested with amendment July 25, 1868, and which amendment was accepted by the Indians August 15, September 1, 14, 24, and 25, 1868, and which treaty was proclaimed November 6, 1868 (15 Stat. L., Treaties, pp. 619 et seq.), certain territory was set apart for the absolute and undisturbed use and occupation of plaintiffs and for such other friendly tribes and individual Indians as from time to time they might be willing, with the consent of the United States, to admit among them, the United States solemnly agreeing that no persons except those by said treaty authorized so to do and except such officers, agents, and employees of the Government as might be authorized to enter upon the said Indian reservation in the discharge of duties enjoined by law, should ever be permitted to pass over, settle upon, or reside in the territory described therein; that the territory so set apart to plaintiffs is described in said second article of said treaty as follows:

"Commencing at that point on the southern boundary line of the Territory of Colorado where the meridian of longitude 107° west from Greenwich crosses the same, running thence north with said meridian to a point 15 miles due north of where said meridian intersects the fortieth parallel of north latitude; thence due west to the western boundary line of said Territory; thence south with said western boundary line of said Territory to the southern boundary line of said Territory; thence east with said boundary line to the place of beginning."

Afterwards, to wit, on the 13th day of September, 1873, the plaintiffs by the name and style of "Certain Ute Indians in Colorado by the chiefs and headmen of the Tabeguache, Mauche, Capote, Weeminuche, Yampa, Grand River, and Uintah Bands of Ute Indians," entered into a duly ratified convention at Los Pinos Agency for the Ute Indians in the State of Colorado, whereby, by the first article of said convention, plaintiffs relinquished to the United States all right, title, claims, and interest in and to the following-described portion of the reservation conveyed to them by the United States by the treaty proclaimed November 6, 1868, hereinbefore set forth, that is to say:

"Beginning at a point on the eastern boundary of said reservation 15 miles due north of the southern boundary of the Territory of Colorado, and running thence west on a line parallel to the said southern boundary to a point on said line 20 miles due east of the western boundary of Colorado Territory; thence north by a line parallel with the western boundary to a point 10 miles north of the point where said line intersects the thirty-eighth parallel of north latitude; thence east to the eastern boundary of the Ute Reservation; thence south along said boundary to the place of beginning;"

the consideration for the said cession was a sufficient amount of United States bonds at 5 per cent per annum to produce the sum of $25,000 per annum to be held in perpetual trust for the said Ute Indians subject to disbursement or investment at the discretion of the President or as he may direct, for the use and benefit of the Ute Indians, annually forever.

The annuity, provided under the terms of the act of April 29, 1874 (18 Stats., 41), was accepted by plaintiffs in full compensation for the territory ceded under that act; the interest being 5 per cent per annum.

The cession of 1873 and the consideration paid therefor by the terms of the act of April 29, 1874, concluded that transaction.

Afterwards, by the terms of an agreement between petitioners and the United States, which is embraced in and made part of "An act to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians in Colorado, for the sale of their reservation in said State, and for other purposes, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same," approved June 15, 1880 (21 Stats., 199), the chiefs and headmen of the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians, being these plaintiffs, promised and agreed to use their best endeavors with their people to procure their consent to cede to the United States all remaining territory of these petitioners in Colorado, being the remainder of the lands set apart to the permanent use and occupation of petitioners by the treaty of 1868, as in this finding first set forth; that said agreement was duly assented to and ratified by plaintiffs.

In pursuance of section 2 of said act the President appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, five commissioners to carry into effect the provisions of said act.

By the third section of said act of cession approved June 15, 1880, it was provided as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause to be surveyed, under the direction of said commissioners, a sufficient quantity of land in the vicinities named in said agreement to secure the settlement in severalty of said Indians as herein provided.

And upon completion of said survey and enumeration herein required, the said commissioners shall cause allotments of lands to be made to each and all of said Indians, in quantity and character as set forth in the agreement above mentioned, and whenever the report and proceedings of said commissioners, as required by this act, are approved by the President of the United States, he shall cause patents to issue to each and every allottee for the lands so allotted, with the same conditions, restrictions, and limitations mentioned therein as are provided in said agreement; and all lands not so allotted the title to which is, by said agreement of the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians, and this acceptance by the United States, released and conveyed to the United States, shall be held and deemed to be public lands of the United States and subject to disposal under the laws providing for the disposal of the public lands, at the same price and on the same terms as other lands of like character, except as provided in this act: Provided, That none of said lands, whether mineral or otherwise, shall be liable to entry and settlement under the provisions of the homestead law, but shall be subject to cash entry only in accordance with existing law; and when sold the proceeds of said sale shall be first sacredly applied to reimbursing the United States for all sums paid out or set apart under this act by the Government for the benefit of said Indians, and then to be applied in payment for the lands at $1.25 per acre, which may be ceded to them by the United States outside of their reservation in pursuance of this agreement, and the remainder, if any, shall be deposited in the Treasury as now provided by law for the benefit of said Indians, in the proportion hereinbefore stated, and the interest thereon shall be distributed annually to them in the same manner as the funds provided for in this act: Provided further, That the subdivisions upon which are located improvements to be appraised, as provided for in section 2 of this act, shall be offered to the highest bidder at public sale after published notice of at least 30 days by the Secretary of the Interior, and the same shall be absolutely reserved from occupation or claim until sold."

In accordance with section 2 of said act a census of the plaintiffs was thereafter made by said commissioners, and the plaintiffs were separated thereunder into three divisions, as follows:

First. Those known in the agreement above referred to as "Southern Utes."

Second. Those known as "Uncompahgre Utes."

Third. Those known as "White River Utes."

Subsequently, in conformity with the provisions of section 2 of said act, said commissioners, after due examination, reported that they had examined the land on the Grand River near the mouth of the Gunnison and found it to be unsuitable for the plaintiffs for agricultural or grazing purposes and that there was no other land suitable for agricultural purposes within a reasonable distance which could be used in connection with that near the mouth of the Gunnison River and give the plaintiffs the quality contemplated.

Uncompahgre Utes.—Accordingly said commissioners, in conformity with said act, selected a tract of land in the valleys of the White and Green Rivers in Utah, which was subsequently surveyed and defined by metes and bounds, containing about 1,933,440 acres, for the Uncompahgre Utes. Said selection was approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and said Uncompahgre Utes were all removed thereto by the United States by October, 1881.

Under the acts of August 15, 1894 (28 Stats., 337), June 7, 1897 (30 Stats., 87), March 1, 1899 (30 Stats., 940), and joint resolution, June 15, 1902 (32 Stats., 744), 75,978.19 acres of land have been allotted in severalty to said Uncompahgre Utes from the tract of land in Utah thus selected by said commissioners.

White River Utes.—The White River Utes were removed by the United States to the Uintah Agency, Utah, after much difficulty, in November, 1881. Under said agreement and act of June 15, 1880, and also under the acts of May 27, 1902 (32 Stats., 263, 264), and joint resolution, June 10, 1902 (32 Stats., 744), 39,589.84 acres of land have been allotted in severalty to the White River Utes in Utah.

Southern Utes.—The Southern Utes were not removed from their former reservation in Colorado, but remained on a tract of land about 110 miles long, east and west, and 15 miles in width, containing a total area of about 483,750 acres, of which approximately 406,000 acres is in Colorado and the balance in New Mexico. Under section 6, act of February 20, 1895 (28 Stats., 677), with the consent of said Southern Utes, a portion of the above lands was opened to settlement and entry allotments in severalty having been previously made in accordance with said act to 371 Southern Utes, comprising a total of 72,810.65 acres of land, all in Colorado.

V. Of the lands ceded to the United States, as set forth in the fourth finding, 4,126.57 acres have been applied to reservoir sites by authority of sections 18, 19, and 20 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1891 (26 Stats., 1095), and the plaintiffs have been deprived of the sale thereof.

1. The Government received no compensation on account of rights of way granted by this department over lands within the limits of the former Ute Indian Reservation in Colorado under the act of March 3, 1891, sections 18, 19, and 20, or the act of February 15, 1901 (31 Stats., 790).

2. Any person entering a tract of land to part of which a right of way is attached for a canal, ditch, or reservoir takes the same subject to such right of way and at the full area of the subdivision entered and is required to pay therefor, there being no authority to make deduction in such cases.

VI. Prior and up to March 2, 1868, the plaintiffs occupied as hunting grounds territory comprising a part of the public domain, a portion of which was embraced within the lines of the Louisiana purchase, a portion was acquired by the annexation of Texas in 1845, and the balance by cession from Mexico by the treaty of Guadaloupe Hidalgo of February 2, 1848.

The lands so occupied as hunting grounds by the plaintiffs included the reservation provided for by the agreement of 1880.

VII. Of the lands ceded to the United States under the terms of said agreement of June 15, 1880 (21 Stats., 199), the following have been set apart and reserved from the public lands as public reservations under existing laws and proclamations of the President.

The White River National Forest was established by proclamation of the President October 16, 1891 (27 Stats., 993), under the designation "White River Plateau Timber Land Reserve," by virtue of section 24 of the act of Congress, approved March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to repeal timber-culture laws, and for other purposes" (26 Stats., 1103). The area of said reservation as originally defined was 930,240 acres. Subsequently said reservation was modified by proclamation of the President dated June 28, 1902 (32 Stats., 2008), and was then designated the "White River Forest Reserve." Afterwards said reservation was further modified by proclamation of the President dated May 21, 1904 (33 Stats., 2361).

Deducting the area restored under the act of June 11, 1906 (34 Stats., 233), and areas pending and paid for under the public-land laws, the remaining public land contained in said reservation is found to be 823,733 acres.

The Battlement National Forest was originally set apart by proclamation of the President dated December 24, 1892 (27 Stats., 1053), and was by that proclamation designated "The Battlement Mesa Forest Reserve," and by proclamation dated May 16, 1904 (33 Stats., 2359), the same was modified, and said reservation was again modified by proclamation dated June 5, 1905 (34 Stats., 3076). By Executive order bearing date July 1, 1908, the said reservation was further modified and the designation thereof was changed to "Battlement National Forest."

Deducting the area restored under the act of June 11, 1906 (34 Stats., 233), and areas pending and paid for under the public-land laws, the remaining public land contained in said reservation is found to be 739,112 acres.

The Uncompahgre National Forest was originally set apart by proclamation of the President dated June 14, 1905 (34 Stats., 3109), under the designation "The Uncompahgre Forest Reserve." The said reservation was modified by proclamation dated March 1, 1907 (34 Stats., 3282), and designated by Executive order dated July 1, 1908, "Uncompahgre National Forest."

Deducting the area restored under the act of June 11, 1906 (34 Stats., 233), and areas pending and paid for under the public-land laws, the remaining public land contained in said reservation is found to be 645,124 acres.

The Holy Cross National Forest was first reserved under the designation "The Holy Cross Forest Reserve" by proclamation of the President dated August 25, 1905 (34 Stats., 3144). The reservation was modified by proclamation dated March 1, 1907 (34 Stats., 3286), and by Executive order dated July 1, 1908 (No. 870), the said reservation was designated the "Holy Cross National Forest."

Deducting the area restored under the act of June 11, 1906 (34 Stats., 233), and areas pending and paid for under the public-land laws, the remaining public land contained in said reservation is found to be 289,489 acres.

The Gunnison National Forest was originally set apart under the designation "The Gunnison Forest Reserve" by proclamation of the President dated May 12, 1905 (34 Stats., 3025), and by Executive order of July 1, 1908 (No. 891), the designation of said reservation was changed to "Gunnison National Forest."

Deducting the area restored under the act of June 11, 1906 (34 Stats., 233), and areas pending and paid for under the public-land laws, the remaining public land contained in said reservation is found to be 520,836 acres.

The Montezuma National Forest was originally established by proclamation of the President dated June 13, 1905 (34 Stats., 3106), and was thereafter modified by proclamation dated March 2, 1907 (34 Stats., 3307), and by Executive order dated July 1, 1908 (No. 889), said reservation was designated "Montezuma National Forest."

Deducting the area restored under the act of June 11, 1906 (34 Stats., 233), and areas pending and paid for under the public-land laws, the remaining public land contained in said reservation is found to be 102,595 acres.

The San Juan National Forest was originally established by proclamation dated June 3, 1905 (34 Stats., 3070), and was afterwards, on the 2d of March, 1907, modified by proclamation (34 Stats., 3308), and on July 1, 1908, by Executive order (No. 886), the same was designated "San Juan National Forest."

Deducting the area restored under the act of June 11, 1906 (34 Stats., 233), and areas pending and paid for under the public-land laws, the remaining public land contained in said reservation is found to be 49,594 acres.

The La Sal National Forest was created by proclamation dated January 25, 1906 (34 Stats., 3190).

Deducting the area restored under the act of June 11, 1906 (34 Stats., 233), and areas pending and paid for under the public-land laws, the remaining public land contained in said reservation is found to be 28,775 acres, making a total of 3,199,258 acres of the lands ceded to the United States by the agreement of June 15, 1880, set apart and reserved as public reservations.

VIII. The value of all lands ceded by the plaintiff Indians which have been set apart and reserved from the public lands as public reservations or for other public uses under existing laws and proclamations of the President is found to be $3,999,072.50.

Of the lands ceded to the United States by plaintiffs under the terms of said agreement of June 15, 1880 (21 Stats., 199), 1,310,688.38 acres have been sold and disposed of between the 15th day of June, 1880, and the 30th day of June, 1908, for the sum of $2,204,694.71.

IX. In accordance with the provisions of the act of June 15, 1880, and the jurisdictional act, March 3, 1909, under which this suit is brought, the court finds the following sums to have been expended by the United States to or for the benefit of the plaintiffs, and states the account between the United States and the plaintiffs as follows:

The area ceded by the plaintiffs to the United States under the agreement of September 3, 1873, ratified by the act of April 29, 1874 (18 Stats., 36), contained 3,059,200 acres of land.

The area of land disposed of by the United States for cash and set apart and reserved from the public lands as public reservations or for other public uses under existing laws and proclamations of the President is 4,509,944.38 acres, leaving a balance still undisposed of on July 1, 1908, of 7,569,144.38 acres.

Upon the foregoing findings of fact the court decides as a conclusion of law that the plaintiffs are entitled to judgment against the United States on statement of the account up to July 1, 1908, for the sum of $3,408,611.40.

OPINION.

Barney, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

The plaintiffs are 10 tribes of Indians, known as the Confederated Bands of the Ute Indians (referred to hereinafter as the Ute Indians), who sue herein for an accounting to them under the agreement made by them with the defendant by an act of Congress approved June 15, 1880 (21 Stats., 199).

The same claim, known as Congressional case No. 11248, was referred to this court by resolution of the Senate under the fourteenth section of the Tucker Act, but was dismissed on defendant's motion in March, 1908, for want of jurisdiction (43 Ct. Cls., 260).

The case is now here by virtue of a provision in the Indian appropriation act approved March 3, 1909 (35 Stats., 788, 789), conferring jurisdiction on this court to adjudicate the claim to final judgment, with right of appeal as in other cases, with a direction to allow certain setoffs and counterclaims therein mentioned. A consolidation is directed with the Congressional case above mentioned, still pending on a motion for a new trial, for the purpose of using the evidence therein adduced at this trial. The jurisdictional proviso is given in full as Finding II in the findings of fact, supra, and will not be here repeated.

The territory within which the lands in question are located, and out of which the Territories of New Mexico, Utah, and Colorado were subsequently created, was mostly acquired from Mexico by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, concluded February 2, 1848 (9 Stat., 922, 930). This treaty contained no provision affecting or recognizing the rights of the Indian tribes to any of the lands within the cession unless such recognition can be gathered from the opening words of the eleventh article of that treaty, which are: "Considering that a great part of the territories which by the present treaty are to be comprehended for the future within the limits of the United States is now occupied by savage tribes," etc. It should be said, however, that a portion at least of the lands covered by the treaties between the Utes and the United States, hereinafter mentioned, were acquired under the Louisiana Purchase or by the annexation of Texas.

December 30, 1849, the first treaty was made with the "Utah" Indians (doubtless the claimants), which involved no cession of lands and did not set apart any reservation to the Indians (9 Stats., 984). It did, however, clearly recognize some rights of the Indians to the occupation of certain lands. For instance, Article V of that treaty is as follows:

"V. The people of the United States and all others in amity with the United States shall have free passage through the territory of said Utahs, under such rules and regulations as may be adopted by authority of said States."

Expressions of similar import are used in the seventh article of the same treaty.

September 9, 1850, a Territorial government for Utah was established (9 Stats., 453), including within its boundaries that part of the present State of Colorado west of the summit of the Rocky Mountains. February 28, 1861, the Territory of Colorado was organized (12 Stats., 172).

On October 7, 1863, a treaty with the Tabeguache Band of the plaintiff Indians was concluded, and proclaimed December 14, 1864 (13 Stats., 673). By this treaty, when first signed, the Indians asserted the exclusive right to certain lands therein described, but all assertions of that character were stricken out by the Senate before ratification, and the treaty was further amended by adding the following provision:

"Nothing contained in this treaty shall be construed or taken to admit on the part of the United States any other or greater title or interest in the lands above excepted and reserved in said tribe or band of Indians than existed in them upon the acquisition of said territory from Mexico by the laws thereof."

By Article II of the treaty as amended by the Senate the Tabeguache Band of Utes ceded and relinquished to the United States all "claim, right, title, and interest in and to any and all lands within the territory of the United States," excepting certain lands described which are reserved to them "as their hunting grounds."

Provision was made in this treaty for payment to the Indians of an annuity for 10 years, $10,000 in goods and $10,000 in provisions. Provision was also made for the allowance to them of certain agricultural stock and for the establishment of a blacksmith shop for their benefit upon the lands thus reserved.

March 2, 1868 (15 Stat., 619), a treaty was concluded at Washington with the plaintiff Indians, including the Tabeguache Band, the only Indian party to the treaty of 1863 just mentioned. This treaty reaffirmed the provisions of the treaty of 1863, and, in fact, so far at least as the Tabeguache Band was concerned, superseded it.

Article II of this treaty set apart a district within what is now the State of Colorado, and embracing about 15,000,000 acres of land, as a reservation for the plaintiff Indians and such other friendly tribes and individual Indians as they, with the consent of the United States, might be willing to admit among them for their "absolute use and occupation." Article III of the treaty is as follows:

"Article III. It is further agreed by the Indians parties hereto that henceforth they will and do hereby relinquish all claims and rights in and to any portion of the United States or Territories, except such as are embraced in the limits defined in the preceding article."

The treaty also provided for the establishment of two agencies on said reservation; for the construction thereon by the United States of schoolhouses and other buildings; for the selection of tracts of land thereon not exceeding 160 acres in extent by Indian heads of families desirous of commencing farming, to be held in the exclusive possession of the person selecting it and his family so long as cultivation should continue, and 80 acres to persons not heads of families; for supplying seeds and agricultural implements to the Indians, and for instructions by a practical farmer; for the establishment of blacksmith shops for their benefit; also for the establishment of schools, by building schoolhouses, and supplying competent teachers.

Provision was also made for payment to the Indians of annuities, (1) not to exceed $30,000 per annum for clothing, blankets, etc., and (2) not to exceed $30,000 for food. For the purpose of inducing the Indians to adopt the habits of civilized life and becoming self-sustaining the Secretary of the Interior was authorized to expend the sum of $45,000 for them for the first year after the treaty.

Article XVI of said treaty was as follows:

"Article XVI. No treaty for the cession of any portion or part of the reservation herein described, which may be held in common, shall be of any validity or force as against the said Indians, unless executed and signed by at least three-fourths of all the adult male Indians occupying or interested in the same; and no cession by the tribe shall be understood or construed in such manner as to deprive the tribe, without his consent, any individual member of the tribe of his right to any tract of land selected by him, as provided in article 7 of this treaty."

By act of Congress April 23, 1872 (17 Stats., 55), the Secretary of the Interior was authorized to enter into negotiations with the plaintiff Indians for the purchase from them of the south part of said reservation, a district estimated to contain about 3,450,000 acres. Commissioners were appointed for that purpose and they entered into an agreement with the Indians, which was ratified by Congress April 29, 1874 (18 Stats., 36), by the terms of which the plaintiff Indians surrendered all right, title, and interest to said 3,500,000-acre tract of land, in consideration of which the Indians were to be paid a perpetual annuity of $25,000. The area of the remaining reservation as thus diminished comprised about 11,724,800 acres of land.

In the late seventies the advance guard of civilization seeking new homes in the far West began to press upon the borders of this Ute reservation, and in 1878 Congress, through a commission appointed for that purpose, made an effort to purchase it from the Utes and to secure their removal to another locality, but without success.

AGREEMENT OF JUNE 15, 1880 (21 STATS., 199).

During the winter of 1879–80 a delegation of the chiefs and headmen of the plaintiff Indians visited the city of Washington, and on March 6, 1880, entered into an agreement with the United States whereby they undertook to use their best endeavors with their people to procure their consent to cede to the United States the remainder of the reservation set apart to them by the treaty of 1868. This agreement was afterwards duly assented to by the plaintiff Indians and thereafter ratified by Congress and embraced in the act of Congress of June 15, 1880 (21 Stats., 199). Some amendments to the agreement were proposed by Congress in the act referred to, and the agreement as thus amended was afterwards consented to by three-fourths of the adult male plaintiff Indians, as required by the treaty of 1868 and by section 10 of the act containing the agreement.

By that agreement the plaintiffs ceded to the United States the entire remainder of their reservation in the State of Colorado reserved to them under the treaty of November 6, 1868, containing approximately 11,784,800 acres of land, and agreed to remove, settle upon, and accept individual allotments of unoccupied agricultural and grazing lands in certain designated localities to be selected for them by a commission authorized by the act, which lands should be free from taxation and not subject to alienation for a period of 25 years, or longer in the discretion of the President.

It was further agreed by section 3 of said act that all lands within the ceded limits not allotted in severalty to the plaintiffs should be deemed to be public lands of the United States, subject to disposal under the public-land laws for cash only, in accordance with existing law, at the same price and on the same terms as other lands of like character, and contained the following proviso:

"That none of said lands, whether mineral or otherwise, shall be liable to entry and settlement under the provisions of the homestead law, but shall be subject to cash entry only in accordance with existing law, and when sold the proceeds of said sale shall be first sacredly applied to reimbursing the United States for all sums paid out or set apart under this act by the Government for the benefit of said Indians and then to be applied in payment for the lands, at $1.25 per acre, which may be ceded to them by the United States outside of their reservation in pursuance of this agreement. And the remainder, if any, shall be deposited in the Treasury as now provided by law for the benefit of the said Indians, in the proportion hereinbefore stated, and the interest thereon shall be distributed annually to them in the same manner as the funds provided for in this act."

The act provided for the appointment of commissioners for the purpose of carrying out the contract by selecting and allotting lands to the Indians, locating agencies, furnishing estimates of the number of schoolhouses and teachers required, etc. It also directed the Secretary of the Treasury to set apart and hold as a perpetual trust fund for the benefit of the plaintiffs an amount of money sufficient at 4 per cent to produce annually $50,000, to be paid to them per capita in cash annually as provided in said agreement. It provided for salaries of certain members of the Ute Indians under existing treaty stipulations for a period of 10 years, and authorized the distribution of $4,000 per annum for the same term by the President to such of said Indians as proved themselves worthy of such recognition.

The act made appropriations for the purpose of carrying the agreement into effect, (1) for the payment of the commissioners, $25,000; (2) for cost of removal of the Utes, surveying thier lands, building houses, establishing schools, building mills, purchasing stock, etc., as provided in said agreement, $350,000; (3) $15,000 in addition to the $60,000 then due and provided for, to be paid to them per capita; (4) for the payment of the appraised value of individual improvements within the reservation as provided in the agreement, $20,000; (5) for the care and support of the Utes for the balance of the then current fiscal year, $12,000.

In compliance with the provisions of the act all of the plaintiffs were removed to Utah and allotments were there made to them, except the Southern Utes, who remained upon the reservation and received allotments along and within its southern border and partly within New Mexico. The sum total of lands thus allotted was 115,568.03 acres.

With this preliminary statement of the history of the transactions between the United States and the plaintiff Indians, we come to the discussion of the sum due said Indians under the agreement of 1880 in the light of the directions contained in the jurisdiction act under which this suit comes to this court.

I. We will first take up the sums for which the plaintiffs should be credited. As some date must be taken up to which this account must be stated, we have followed both parties in this suit and taken June 30, 1908.

The findings show, and that fact is undisputed, that up to said date the defendants had received $2,204,694.71 as cash proceeds for lands sold located within the Ute Reservation, and it is not and can not be denied that the plaintiffs should be credited with that sum. It is contended, however, by the plaintiffs that they should be credited in addition thereto with interest compounded semiannually upon the amount of the quarterly sales of said lands since 1880, which interest would amount to $2,444,779.95 more. We will leave this question of interest to be discussed hereafter in connection with the credits to be allowed the defendants.

The jurisdictional act provides that this court in this suit is "to hear, determine, and render final judgment, with right of appeal as in other cases, on the claims and rights of said Indians under said agreement [agreement of 1880, supra], including the value of all lands ceded by the said Indians which have been set apart and reserved from the public lands as public reservations or for other public uses under existing laws and proclamations of the President, as if disposed of under the public-land laws of the United States," etc. Thus, in making up this account, we are to credit the plaintiffs with the value of the forest reservations set apart out of the Ute Reservation. The areas so set apart, less such portions of the same as have been disposed of by the defendants and for which credit has been given to the plaintiffs in the first item, embrace 3,199,258 acres. The value to be set upon this land is necessarily somewhat problematical, but that duty has been imposed upon this court and with the best light obtainable must be done.

Section 3 of the act of 1880 provides that all the ceded lands "shall be held and deemed to be public lands of the United States and subject to disposal under the laws providing for the disposal of the public lands, at the same price and on the same terms as other lands of like character, except as provided in this act: Provided, That none of said lands, whether mineral or otherwise, shall be liable to entry and settlement under the provisions of the homestead law, but shall be subject to cash entry only in accordance with existing law."

The act of July 28, 1882 (22 Stats., 178), restored the Ute Reservation to the public domain with the following proviso:

"And further provided, That none of said lands shall be disposed of for any other than cash, nor for a less price than $1.25 per acre."

The act of April 24, 1820 (3 Stats., 566), now section 2357, Revised Statutes, fixes the minimum price at $1.25 per acre for all public lands offered at public or private sale for cash in the following terms:

"The price at which the public lands are offered for sale shall be $1.25 an acre, and at every public sale the highest bidder, who makes payment as provided in the preceding section, shall be the purchaser; but no lands shall be sold, either at public or private sale, for a less price than $1.25 an acre; and all the public lands which are hereafter offered at public sale according to law, and remain unsold at the close of such public sales, shall be subject to be sold at private sale, by entry at the land office at $1.25 an acre, to be paid at the time of making such entry."

A similar question was involved in an appeal from this court to the Supreme Court in the case of United States v. Blackfeather (155 U. S., 180; 28 C. Cls., 447). In commenting upon the obligation of the United States to expose the lands in question at public sale, Mr. Justice Brown, in delivering the opinion of the court, said:

"In the absence of any proof of the actual value of these lands at this time, there would seem to be no method of estimation except by taking the price at which public lands were subject to be sold at private sale, namely, $1.25 per acre. Not only is there some presumption that the Government would not sell them for less than they were worth, but the very fact that at that time all public lands were subject to entry at $1.25 per acre would render it impossible to sell them at a greater price unless by reason of their peculiar location, abundant timber, or extraordinary fertility they were exceptionally valuable. (Id., 191.)"

The average price at which the lands within the Ute Reservation were sold between the date of the agreement (1880) and June 30, 1908, was $1.68 per acre. Presumably the choicest lands were selected by the purchasers. The forest reservations were set apart at different dates between 1891 and 1905. While it is doubtless true that considerable of the land within these forest reservations is quite valuable, on the other hand, the official reports show, and it is a fact so well known as to come within judicial notice, that considerable portions of them are valueless and can never be sold at any price.

In view, therefore, of the law and the facts as stated, we have found the value of the lands thus set apart in forest reservations to be $1.25 per acre, amounting to $3,835,323.75.

II. We next come to consider the sums to be charged against the plaintiffs and set off against the amount credited to them in this suit. Upon that subject the jurisdictional act gives this court the following direction:

"* * * and the court shall set off against any sum found due said Indians the amount paid to them under the fifth section of said act of June 15, 1880, being $50,000 per annum up to the date of rendition of final judgment in this cause; also any other sum or sums that shall be found to be properly chargeable under the terms of said agreement, and also any sum or sums paid by the United States to or for the benefit of said Indians, whether as a gratuity or otherwise, except such sums as have been paid for a specific purpose and an adequate consideration, * * *."

We are first specifically directed to charge to the plaintiffs the annuities which they have received under the agreement of 1880, $50,000 per annum, amounting to $1,350,000, and about this sum there is and can be no dispute; in fact, the agreement itself in explicit terms so provides. "Also any other sum or sums that shall be found to be properly chargeable under the terms of said agreement (1880)." Under this direction it should be borne in mind that by the terms of said agreement the plaintiffs were to receive all of the proceeds of said reservation, with the provision, however, that "when sold the proceeds of said sale shall be first sacredly applied to reimbursing the United States for all sums paid out or set apart by the Government for the benefit of said Indians," etc. It will thus be seen that the transaction was of no benefit to the United States, except the indirect benefit received by opening up to civilization a desirable territory. In view of this fact we think the plaintiffs are "properly chargeable" (1) with the allotments received outside the reservation; (2) the cost of the survey of the reservation, establishing schools, building houses, etc.; (3) additional per capita payments and the amount expended for the support of the Utes for the balance of the fiscal year, as provided and appropriated for in section 9, as well as salaries paid to selected individual Utes, as provided in section 6; (4) and also the expenses incurred by the United States in negotiating the agreements. In general, for the reasons stated, we think the plaintiffs should be charged with all the benefits of every name and nature which they have received under the agreement of 1880.

We do not think, however, they are properly chargeable with the cost of the survey of the lands allotted to them outside of the reservation under the agreement. They have been charged for these lands at the price of $1.25 per acre, and that should include the cost of survey, the same as to other purchasers of lands within the public domain.

We are further directed, in addition to moneys paid under the agreement of 1880, to charge the plaintiffs with "any sum or sums paid by the United States to or for the benefit of said Indians, whether as a gratuity or otherwise, except such sums as have been paid for a specific purpose and an adequate consideration."

It is contended by the defendants that under this instruction we should charge the plaintiffs with all such sums as have been paid to them under the treaties of 1863 and 1868, on the ground that no "adequate consideration" was ever received by the defendants for moneys so expended. For this contention much reliance is placed upon the decision of this court in the case of Hayt v. United States (38 C. Cls., 455), wherein it was decided that the territory ceded by Mexico to the United States by the treaty of Guadelupe Hidalgo was not "Indian country," and it is claimed that all of the lands involved in the treaties of 1863 and 1868 were within that cession.

While it may be true that the Indian title of the plaintiffs to any territory prior to the treaty of 1863 was not such a title as the defendants would recognize, yet the plaintiffs were located within this territory and had the usual claim of occupancy of other Indians. Their claim was considered of such importance that the defendants, during the year following the Guadalupe Hidalgo treaty, entered into a treaty with them and secured from them a concession for the right of free passage through their territory. (9 Stats., 984.) By the treaty of 1863 (13 Stats., 673) the defendants considered these claims to territorial occupancy of sufficient importance to obtain from them a cession of all "claim, title, etc., to lands within the territory of the United States," excepting certain lands which were set apart to them as their hunting grounds. By the treaty of 1868 (15 Stats., 619) the reservation in question was set apart to the plaintiffs, and by the third article of the treaty the plaintiffs relinquished "all claims and rights in and to any portion of the United States or Territories except" such reservation. Even if we may admit that they had no valid title to any lands, yet they claimed some title and honestly claimed it, and the yielding of such a claim to a party who wishes to purchase it is a good consideration.

In the case of Sykes v. Chadwick (18 Wall., 141) the Supreme Court, in discussing the sufficiency of consideration, said:

"If any release is deemed requisite to confirm the title of lands with which one has been connected, though by a proper construction of the law he has no interest in them whatever, still such release will be a good consideration for a promise or for the payment of money."

Congress, from time to time, made appropriations of money to the plaintiffs which in terms were made in pursuance of the treaties of 1863 and 1868 (13 Stats., 560; 17 Id., 457). After such treaty stipulations with the plaintiffs and after such recognition of their validity for more than 40 years, we do not think the defendants can successfully set up the claim that these payments were made without adequate consideration. Certainly no such claim would ever be made against any people other than Indians. We do not think, therefore, that the plaintiffs are properly chargeable with any payments made to them under and pursuant to the treaties of 1863 and 1868.

We are also asked to charge the plaintiffs with $70,064.78, appropriated by act of Congress May 27, 1902 (32 Stats., 263), to be paid to the Uinta and White River Utes. This appears to relate to an entirely different transaction than the one under consideration. At the time of this appropriation the Uinta and White River Utes were located upon a reservation in Utah, and the portions of those bands to which this appropriation relates were located there prior to the agreement of 1880, and were not parties to the said agreement. The act referred to, supra, provided for the restoration to the public domain of all the lands in this reservation not to be allotted to these Uinta and White River Utes, and that the proceeds of such lands should be first applied to the reimbursement of the United States for any moneys advanced to said Indians to carry into effect the provisions of said law; and said sum of $70,064.78 was appropriated to be paid said Indians for relinquishing their title to such unallotted lands, the same to be reimbursed in the manner before stated. This appears to be a matter for future adjustment between said Uinta and White River Utes and the United States, and said sum is disallowed as a set-off in this suit.

III. We now come to the question of interest to be allowed to the plaintiffs upon the sums found due to them in the findings. We will first take up the question of interest upon the value of the lands set apart in forest reservations.

By the terms of the agreement of 1880 no interest was to be paid except upon the proceeds of cash sales within the reservation. It was unquestionably within the political power of Congress to authorize the withdrawal of these forest reserves from the market indefinitely, or for such periods as it should see fit, notwithstanding the agreement, and thus deprive the Utes of the proceeds of sales which otherwise would have been made, and interest upon the same. Having done so, their claim for the proceeds of lands deemed to have been sold by the setting apart of the forest reserves, and interest thereon, must be derived entirely from the language of the jurisdictional act.

The jurisdictional act directs this court to hear, determine, and render final judgment on the claims and rights of the Utes under the agreement of 1880, including the value of all lands—

"Which have been set apart and reserved from the public lands or public reservations or for public uses under existing laws and proclamations of the President, as if disposed of under the public-land laws of the United States, as provided by said agreement."

Section 1091 of the Revised Statutes provides:

"No interest shall be allowed on any claim up to the time of the rendition of judgment thereon by the Court of Claims, unless upon a contract expressly stipulating for the payment of interest."

We are told to render judgment for the value of these lands, "as if disposed of under the public-land laws of the United States, as provided by said agreement." The agreement referred to contained directions as to the manner in which these lands were to be disposed of, i. e., they were to be surveyed, were not to be liable to entry and settlement under the provisions of the homestead law, but were to be sold for cash only. Hence the direction that we are to render judgment for the value of these lands as if disposed of "as provided by said agreement" evidently means that we are to regard them as having been sold for cash at the date of entry of judgment, and this sum is to be placed to the credit of the plaintiffs. If Congress had intended that interest should be allowed upon this sum, it would have so provided, and without such specific provision such intention can not be inferred. When we remember, as already stated, that it was within the power of Congress to have kept these lands out of the market indefinitely, this conclusion will appear all the more clear.

In considering this question it should also be borne in mind that if these lands had never been withdrawn from the market but a small percentage of them would have been sold before the passage of the jurisdictional act. This is shown by the fact that in the 24 years elapsing between 1880 and 1904, after which date the greater number of these reserves were created, less than 9 per cent of the total area of the reservation had been sold for cash. If Congress had intended to have this court consider the whole area of these forest reserves to have been sold as of the date when withdrawn from the market and to place their value ($3,835,323.75) to the credit of the plaintiffs as of such dates, it would have said so in unmistakable terms. In making up this account, therefore, no interest has been allowed upon the value given to the lands within the forest reservations.

As before stated, it is contended by the plaintiffs that they should be allowed compound interest upon the separate sums which appear quarterly to have been received by the defendants for the lands sold within the reservation from the date of receipt, and also upon the value of the lands withdrawn from sale and set apart in the forest reservations, reckoned from the time of such withdrawal, without allowing the defendants any credit for annuities and other sums paid by the defendants under the agreement of 1880. We have already disposed of the question of interest upon the value of the lands set apart in forest reservations, and that question requires no further consideration here.

The jurisdictional act provides:

"That to carry into effect the agreement between the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians of Colorado and the United States, ratified by the act of Congress approved June 15, 1880, being 'An act to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians in Colorado for the sale of their reservation in said State, and for other purposes, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same' (21 Stat., p. 199), jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render final judgment, with right of appeal as in other cases, on the claims and rights of said Indians under said agreement," etc.

Hence we are to find what sum is legally due to the plaintiffs under said agreement, subject only to such modifications as were made further on in the act as to credits to be allowed the defendants. The agreement of 1880 provides that after the United States shall have been reimbursed "for all sums paid out or set apart" under the act, "the remainder, if any, shall be deposited in the Treasury * * * and the interest thereon shall be distributed annually to them in the same manner as the funds provided for in this act."

As to the contention regarding interest, that no credit should be allowed the defendants under the agreement of 1880, as we interpret the jurisdictional act, it forbids this method of computing interest. We are instructed to set off against any sum found due the Indians certain payments made to them by the defendants. When these sums are credited to the defendants, they, obviously, should be credited as of the date when paid. It appears from the account, as stated in Finding IX, that at no time before the passage of the jurisdictional act did the cash receipts of the defendants for lands sold within the reservation exceed the amount paid out for the benefit of the claimants under the act of 1880. Hence, having decided that the claimants are not entitled under the jurisdictional act to any interest upon the value of the lands withdrawn from sale and set apart in forest reservations, no interest whatever appears to be due to the claimants. This being our conclusion, the discussion of the question of compound interest, as contended for by the claimants, is somewhat academical, but will be briefly considered.

No interest, either simple or compound, can be collected from a sovereign except by its consent. (United States v. North Carolina, 136 U. S., 211.) In the case at bar the sovereign has agreed to pay interest, and that means simple interest only. But the plaintiffs seek to charge the defendants with compound interest in this case on the ground that the money so received constituted a trust fund, and that in such cases where the fund has been improperly withheld the trustee is penalized with compound interest. It is elementary as a general proposition, in the absence of a contract to that effect, that interest upon interest is not recoverable for the detention of money, and that is a general rule, either at law or equity. (Perley on Law of Interest, 159, 160; In re Ward's estate, 73 Mich., 220, 228.) It is only where a trustee, guardian, or executor has acted in bad faith, in abuse of his trust, or has been guilty of such gross negligence as to be evidence of a corrupt intention, that compound interest will be charged against him. (Barney v. Saunders, 16 How., 535; Perrin v. Leper, 72 Mich., 446; Vaughan v. Bibb, 46 Ala., 153; Smith v. Kennard, 38 Ala., 695.)

The Government only acts through its officers and agents, and thus in law can never be guilty of fraud, bad faith, or negligence; hence it can never be penalized by being charged compound interest.

As already stated, the account herein between the plaintiffs and defendants, as directed to be made under the jurisdictional act, is stated up to June 30, 1908, as that is the latest date to which full returns have been made by the proper Government officials. The jurisdictional act seems to contemplate that this account should be stated up to the date of the entry of judgment herein; hence before entry of judgment further returns will be necessary. This supplemental account will be made in accordance with this opinion and will be a mere matter of computation.

Judgement, therefore, will be entered herein for the claimants for the sum of $3,408,611.40, with the modification hereafter to be made as above indicated.

[Court of Claims of the United States. No. 30360. Decided Feb. 13, 1911.]

THE WHITE RIVER UTES, THE SOUTHERN UTES, THE UNCOMPAHGRE UTES, THE TABEGUACHE, MUACHE, CAPOTE, WEEMINUCHE, YAMPA, GRAND RIVER, AND UINTA BANDS OF UTE INDIANS, KNOWN ALSO AS THE CONFEDERATED BANDS OF UTE INDIANS OF COLORADO, v. THE UNITED STATES.

In accordance with the opinion of the court herein and the jurisdictional act of March 3, 1909, under which this suit was brought, the court makes the following supplemental finding of fact, and the former conclusion of law and judgment modified accordingly:

SUPPLEMENTAL FINDING OF FACT.

The following additional sums have been received by the United States from the sale of the lands ceded by the plaintiffs to the United States under the act of June 15, 1880:

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909	$70,628.23
For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910	136,826.98
Total	207,455.21

The following sums have been expended of the annuity of $50,000 per annum under section 5 of the act of June 15, 1880:

For the period from July 1, 1908, to June 30, 1910	99,835.56
Leaving a balance due the plaintiffs for said period of	107,619.65

CONCLUSION OF LAW.

Upon the previous findings of fact and including the above supplemental finding, the former judgment is set aside and the court now decides as a conclusion of law that the plaintiffs are entitled to judgment against the United States in the sum of $3,516,231.05, as and for the sum due to them up to and including June 30, 1910, out of which judgment, as provided by the jurisdictional act and the stipulation of the parties, there shall be paid to Josiah M. Vale, Esq., attorney of record in said cause, for himself and all other attorneys and counsel interested in the prosecution of said cause before committees of Congress and this court, 6 per cent thereof, amounting in the aggregate to $210,973.86.

OPINION.

Per CURIAM:

This is a motion of the claimants' attorneys to have the court fix the amount of fees to be allowed to them for services in this case. The jurisdictional act provides that such fees are to be allowed for services before committees of Congress in the matter of this claim as well as for services before the courts.

It appears that the principal services rendered in this matter were before committees in Congress. Such services can hardly be allowed for on the basis of the professional services of a lawyer, and this fact renders it somewhat difficult to determine the amount properly to be fixed. The fact also should be noted that there was no appeal from the decision of this court in this suit, which would necessarily involve considerably more labor and expense; neither were any witnesses examined on either side. In fact, the whole case was tried upon the record as made up by official reports and public documents. The jurisdictional act by which the suit comes to this court provides that upon the rendition of judgment herein the payment to the claimants of the annuity of $50,000 per annum shall cease, and the fund of $1,250,000 set apart for them in the Treasury shall no longer exist as a trust fund for their benefit. This fact materially reduces the actual benefit which the claimants are to receive by virtue of the judgment.

The claim of the Ute Indians depended upon the contract of 1880, and there would have been but little controversy as to the amount due them under that contract had it not been for the setting apart of the forest reserves within the territory, the proceeds of the lands within which they were to receive. It doubtless took considerable patient and persistent work on the part of the claimants' attorneys to impress upon the committees of Congress the justice of a law which would regard such reservations as land actually sold. Notwithstanding this fact, we think the allowance to the claimants' attorneys should be rather upon a basis of fees for a collection of moneys actually due than upon the basis of a doubtful claim or a claim for unliquidated damages.

After due consideration of the matter, we have concluded to allow 6 per cent of the amount of the judgment, or $210,973.86, to the attorneys for the claimants for their services in this matter. Accordingly, the judgment heretofore rendered in this cause is modified, as provided by the supplemental finding and the opinion respecting said fees this day filed.

[Memorandum in re Ute Indians.]

HISTORY OF THE CONFEDERATED BANDS OF UTE INDIANS, OF COLORADO, EMBRACING THE TABEGUACHE, MUACHE, WEEMINUCHE, YAMPA, GRAND RIVER, AND UINTAS, OF COLORADO, SUBSEQUENTLY SEPARATED INTO AND KNOWN AS THE WHITE RIVER UTES, THE UNCOMPAHGRE UTES, AND THE SOUTHERN UTES.

These Indians originally occupied the territory extending from the eastern base of the Rocky Mountains, westward to Salt Lake, Utah, and from approximately the present south line of Colorado to the present north line of said State. They contacted and generally were at war with the Cheyennes, Arapahoes, and Comanches on the east, with the Sioux on the north and northeast; they affiliated with the Snakes on the north; to the west were their own tribe and kindred, the Uinta Utes of Utah. To the south they shaded off into occupancy with the Navajoes and Apaches.

Between 1850 and 1863 efforts were made to induce these various bands to enter into treaty relations with the Government with a view to the cession of their lands; this effort was successful in part by a treaty made with the Tabeguaches, dated October 7, 1863 (13 Stats., 673). By this treaty the Tabeguaches ceded to the Government all of the territory claimed by them, being the heart of the Rocky Mountains north of the thirty-seventh parallel of latitude, and accepted a defined reservation within the boundary of their original occupancy.

But the Tabeguaches claimed only a small part of the Ute country, and negotiations were continued to bring about a treaty of cession by all the bands. This was accomplished by the treaty of March 2, 1868 (15 Stats., 619), with the Tabeguache, Muache, Capote, Weeminuche, Yampa, or Grand River, and the Uinta Bands.

By article 1 of the said treaty of 1868, the treaty of 1863 was confirmed and all the title of said Indians was extinguished except to an area in the western part of Colorado, which by the second article of said treaty was defined as follows:

"Commencing at that point on the southern boundary line of the Territory of Colorado where the meridian of longitude 107° west from Greenwich crosses the same, running thence north with said meridian to a point 15 miles due north of where said meridian intersects the fortieth parallel of north latitude; thence due west to the western boundary line of said Territory; thence south with the western boundary line of said Territory; thence east with said boundary line to the place of beginning."

This is the reservation which was subsequently ceded by the Indians to the United States under the treaty of 1880 (21 Stats., 199), under which agreement the Indians were designated as White River Utes, Uncompahgre Utes, and Southern Utes.

This reservation had, however, been diminished by a cession of lands under a treaty of April 29, 1874 (18 Stats., 36–41).

TERMS OF THE UTE TREATY OF 1880.

By the terms of the treaty of 1880 the ceded lands were to be sold as public lands of the United States and the proceeds thereof deposited in the Treasury and the interest thereon paid to the Indians, as set out in the proposed committee report hereto attached, which contains a brief statement of the whole case.

FACTS AND ARGUMENTS IN SUPPORT OF THE PROPOSED COMMITTEE REPORT.

In answer to the question as to why the Indians in this proposed compromise settlement should agree to receive $5 an acre for coal lands which have been appraised by the Government to be worth an average of $70 an acre, it is submitted:

First. As disclosed by the records of the General Land Office, the lands are unsalable at the classified prices; that the classified price is from $10 to $400 per acre, averaging about $70 per acre.

Second. That patented coal lands of equal value in that section of the State can be bought at one-half the price fixed by the Government for these classified lands.

Third. That in the opinion of those best informed it will require 50 years or more to dispose of these lands at anything like their classified price.

Fourth. Such acceptance by the Indians will make them self-supporting and independent for all time, and they will cease to call upon the Government for large appropriations, as they are now doing, to relieve their needs.

In response to the suggestion that the Indians should receive at least $10 an acre for the coal lands, that being the minimum statutory price, it is submitted that in so much as the statutory value of coal lands was $10 an acre at the time the agreement of June 15, 1880, was made, and in so much as the area of the nonmerchantable coal at that time was much less than that now known to exist, and inasmuch as the Government has recently developed this coal area at its own expense, it is thought that a compromise settlement at $5 an acre at the present is fair to the Indians and will be beneficial to the United States and enable it to carry out its settled policy respecting the public lands.

The number of these Indians is about 2,000; they are decreasing, under present conditions, from want, instead of increasing. That the present generation should suffer for the absolute needs of existence, to say nothing for their needs of civilization, while the Government holds under its control an immense estate which promises fabulous wealth to future generations, is both improvident and unjust. But experience has shown that there grows up great hesitancy on the part of those administering on Indian affairs to fulfill in the future such promises when the amount involved is so vast and the number of beneficiaries so small.

The per capita distribution under such conditions might, when the time of final settlement shall come, be so great as to shock even the judicial mind. Therefore, it is submitted that a fair and just settlement made now on the line of the proposed modified agreement will be not only the best thing possible for the advancement of the present generation, but will guarantee an equally just settlement for the generations of the future.

AS TO THE POINT OF ORDER.

The provisions of this proposed settlement as an amendment to the Indian appropriation bill are not subject to a point of order. It does not provide for increasing an appropriation, but, on the other hand, it will result in reducing an appropriation which the Government is already under contract to pay from time to time to these Indians. A point of order has never been made against an amendment to an appropriation bill which reduces an item of appropriation. The fact that the rule makes a proposition to increase appropriations subject to a point of order especially leaves the proposition of decreasing an appropriation outside the rule.

Such an amendment does not change an existing law within the spirit and meaning of the rule; the purpose of the rule making new legislation, or amendments changing existing law, on an appropriation bill, subject to a point of order, is to prevent hasty, crude, and new legislation from being enacted. This amendment is not new or hasty or ill-considered legislation, but it is a compromise proposition, that is within, and not outside of, the terms of existing law. The purpose of the amendment is, by mutual agreement between the Government and the Indians, to facilitate through a compromise the carrying out of the intents and purposes of the agreement of 1880. It is, in fact, a proposition not only to facilitate the carrying out of the existing agreement, but especially to enable the Government to carry out effectively its present governmental policy of Indian civilization. Conditions have arisen which could not be foreseen when the agreement of 1880 was made, and so to-day the strict letter and terms of that agreement stands in the way of the present Indian policy of the Government. The proposed modifications of this agreement are made to enable the Government to deal with and adjust the relations of these Indians to present conditions. In short, what this amendment proposes to do is exactly the purpose behind every Indian appropriation bill, and therefore its fitting and proper place is upon this bill.

It has been the custom of the Senate to not only authorize the making of agreements, but also to ratify agreements which modify and make operative existing agreements on the Indian appropriation bill.

We know of no case where such a proposition has ever been ruled off of the Indian appropriation bill on a point of order. This proposition is not one that is new or one that enlarges an existing agreement, but one that modifies an existing agreement, and does it for the mutual benefit of the Government and the Indians and with the consent of both.

If this amendment should be held to be subject to a point of order, and go off the bill, then the only other method of affording relief to these suffering Indians is by offering another amendment providing for the appropriation of part of their principal. Existing law prohibits the appropriation of their principal for their support and civilization, therefore such an amendment will be clearly subject to a point of order and these Indians will be left destitute and the Government powerless to come to their relief, and also to carry out its Indian policy of civilization.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out, on page 50, line 3, the word "said."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 50, by striking out, in line 3, the word "said."

Mr. MANN. It refers to the "said Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have no objection to the amendment. It improves the language. I ask for a vote.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard in opposition to this. I see that this appropriates $300,000 for the Confederated Band of Ute Indians. I would like to know how many Indians there are?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Two thousand and twenty-one.

Mr. BLACK. Now, that would be about $1,500 per capita by this appropriation?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. No; this would not be that much. It would not be used per capita.

Mr. BLACK. I know that; but in figuring it out——

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I have not run through the figures. There are 2,021 Indians and $300,000.

Mr. BLACK. Now, does not the gentleman think that is rather an excessive amount?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. It would be about $150 per capita, I am advised by a gentleman who has made the calculation.

Mr. KONOP. Two thousand into 300,000 would make only about $150 per capita.

Mr. BLACK. In what way is that money expended?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Part of it is placed to their credit in the banks as per capita payment, to be used in buying implements, stocks, improving their land, and, in one case, in the case of the Ute Mountain Indians, to provide a water supply for their stock. It is all out of their own funds.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, in the same line, the word "hereafter."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 50, line 3, strike out the word "hereafter."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is conceded, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing the construction of lateral distributing systems to irrigate the allotted lands of the Uncompahgre, Uintah, and White River Utes, in Utah, and to maintain existing irrigation systems, authorized under the act of June 21, 1906, reimbursable as therein provided, $10,000, to remain available until expended.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Utah [Mr. HOWELL].

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 50, line 19, after the word "provided," strike out "$10,000" and insert "$40,000."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I find a statement at the head of page 387, of our hearings, in which Mr. MERITT states:

Mr. Chairman, that amount should be $40,000, in accordance with our estimates—instead of $10,000. It was an error in the printing.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON.

SEC. 23. For support and civilization of the D'Wamish and other allied tribes in Washington, including pay of employees, $7,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, we are nearing the end of the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill, and I presume the House is tired of the subject. A good deal of time has been spent in wrangling over the affairs of the Oklahoma Indians, and I presume that in previous Congresses it has been the same. When we get toward the last stage of the bill, matters go by without much discussion.

In the last Congress I moved to strike out a paragraph containing an appropriation of $10,000 for the special board of Indian commissioners. I was moved to do that because no member of that commission since the time of President Grant had ever been out to the States of Oregon and Washington, so far as I could learn. My motion was voted down, but the discussion of it reached the commissioners, because one of them at once wrote to me that my criticism was correct. That commissioner, Dr. Samuel A. Eliot, visited the State of Washington and went to the Quinaielt Indian Reservation, which is probably the hardest to reach of any reservation in the country, and he published this little pamphlet, entitled "Conditions Among the Indians of the Northwest Coast." This pamphlet—28 pages—is a portion of the $10,000 expended for the work of that commission, and the pamphlet is worth the money spent. In a word, it says conditions out there among the Indians are bad. But as soon as the Indian appropriation bill, now under consideration, is passed, Dr. Eliot's pamphlet will become a useless Government publication, and will be ready for action on the part of the Committee for the Disposition of Useless Government Papers. Why? Because, although Dr. Eliot made, after that long, hard, and expensive trip, a few modest recommendations, no one of them has been acted upon. The doctor, however, deserves credit for good intentions and so do others of the board.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that not one of those men lives within 2,000 miles of your place?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. At least 2,000 miles, and some of them live more than 3,000 miles from there. One of these men, as I have said, Dr. Samuel A. Eliot, went out there and looked a little after the affairs of these numerous small bands of Indians, which, as I have said, are rich in timber but starvation poor in money. He makes a number of recommendations to the Committee on Indian Affairs and to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

One recommendation that he makes is for a 10-mile road in an Indian reservation which is as large as an eastern State and has now only about 5 miles of road, except that along the ocean beach at low tide. Another recommendation is for the expenditure of $2,500 for a bridge to replace one which was built on the Indian reservation by the county commissioners and which was washed out. He describes the broken-down buildings in which the superintendent, doctors, and teachers live on that reservation and recommends new buildings. Nothing has come of any of these recommendations.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman from whom he is quoting?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. From the pamphlet of Dr. Samuel A. Eliot, of the special board of Indian commissioners.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman means the Board of Indian Commissioners. There is no special board of Indian commissioners.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; I am glad to be corrected. Dr. Eliot calls attention to the fact that where these leaky buildings are located the rainfall is between 12 and 14 feet a year; not inches, but feet. There is some need for shingling the roofs of those buildings. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I should think they would learn to be like fish. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. In one place Dr. Eliot discusses the aged Indians whom I mentioned a few moments ago in a short discussion with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. Dr. Eliot says:

As on many reservations, the condition of the old and infirm Indians at Quinaielt is deplorable. Many of these people own allotments and valuable stands of timber, but they are not able to obtain any ready money on the security of these possessions. I recommend that the office be asked to consider ways and means by which loans can be made to these destitute Indians, reimbursable upon the timber of their allotments. It is a cruel misfortune that people owning this valuable property must suffer destitution and look forward to a pauper burial when they know that the property held in their names has real and considerable value.

Dr. Eliot further says:

With proper care and intelligent supervision there is no reason why the Indians on the Quinaielt Reservation, if they are temperate and fairly industrious, should not live in reasonable comfort and prove worthy and useful members of society.

The present task of the Government at Quinaielt is to provide proper transportation facilities, suitable agency buildings, to maintain a good school, to furnish medical aid and to enforce sanitary regulations, to protect the Indians from liquor and from trespasses on their fishing grounds, to care for the aged and infirm, and to provide for the prompt settlement of the estates of the dead—

And so on. I regret that I have not time to read the statement in full. What I particularly wanted to call attention to, however, was the matter of allotment on this great Quinaielt Reservation, a reservation which is so dense in timber growth and in the growth of the underbrush that a surveying crew can only make a progress of 1 mile or so in a day. There are about 1,000 Indians on the Quinaielt Reservation. That reservation was designed to care for all the fish-eating Indians that had not received separate reservations in western Washington. To-day, wherever you find an Indian in any part of western Washington now roaming around, helpless and homeless, he is told to go on the Quinaielt Reservation and ask for an allotment. Dr. Eliot writes concerning this unfortunate situation, as follows:

It is true that there are still some 34,000 acres of unallotted land on the Quinaielt Reservation, and the landless Indians on the sound have not infrequently been advised to apply for allotment there. This advice has been given without an understanding of the nature of the Quinaielt Reservation. It is covered by a dense and almost impenetrable forest growth. An Indian seeking to make a home there would find himself confronted with an impossible task. Even if he could find his allotment, it would be only to discover that no means of getting a living existed there. The timber will ultimately be valuable, but for the present it is not marketable and there is not a square yard of ground for a house or garden. Clearing the forest can only be done at a cost vastly beyond the resources of the richest Indian. No sensible Indian can regard the advice to remove to Quinaielt as anything but a grim joke. He can pick up a meager living along the beaches of the sound. At Quinaielt he could do nothing but starve to death.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the question of allotments on the Quinaielt Reservation is one of great importance. Dr. Eliot intimates that there are about 600 tracts of land surveyed and ready for allotment, but that the allotting has been stopped on the ground that the Indians were to be allotted lands that were valuable for agriculture, whereas this land is not suitable for agriculture, but is entirely timberland, and is valuable for the timber.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for an additional five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to say to the gentleman from Washington that if he will examine the bill, on page 2, he will find that the very first item there provides for surveying, classifying, and allotting Indian lands, $100,000—to be repaid proportionally out of any Indian moneys held in trust or otherwise by the United States and available by law for such reimbursable purposes and to remain available until expended.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; I know about that. Here in this bill, for allotment of Indian lands in the United States, is appropriated $100,000, to be reimbursable. And I am talking of a reservation the size of which——

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does not the gentleman think a great many surveying parties could be put in the field for $100,000 annually?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; some headway could be made.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They have to survey one reservation only once. Would they not in a short time survey all the Indian lands in the United States? We have been carrying this item for 20 years that I know of.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Well, they have not gone very far in the Quinaielt Reservation. But, be that as it may, previous surveying parties have made 600 tracts of land in this one reservation ready to allot, the allotting agent has done his work, and yet nothing comes from it. Why not fix up what is ready? Further, let me say, the sale of a few tracts of timberland on this Quinaielt Reservation would bring in enough money to provide a fund for the pensioning of these Indians for all time to come.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Has the gentleman from Washington introduced any bill for that purpose?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I have introduced bills, written letters, and have been before the commissioner and tried in every possible way to get some relief for them.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If the gentleman will introduce a bill of that character and send it to the Committee on Indian Affairs he will hear from it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I have had promises of that kind on so many bills for relief for the Indians that if I should put them all into one bill it would be quite a staggering omnibus Indian bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to call the gentleman's attention to another item on page 11:

For the purpose of encouraging industry and self-support among the Indians and to aid them in the culture of fruits, grains, and other crops, $300,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available, which sum may be used for the purchase of seed, animals, machinery, tools, implements, and other equipment necessary, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, to enable Indians to become self-supporting.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Oh, lots of money is spent for the good of the Indians. I will tell the gentleman where some of that money goes. I have a letter right here from a teacher of a public school out there, stating that he has five starving Indian children who are begging their food from the white children; that these children live in a shack, with a fire in the middle of the room, and asking me to get the department to telegraph aid to them. And I have put in a portion of my time in getting money telegraphed out to starving Indians there, or Indians with sick and dying wives, who own timberlands which, if they could realize on them, would make them independently rich.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Can not the gentleman go into the slums of this city or any city in the United States and find parallel cases?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Not of persons who own valuable property, as these Indians do. I am making these remarks, Mr. Chairman, not to criticize the Committee on Indian Affairs, which has a hard, endless, and thankless task always before it. I appreciate the courtesy and kindness of the chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS]. Neither do I criticize the Office of Indian Affairs. But I hope that these remarks will be read by the many who have the affairs of the Indians at heart and that others will do as Dr. Eliot has done—go to the far Northwest and see the distress of these unfortunates in the midst of plenty. Their affairs can be straightened out, and they must be straightened out.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. MANN. As I understand, many of these Indians are practically in a starving condition.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. A good many.

Mr. MANN. How many years has that state of affairs existed there?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The old Indians who signed these treaties have been dependent ever since I have been in the West, which is upward of 20 years. It is marvelous what age some of these Indians reach. I know Indians out there who are thought to be 120 years old; and only last summer I met the case of Old Deaf George, about 110 years old, and his wife, Aunt Patty, about 100 years old, both of them owners of timber lands, but so poor that they had to move across country 50 or 60 miles on the Quinaielt to live with their nephew, who is 99 years old, and he is a chief, owning timber worth $300,000 or $400,000, but who has not a nickel to his name.

Mr. MANN. I wondered whether, if we could get them to live to be 120 years old by starving them, it would not be advisable to adopt a similar system applicable to ourselves.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. There is a good deal in what the gentleman says.

Mr. MANN. If you can get a man to live so much longer by starving him than by feeding him, what complaint has he got?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It would reduce the cost of living. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; but he has the fear of going to a pauper's grave.

Mr. MANN. Maybe that is the reason why he stays alive so long. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Well, these old Indians keep alive and are waiting for the Government to settle with them, by allotment or otherwise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and education of 350 Indian pupils at the Cushman Indian School, Tacoma, Wash., including repairs and improvements, and for pay of superintendent, $50,000, said appropriation being made to supplement the Puyallup school funds used for said school.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I did not quite finish my statement in regard to these Indians. In the State of Washington there are Indian lands amounting to 2,953,000 acres, or practically 3,000,000 acres, of which there have been allotted only 580,000 acres, or about one-quarter. The value of these lands is shown on page 156 of the Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for 1914, particularly the value of the timberlands, running up on the Quinaielt Reservation alone into millions of dollars. These are the Indians whose children receive little or no care. The Cushman school is supposed to be equipped for 350 pupils, but every time a case is found where there are four or five starving children, the grandchildren of the old chiefs, when an attempt is made to put them into the school the statement is made that the school is overcrowded.

The Siwash Indians, living on the Straits of Fuca and along the shores of Puget Sound, when the white people went there and made treaties with them, presumed that they were to receive reservations running all along the west side of Puget Sound, but they find themselves now in some cases on tracts too small to be of any value, and when we offer to put them on the large reservation we know they could not find their allotment if it was marked out for them or earn a living if they did find it.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, by unanimous consent, was given leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HAYDEN, by unanimous consent, was given leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

The Clerk read as follows:

For construction of a dam across the Yakima River for the diversion and utilization of water provided for 40 acres of each Indian allotment on the Yakima Reservation, Wash., and such other water supply as may be available or obtainable for the irrigation of a total of 120,000 acres of alloted Indian land on said reservation, and for beginning the enlargement and extension of the distribution and drainage system on said reservation, $200,000 to be immediately available and to remain available until expended: Provided, That the cost of the entire diversion works and distribution and drainage system shall be reimbursed to the United States by the owners of the lands irrigable thereunder in not to exceed 20 annual payments, and the Secretary of the Interior may fix operation and maintenance charges which shall be paid as he may direct.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order to the paragraph. What does this reimbursable provision mean?

Mr. DILL. The appropriation is made in conformity with the act of Congress directing the irrigation of 40 acres each of 1,800 Indian allotments. The Indian Department sent one of the reclamation engineers there to make a report, and he recommends this amount of money—$200,000—to be spent, to be reimbursable from the funds of the Indians that will be received from these lands.

Mr. MANN. Why should we say the funds of the Indians shall reimburse the expenditure in 20 annual payments?

Mr. DILL. For the reason that this is a reclamation project, and the money will be made by the Indians out of the lands reclaimed.

Mr. MANN. There is a very great difference between reimbursing an expenditure out of the funds belonging to the Indians and making a charge against the settlers upon the land. The two propositions are entirely separate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It was originally intended that this reimbursement should be made from the tribal funds, but the engineer in making the report saw that these lands were very valuable, and thought that the Indians owning the lands ought to pay it instead of those having no interest in the land at all, namely, those interested in the tribal fund not interested in the land having to pay for something they could get no benefit from. It looks to me as if the engineer is right in that respect. This is reimbursable out of the funds of the Indians having the land to reclaim.

Mr. MANN. That looks like a fair proposition; but why should we advance the money for 20 years without interest on what the gentleman says is very valuable land?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. There is no question about the value of the land. I do not know why it should be advanced without interest unless they wanted to give time for the land to be put into good condition.

Mr. MANN. I know why they put in the 20 years; it was because we did that in the act we passed in the last Congress.

Mr. DILL. I think, if the gentleman will pardon me, that the next paragraph explains in part the gentleman's question, and I would ask to have that read in connection with this.

Mr. MANN. I am willing that the two should be considered as one paragraph, but that can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. DILL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the next paragraph may be read and the two considered together as one paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent that the next paragraph be read, beginning on line 19, and that the two paragraphs be considered as one, with the point of order pending against them. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the apportionment of charges against Indians, due allowance shall be made for such amounts as may have been repaid the United States on account of reimbursable appropriations heretofore made for this project, and for the construction of the irrigation system prior to the passage of the act of December 21, 1904 (33 Stats. L., 595), as therein provided. All charges against Indian allottees herein authorized unless otherwise paid may be paid from individual shares in the tribal fund when the same is available for distribution, and if any allottee shall receive patent in fee to his allotment before the amount so charged against him has been paid to the United States, then such amount remaining unpaid shall be and become a lien upon his allotment, and the fact of such lien shall be recited in such patent and may be enforced by the Secretary of the Interior by foreclosure as a mortgage, and should any Indian sell any part of his allotment with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, the amount of any unpaid charges against the land sold shall be and become a first lien thereon and may be enforced by Secretary of the Interior by foreclosure as a mortgage, and delivery of water to such land may be refused within the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior until all dues are paid: Provided further, That no right to water or to the use of any irrigation ditch or other structure on said reservation shall vest or be allowed until the owner of the land to be irrigated as herein provided shall comply with such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, and he is hereby authorized to prescribe such rules and regulations as he may determine proper for making effective the foregoing provisions, and to require of owners of lands in fee such security for the reimbursement herein required as he may determine necessary, and to refuse delivery of water to any tract of land until the owners thereof shall have complied therewith.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph, and I would like to ask how much this is to cost.

Mr. DILL. I think the estimate of the engineer is something like $600,000.

Mr. MANN. My recollection is that we had this matter up before the House one time and it was said that it would cost a million or several million dollars. I know that we ordered a commission appointed some years ago.

Mr. DILL. A congressional commission was appointed and recommended the building of the dam and the reservoir.

Mr. MANN. Now, this is for beginning this project, with no limit of cost. It is almost always customary to provide a limit of cost for anything of this kind. This appropriation of $200,000 is for the beginning of the enlargement and extension of the system, and under that language it might cost $40,000,000.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The engineer in charge, making the estimate for this project, segregates the items, and it is in the report—House Document 1472, Sixty-third Congress, third session—under the heading "Irrigating the Yakima Indian Reservation," containing a letter from the Secretary of the Interior and the report and estimates of the superintendent of irrigation, Mr. L. M. Holt. He gives a table that shows that the complete cost would be $2,919,062.

Mr. MANN. That is quite a different sum from the $600,000 stated by the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. DILL. I was mistaken.

Mr. MANN. The difficulty about the proposition is this: In many cases, and practically in all cases of river and harbor improvement, we make a reference to some report of the engineers and that is taken as a limit of cost. But in this bill the department in preparing this item very carefully omitted any reference to the report which the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] refers to. There is no semblance of a limit of cost imposed in this item under consideration.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I would like to say to the gentleman from Illinois that this land is very valuable, and will undoubtedly pay back the amount of money expended for this project. It is land that with water will be as valuable as any land for agricultural purposes in the entire State, as far as the richness of its soil is concerned. All that is needed is the water that is due these Indians under treaty and under law already passed, but for which purpose insufficient money has been appropriated to make these lands immensely productive. And the estimates are here itemized, showing what the expenditures are to be made for all the way through, and it also shows the amount of money that has been expended for ascertaining all of these facts. Of course, not being on the Indian Committee, I am not able to say why there has not been any reference to the matter of ultimate cost; but, I presume, not because there was any desire that the House should not be informed, but simply because it was not called to the attention of the chairman.

Mr. MANN. I assume that the committee in this matter puts into the bill the language in the estimate of the Department of the Interior, but it is never safe to assume that the man who drew the language in the department did not have in mind avoiding any limit of cost when he deliberately leaves out the language which is customary in such cases. It might be thought, "What difference does it make to the Government; the money is reimbursable and all we need do is to advance it," but the advance of several million dollars without interest for 20 years is not wholly a business proposition. It is not proposed that this money shall be paid back until the end of 20 years, and there will be, say, a period of 10 years without interest, which amounts to quite a tidy sum of money presented to the Indians to improve land of great value now and from the start.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say to the gentleman that 40 acres of each one of these tracts is what was provided in a law sometime ago should be irrigated, but no provision has ever been made to put those 40 acres in each tract under irrigation, so that it could be cultivated. There has been some little work, but nothing like what was promised, and this is only carrying out the provisions already made, trying to show good faith.

Mr. MANN. I can not see how this item has anything to do with the irrigation of 40 acres free. It is supposed in the end to be theoretically reimbursable. If we are under obligation to irrigate 40 acres free, that is one thing, and we ought to keep our promise.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but I do not think the 40 acres were to be irrigated free.

Mr. MANN. Then I misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I meant that the 40 acres should be irrigated, and as the Government has all of their funds in its hands, it is up to us whether we will do it or not. We promised to do it, and that it should be paid for ultimately out of the tribal funds.

The engineer having charge of the matter says that these lands are very valuable; that the tribal funds belong to all of the Indians; and the lands to be irrigated not belonging to all of the Indians, he thought it would be more equitable if it was charged against the lands to be paid from proceeds of the lands instead of from the tribal funds, and the Indians themselves are willing to have that done. I have never heard any complaint against that plan.

Mr. MANN. I should not think anybody would complain. If one could get the Government to appropriate the money to irrigate his land which is valuable without charging interest, I do not see how anyone could complain of that, so far as the individual is concerned. I would be very glad indeed if I could buy a piece of land some place and have the Government prepare it from its raw state to a place where it is fertile and subject to cultivation, without interest.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the gentleman really means to imply that the Government would have anything to do with bringing this land under cultivation any more than furnishing the water.

Mr. MANN. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard for a moment on the point of order. I hope that the committee will allow this item to remain in the bill. Some two years ago there was an item in the Indian appropriation bill which came over from the Senate, put on there by Senator JONES, of Washington, and when that was opposed here there was a promise made to send out a commission from the two Houses to examine into this project, and my recollection is that on the part of the House the gentleman from Arkansas, Mr. Robinson, and the gentleman from South Dakota, Mr. Burke, were sent as our representatives. They went out and looked over this project and came back and reported to the House and recommended this very policy. I do not know as to this nonpayment of interest. I am sure the Indians themselves never had any desire to put anything over on Uncle Sam to keep from paying any interest. Unfortunately the Indians have not yet arrived at that point of civilization. I do think, in order to show good faith toward these Indians who were promised by Congress some time ago that the Government would see to the irrigating of 40 acres out of each allotment of their land, that we should allow this to go through under the recommendations of our own committee, in conjunction with the Senate committee, for the supplying of this reservation with water to irrigate these 120,000 acres of land, and I hope the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], if he does not like the provision respecting interest, will ask for some amendment whereby interest shall be paid, rather than to object to this on a point of order and to throw it out and thus prevent those Indians from getting the relief that they are entitled to in equity and justice.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I trust the point of order will not be made upon this item. It seems to me the House has not gotten a very clear view of just what it is that we are proposing to do here, unless I misunderstand the situation. I was on the Yakima Indian Reservation and over these irrigated lands last summer. I remember we crossed the river below Toppenish and then through Toppenish and then some 20 miles over irrigated lands, crossing the Yakima near the point of diversion of the main canals irrigating the lands between that point and Toppenish.

At that time we went down to the river to examine the old headgate and found that it was in a very unsatisfactory condition, and we were told that efforts would be made to secure an appropriation for a new dam and headgate at that point. Now, this item of $200,000 is for a dam and for a headgate, I assume, across the Yakima River at that point. Is that true?

Mr. DILL. This is the beginning——

Mr. MONDELL. Well, it is scarcely the beginning, it is toward the end, if it is for the irrigation of the Yakima Indian Reservation above Toppenish, where the lands have been under irrigation for years.

Mr. DILL. If the gentleman will permit, at the beginning of the construction of this project——

Mr. MONDELL. At the beginning of the construction of a dam; this is not a new project.

Mr. DILL. It is an addition, I understand, to the existing project.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not so understand it at all, unless you are proposing to put a dam in the Yakima River, that I have never heard of. Our attention was called last year to the fact that the old headgate, the temporary dam, the headworks, were in a bad condition, and that a diversion dam was needed at that point, and I have assumed in respect to this item that this appropriation was for the purpose of putting in a diversion dam and a headgate for the irrigation of those lands that are already under irrigation on this reservation. Of course there are additional lands that will be brought in.

Mr. DILL. There are 120,000 acres that eventually will be brought into this project.

Mr. MONDELL. What I want to know is this: There was, according to the report of the Secretary, some 30,000 acres of land under irrigation. I should say there was certainly that much land under irrigation, for we drove for miles through grain and alfalfa fields, and good ones, and we finally reached the headgate, the diversion point of these canals, and our attention was called to the necessity for a permanent dam and headgate there instead of the temporary brush and rock dam that had been used. I would like to find some gentleman who will tell me where this dam is to be located, and if it is the work I have referred to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the gentleman wants to know——

Mr. MONDELL. Let me conclude this, as I want the gentleman to understand this, and then the gentleman can reply. We rode along these canals that are now used for the irrigation of Indian lands—thirty thousand and odd acres—and that will eventually be carried farther down the valley, and our attention was called to the bad condition of that head gate, and we were told every effort would be made to secure an appropriation for a permanent dam with a permanent head gate. This is that dam, is it?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes; as the gentleman knows that the dam now simply consists of throwing a lot of rocks in the creek.

Mr. MONDELL. They have had a combination rock and brush dam there, but gradually it has been washed out and washed away. Further than that, we were told, I believe, that unless the main canal is lowered, which would be difficult, it is necessary by means of a diversion dam to raise the water of the river a few feet in order to get it high enough so it will go into the main canal at all seasons of the year.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. It is about equivalent to that. That old dam is a temporary affair, made by just throwing some rocks into the river, and the proposition with this amount is to build a permanent dam.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I will answer the gentleman——

Mr. MONDELL. I thought the gentleman had concluded. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The purpose for which this money is to be used is to build a dam somewhere in the neighborhood of the old temporary dam.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. In order to raise the water, as the gentleman said, so as to have the water pass into the canal at all seasons of the year.

Mr. MONDELL. And thus better the entire system.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. That is true.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Chairman, in conformity with the law that was passed allowing the irrigation of 40 acres to each allotment on these reservations, there was spent for this dam of which the gentleman is now speaking the sum of $4,354.38 between the years 1910 and 1912. It was only a temporary dam and has been washed out from time to time and repaired, and this is to put in a permanent dam at a little better location, so that they will not be continually having to repair and can take care of more land from that dam.

Mr. MONDELL. Now, I am glad we understand the situation. This is not a new project at all.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Not this part of it.

Mr. MONDELL. This is not a new project; it is an old one. We have had it in course of construction and have been appropriating for it for years, and I doubt if the point of order is good, even if it were made. The proposition is simply to put a permanent dam where we have had a temporary dam for years. Over 30,000 acres of the land of that reservation are already irrigated, and last year they were growing wonderful crops. It is true that white men largely were growing the crops.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. On leases, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. Under leases, and also on lands owned by them, the gentleman tells me; but, at any rate, the white men were growing the greater part of the crops. However, some Indians were growing crops, and very good ones. It is a good project and ought to be extended, but it has been a rather expensive project.

I presume we will find somewhere this year—perhaps on the sundry civil bill—an item of $100,000, the second or third appropriation toward $500,000, which was the sum that the committee that the gentleman from Washington has referred to decided the Government should contribute to these Indians by reason of the fact that in taking out a reclamation project in the Yakima River Reservation and dividing the water of the river, we did not leave enough for the uses of the Indians. The committee's proposition was—and that proposition has been adopted and the first appropriations have been made—that we should appropriate $500,000 as a gratuity for the purpose of aiding in the construction of storage dams in connection with the national reclamation project known as the Yakima project. We are contributing $500,000 to these Indians in that way to enlarge, extend, and amplify their water supply.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The gentleman has been in the House a long time, and no doubt is familiar with the fact that the treaty with these Yakima Indians guaranteed that.

Mr. MONDELL. I am not quarreling with the fact; I am simply stating it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is all right. I will explain that we are simply giving what we promised them under treaty and deprived them of.

Mr. MONDELL. Nevertheless it was extraordinary that when we started a reclamation project we did charge the people under the project for enough storage for their project rather than to take from the Indians the water we now say belongs to them. The result was to load on the Government $500,000 that otherwise would have been paid by the people under the Yakima project.

This feature of the matter has no bearing on this particular item, except to illustrate the fact that we have been spending a great deal of money and are going to spend a great deal of money for the irrigation of these lands for the benefit of these Indians.

Now, I am not so sure that it is going to be possible to get this money back under this reimbursable provision; but, at any rate, the reimbursable provision should be in the legislation. The land is good; the project is good. It will be extended, and it ought to be extended.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. This estimate, made by the engineers, said that the estimated distribution cost is nearly $25 an acre. The gentleman has seen that land. Does he not think that the land would bear a cost of $25 per acre?

Mr. MONDELL. I think so. It is very good land and it is a very good country, and the water supply, now that we have agreed to pay $500,000 for storage, should be sufficient.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] insist on the point of order?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this matter had been pending a long time, and while I think Congress has gone crazy on this subject in advancing money to the people without interest, and adopted a policy which will soon land us in national bankruptcy if we keep it up, I am not going to insist on the point of order, even though this money is raised by putting stamps on things now in a way that practically is destroying the business of a great many people in the country. We are continually appropriating money to help out somebody where it is not a commercial proposition. Money ought not to be advanced to aid a private industry unless it is a paying concern, because there can be concerns enough running in the country to keep people occupied if we have a proper protective tariff, at least.

I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States, in his discretion, the sum of $300,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the tribal funds of the Menominee Indians in Wisconsin, arising under the provisions of the acts of June 12, 1890 (26 Stat. L., p. 146), and March 28, 1908 (35 Stat. L., p. 51), and to expend the same for the purpose of promoting civilization and self-support among said Indians, in such manner and under such regulations as he may prescribe.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 57, line 17, after the word "same," strike out the words "for the purpose of promoting civilization and self-support among said Indians in such manner and" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "in the clearing of land, the erection of sanitary homes, and the purchase of building material, seed, teams, farming equipment, dairy stock, machinery, tools, implements, and other equipment and supplies necessary to enable said Indians to become self-supporting."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I agree to the amendment. I believe it is better legislation than that we have in the bill, because it specifies what the money is to be used for.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.
